Mr. LONG. I just want to attract the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that it might be necessary to couple the taxing power and the interstate-commerce power. I think I am familiar with what the Senator from Kentucky is talking about; I have been reading his plan; and by coupling the taxing power and the interstate-commerce power, under the two, there ought not to be any trouble, and the plan certainly ought to be constitutional.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it may be that there would be trouble; but some solution must be found, and these suggestions may be worthy of consideration.

If the Constitution was adopted to promote the general welfare, it appears to me that a nation should not be helpless against the spoliation of its people by those who have control of great wealth. Assuredly they are entitled to equal and exact justice, and that means a fair rate on their invested capital. If they receive more than that, which means that they receive more than is necessary to a return of profit on invested capital and to promote and develop the industry, they have taken from the general public that to which they are not entitled. We have read many times that some particular group had declared a 100 per cent stock dividend or an enormous dividend in money. When such dividends have been declared, it means that the people parted with that which belonged to the individuals of the public, and there was gathered into the coffers of the few money to which they were never entitled. This may seem a strange and new doctrine, but, if it be sound, it should not be discarded because it is new or strange.

It may be said that those who by their skill enable a particular industry to earn large profits are entitled to enormous profits because of the skill and judgment which have been exercised in the management of the business. Those who have managed the business have received compensation for their wisdom in the conduct of the business before there is any consideration of the question of profits.

There has been much said about decentralization of wealth. If the plans which I am trying to suggest had been in effect throughout the years, there never would have been a centralization of wealth, and it follows that there would never have been a necessity for a decentralization.

I am entirely convinced that any nation that allows the powerful to plunder the weak, or the rich to despoil the poor, is not discharging its proper functions as a nation. The rich are entitled to the full protection of the laws and the powerful likewise are entitled to their equal protection, but they are not entitled to more than equal protection before the law. It is a biological truth that in every strata of animal life it is the strong that destroy the weak until the weak have devised some plans to repel the destructive forces exerted by the strong. The rich and the powerful need no protector. They are able to protect themselves. It is the poor and downtrodden and those who have no helper that must be sheltered by the beneficent wings of a great Government.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has stated that the powerful need no help. The fact, however, is that when the wealthy have been turned loose in this country to make a spoliation of the little man, when they have sapped up the life and all the wealth out of the bottom structure and the middle structure, they then began to crystallize and stagnate at the top. The trouble with the wealthy to-day is that they have brought the little man to where he has nothing, and there is no place where he can reap any future profits; and so their own wealth is becoming worth nothing, because gold held as gold is of no value to anyone; it can not be eaten.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that what I have to say will rather prove the tendency indicated by the Senator from Louisiana.

It may be said that this suggestion is socialistic in its nature. Everything that deals with society necessarily is socialistic. I might say at this time, Mr. President, that I imagine I may lay claim to as great conservatism as anyone in the Senate. I am naturally that way, having been born and bred in the South, where we believe in the old conservative ideas. I disclaim any sort of radicalism in making these suggestions, which, it seems to me, if followed might lead to a solution of problems which appear at this time to be without solution.

It may be suggested that the plan proposed puts the Government deeper into private business, but that can hardly be admitted, as there would be no interference with the legitimate functioning of any private business. The plan would destroy all the incentive on the part of those engaged in gainful occupations to take from the public a greater sum than was actually fair for the protection of all. The result would be that business would adjust itself to the new conditions, and the money which has been taken from the public and centralized would be left with the public to be used in acquiring those things which are needful for the happiness of the human race.

It is profitable to take a survey, brief though it may be, of the changing conditions during the past several hundred years.

With the collapse of the Roman Empire, the church found on its hands a large part of the political power of the western world. Its jurisdiction was both temporal and spiritual. Nearly everyone in the then western world, from the throned monarch to the helpless slave, was under the authority of the church at birth, and continued under its authority until he passed off the stage of action. The entire social scheme, according to the prevailing ideas at that time, was in accord with the will of God, and institutions of every kind rarely thrived without the protection and approval of the church. The church was the government, and it gave protection to its people.

The feudal system, in the early part of the medieval period, presented a political and social system with which we are well acquainted. All society was divided into classes, and each individual was entitled to the rights and privileges of his class. At the head was the king, but he was subject to the authority of the church. The feudal lords and barons were nominally responsible to the king. The stewards, or bailiffs, of these lords and barons came next in order, and in a class below them were the villeins, then the cotters, and lowest of all, the slaves.

The economic unit in the feudal system was the manor, presided over and supervised by the lord of the manor who resided in the manor house. The almost exclusive economic pursuit was agriculture, which was almost self-sufficient. The land belonged to the king, at least theoretically, and the lords were required to render certain services, usually military, to him for the use of the land. They exacted certain support from the villeins, who tilled the soil. The manner of tillage, rotation of crops, and all farming operations were regulated by the lords.

I will not go into this early economic history in detail. I have mentioned it only to indicate that after the Dark Ages and during the feudal period man was regulated by his government in the most minute details of his economic life.

From the final collapse of the Roman Empire to the Tudor dynasty in England the manorial system generally prevailed. The Crusades largely ended the feudal system. The crusading lords, in order to raise money, parted with some of their possessions and established free towns. Knowledge acquired in the Crusades opened up channels of commerce and changed the manners of the people of England, resulting finally in the disintegration of the feudal system.

While agriculture was the first industry of the people after the decline of the feudal system, yet the establishment of towns soon resulted in developing other pursuits. After the feudal system came the town governments. They became important, and generally they were controlled by guilds.

While there were many guilds in England, the two most important ones during the period in which the towns flourished were the Merchants' Guild and the Craft Guild. They regulated the economic life of the towns with as much strictness as the lords had regulated the economic life of the manors.

The Merchants' Guild was of ancient origin. It was made up of traders, those who bought and sold products. The Craft Guild was made up of manufacturers, crude though they may have been. They could produce and also sell, and for that reason they became more important than those who bought and sold. The craft and the craftsman made up the guild. Members consisted of masters, journeymen, and apprentices. The masters were required to observe the guild's rules as to the quality of produce, prices, and conditions of sale. These guilds were not national but municipal associations, and persons from other towns were regarded as foreigners.

There were elaborate regulations to guide the local guild members in the conduct of their trade and to protect the townspeople against dealings regarded as unfair. Fines and | interpretation of the will of God, and there arose a host of penalties were provided for those who violated those regulations with the idea that a man's faith was a personal relationship.

The value of a commodity was not a price made by the buyer and seller, but prices were determined and fixed by official authority. The fair price, or just price, fixed by such authorities resembled what we to-day describe as a cost-of-production price; and while costs were not determined competitively, they were relevant to a determination of a rate which would support the producer in a fashion becoming a member of the class to which he belonged.

Gradually certain forces appeared which led to a disintegration of the guild system. Among these forces were the inclosure of lands in England during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries for sheep raising, a system which forced large numbers of rural inhabitants into the cities. The guilds became more exclusive in an attempt to keep out a large influx of rural workers, and the rural workers produced goods outside of the cities and marketed them surreptitiously in the cities. This weakened the guilds' monopolies and led the guild workers to emigrate outside of the towns to engage in the illegitimate marketing of goods below the guild prices, and in the sixteenth century Henry the Eighth confiscated all the communal property of the guilds in England used for religious and communal purposes.

Thus we see that during the guild period, as during the feudal manorial period—and the two were contemporaneous in many sections—the business man was closely regulated in his economic activities for the benefit of the producer and the consumer. The breakdown of the feudal and guild systems was accompanied by great political changes. The governments, particularly of England, greatly increased in power with the rise of joint-stock companies trading throughout the then known world, with their increased revenues.

The economic and social regulations, which had been the concern of the barons and towns, were assumed by the national authority, as is demonstrated during the sixteenth century by the regulation of apprenticeships, hours of labor, wages, prices, and provisions for caring for the poor by the English Government. These regulations have been described as mercantilistic, and these in turn led to colonization in an attempt by the western states to find an outlet for their goods so that they might maintain a surplus of precious metals over imports. Colonies were deemed especially necessary as a source of raw material which could not be produced at home and as a market for the finished products which were manufactured at home.

Under the mercantilistic theory the institutions of the state, the interests of the people, the personal interests of the king, and the will of God were all conveniently identified as being one and the same thing. It was the practice to regard the king as the guardian of social interests, and that, through him, industry was regulated, not according to the private desires of the individuals who were seeking to gain from the situation which existed but according to the requirements of the social good. With this growth of nationalism there was the consolidation of the influence of the nobility, the guilds, and the church and state organizations, with the continuation of the emphasis upon group or social interests as interpreted by superior authority. We in America know that it was not always easy for the individual to harmonize his personal interests, as he saw them, with the group interests, as conceived by the ruling authority.

Whether the constituted authority was the medieval church, the lords and barons, the guilds, or the national government, their authoritative regulations held in check the individual aspirations and ambitions of the masses of the people, but trade and commerce had given rise to a wealthy commercial class; and when the state regulations pressed too heavily on them, it was inevitable that some means would be found for challenging the authority of the king. These means were found in the Protestant Reformation, which furnished much philosophy for advancing the merchant-class ideas and interests. While beating down the power of the Catholic Church in England, the King had made the fatal mistake of stepping from royal to a personal interpretation of the will of God, and there arose a host of religious sects presenting great varieties of interpretations with the idea that a man's faith was a personal relationship between himself and his God. Henceforth, the authority of the state or King could be defended effectively only when reasonable and existing institutions of government could be supported on the ground that they were in harmony with the divine scheme of things. What was the divine scheme became merely a matter of individual viewpoint, as George Washington and his army demonstrated on a hundred battlefields in the American Revolution.

Mercantilism shriveled and collapsed, and the Martin Luther of the new political and social order was Adam Smith with his famous book, An Inquiry Into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, published in 1776. His explanation of how industry would operate if freed from mercantilistic regulations and left to the direction of the individuals in the pursuit of their self-interests, the "laissez faire" doctrine that the states should no longer interfere with the affairs of the individual, has provided an important part of the economic theory and practice from that day to this. According to this theory, all questions of hours of labor, wages, prices, provisions, care of the poor, and so forth, should be left to the individuals immediately concerned, for if every individual followed his self-interests he would receive the net worth of his desire, because his selfinterest would not permit him to accept less, and the individual self-interests of others would not permit him to receive more.

Mr. President, I would emphasize that Adam Smith evolved his philosophy during a comparatively simple period of history when a man could acquire the control of the simple manufacturing instruments necessary to carry on industry during the handicraft stage, or could enter any industry which might be dictated by his interests and talents. He might appraise the value of a suit of clothes when he spun, wove, and made the clothes, but an entirely different situation is presented during the machine age when he may have no more to do with making the clothes than cutting a leg for the pants or sewing on a button. Under both the guild and handicraft, or domestic system, there was a substantial unity of interests between all workers, from the master to the apprentice, or between the man who supplied the raw material and the man who fabricated them, but under the factory system there was no such unity of interests. The instruments of production were controlled by the capitalistic owners who rarely, if ever, came into contact with the workers and who were not responsible in any manner for their support during sickness, unemployment, or old age. During the machine age the workers have generally resented the competition of more and more refined machinery. I have neither the time nor the inclination to enter into a discussion of these long struggles between capital and labor during many years of the factory system.

I merely pause here to invite attention to the writers on technocracy who have told us that an entire rayon factory can be made to run with only one man to attend to the electric switches, that newspaper type may be set simultaneously in a dozen or more cities, and that while the efficiency of factories is constantly increasing, the number of needed employees is constantly decreasing. Said an authority in Harper's Magazine for January, 1933, page 135, that:

One of the classic examples of the marvels of technological efficiency is the Smith plant at Milwaukee, which can, with 208 men, turn out 10,000 automobile chassis frames in one day. There are many, many more. The mechanical verifiers, sorting machines, automatic interpreters, and electrical tabulating machines, automatic interpreters, and electrical tabulating machines * * * have almost reduced bookkeeping and accounting to a completely mechanical process. (I might inject here that the Congress of the United States has been a party to this process, for it now has in many of the departments and establishments of the Government these mechanical bookkeeping, sorting, etc., machines.) We have already spoken of the New Jersey rayon factory that will eventually require the services of but a single man. * * The public is already well acquainted with the teletype in the telegraph offices. In much the same way the typesetter sets type automatically and simultaneously in any number of cities when a master keyboard is operated in one central place. * * In a chain system of newspapers, the fate of the linotype operator is plain.

Again there is the photoelectric cell, popularly known as the electric eye, which can decimate the workers' ranks in scores of trades. It can detect the imperfections in cloth, it can sort articles of almost any description. The General Electric is now mar-keting a photoelectric cell which can be used for almost any sort of control purposes. Another application of the cell has just annexed the field of photo-engraving. Three-color plates are produced in half an hour instead of 36. It can operate over a telephone or telegraph wire at any distance.

The mechanical preparation and packing of groceries are well known. Cigarettes so blithely advertised as untouched by human hands can now be made at the rate of 2,000 or 3,000 per minute per man, where last year only 500 or 600 could be made. Technology has laid hands on the building industry, and factory-fabricated houses to be turned out in sections and put together by a pocket wrench are about to appear on the market, provided the depression doesn't first eliminate the market. Corporations may do their utmost to hold back inventions that threaten their existence, just as razor-blade manufacturers shudder at the thought of a blade, now in existence but never commercially produced, which will last a lifetime and costs 30 cents; but here and there, faster and faster, technology is breaking through the line.

The technological processes are going on all about us. The present depression has hastened the process. In order to dispense with labor, cut costs, increase output, and cheapen the price in a desperate effort to earn enough to keep their business going, industrialists have adopted almost every conceivable mechanical improvement. With the great rapidity with which they can make every article, the fewer men they need to do it, and as a consequence there are fewer purchasers with money to buy the products. Production reached its peak in 1929. Wherever mechanization has taken place, both the man hours and the energy required per unit have decreased. The same writer quoted above, in the same article, makes this further comment:

The flour-milling industry, for example, had 9,500 plants in 1899, which increased to a maximum of 11,700 mills in 1909, only to decline by 1929 to a meager 2,900 mills. The workers declined from 32,000 in 1899 to 26,400 in 1929. But while the number of plants and the number of workers declined, the amount of wheat ground increased from 471,0000 bushels ground in 1899 to 546,000,000 bushels ground in 1929.

The steel industry produced 11,000,000 metric tons in 1900, requiring approximately 600,000,000 man hours. In 1929 the steel industry had a production of 58,000,000 metric tons, requiring only industry had a production of 53,000,000 metric tons, requiring only 770,000,000 man hours. In 1900 it required 70 man hours per ton, while in 1929 only 13 man hours per ton were necessary.

In 1904 in the automobile industry 1,291 man-hours were required to produce one vehicle. In 1919 the industry manufactured approximately 1,600,000 vehicles, requiring 606,409,000 man-hours, or 313 man-hours per vehicle. In 1929 the industry reached its peak of production; 5,600,000 vehicles were made, requiring 521,-468,000 man-hours, or 92 man-hours per vehicle. In 1929 we produced 4,000,000 more automobiles than in 1919 with 84,000,000 400,000 man-hours, or 92 man-hours per venicie. In 1929 we produced 4,000,000 more automobiles than in 1919, with 84,000,000 fewer man-hours. Automobile manufacture required its greatest number of man-hours in 1919. Its high point of total employment was reached in 1923; both have declined continuously since

But I am concerned with principle and not detail. Every man who has given thought to these problems knows what has taken place in every kind of industry. Increased mechanization has led to increased production with increased unemployment and decreased purchasing power on the part of those who must be depended upon to purchase the products of industry. Now we are confronted with want, misery, and hunger in a land of plenty. Factories are idle because purchasers are without money to buy their products. Farmers find it difficult to pay their taxes and to keep interest payments up on their homes, while their barns are filled with the fruits of the soil. Men and women, all eager to work, fill the streets and highways as they walk about searching for employment. The "laissez faire" system of Adam Smith, applied to the mechanized factory system of today, has broken down, even as the guilds and mercantilistic systems of other years broke down.

There is this difference, however. When the guilds and mercantilistic systems broke down, there were immense quantities of new lands rich in natural resources awaiting the coming of him who should till the soil. The surplus population found homes in these new lands and new opportunities where they could start life again. No homes were opened for those who had lost out in the struggle with the machine, but it was possible to shift from one industry to another. The new lands are now exhausted, and it is growing more and more difficult for other industries to absorb those thrown out of employment by the mechanization of some industries. A writer in the Political Science Quarterly for December, 1932, said:

In the present industrial and argricultural situation, the effective use of modern machinery and technology is being impeded by the inherited institutional complex of free competition, bank oredits, and fluctuating prices, with the concomitant social distress of unemployment and unnecessary poverty. We are endeavoring by all manner of expedients to avoid some of these difficulties and to remedy some of the defects, but it is evident that the onward march of technology will necessitate large-scale modifications in our institutional arrangements.

The expedients of reconstruction finance corporations, agricultural surplus controls, Federal home-loan banks, and such instrumentalities are but temporary. They are as powerless to stem the tide of the existing economic debacle as were the forces which attempted to restrain the fuedal, guild, or mercantilistic systems. It appears that nothing in the way of forces to combat the present depression has brought satisfactory results. President Hoover appointed a research committee on social trends, and, after three years or more of diligent study of social problems, it reported a few weeks ago that-

There can be no assurance that violent revolution in America can be averted unless there be a more impressive integration of social skills and fusing of social purposes than is revealed by recent trends.

The work of this committee was made possible, as I understand, by a grant of funds by the Rockefeller Foundation. It is my information that the committee was headed by Dr. Wesley C. Mitchell, of Columbia University. I find this statement in the report:

It is improbable that the old order can be brought back or that it would be for the best interest of the younger generation to have it as it was. Under the old order every day we were drifting further into a sordid materialistic condition of affairs in which the spiritual element was wholly lacking. And, after all, the human race can not be said to be making any real progress unless it is along spiritual lines. This crisis gives us an opportunity, of which it is to be hoped we will take advantage. If we wish to continue our capitalistic civilization, we must make it less selfish and broader in its general scope.

A capitalistic civilization is the only kind we understand, and there is no need for us to drift into strange ventures, such as the Russians are not too successfully trying at present.

And yet, if we do not endeavor to improve conditions, so that in the future the general purpose will be higher than it has been in the past, the danger of a Lenin dictatorship will become more and more imminent.

Colonel House, in his statement that continuation of the present order will drift us into greater and greater danger of a Lenin dictatorship, is at one with the conclusions of President Hoover's Committee on Social Trends, when he

Unless there can be a more impressive integration of skills and fusing of social purposes than is revealed by recent trends, there can be no assurance that these alternatives, with their accompaniments of violent revolution, dark periods of serious repressions of liberties and democratic forms, the proscription and loss of many useful elements in the present productive system, can

No one could accuse Colonel House or President Hoover's Committee on Social Trends as being reds and socialists or with desire to destroy our capitalistic system. They would preserve it by modifying it to meet our present economic conditions. That system, as it now exists, is doomed and will pass as surely as the manorial, guild, and mercantilistic systems of other ages disappeared because they were not adapted to the changing requirements of the economic and social orders. Shall we, who are charged by the people with the responsibility of seeking a way out to preserve our institutions, waste our time and efforts in bootless experiments with expedients until our system topples about our ears and drags us all to destruction? As Colonel House says in his Liberty article:

It is bootless to say that this can not happen. Anything may happen in times like these. The minds of our people are in a ferment, and things which we would have declared impossible a few years ago are in actual process of coming about. One of the causes of unrest is the almost complete lack of confidence in our relitiest and financial landow. It is not unfortunate that political and financial leaders. It is an unfortunate state of affairs, but unhappily it is one that actually exists. And there is reason for it. The theories and predictions that have been made, and the advice that has been given, seem incredible in the light of subsequent events. In consequence, there are few political and financial anchorage spots left

I charge that the existing economic practices have not only beggared the worker and the farmer with loss of confidence in political and financial leaders who permitted such practices to continue when the reasons for the laissez faire doctrine had long ceased to exist, but I charge that it has beggared capital itself. Let me illustrate by taking another extract from the writer in Harper's Magazine. Says he:

Consider, for example, the Ford Motor Co., which is the sole property of Mr. and Mrs. Ford and their son, Edsel. In 1930 the company had outstanding 172,645 shares of stock owned by these three persons, which yielded a profit of $257 a share. Allowing for all the spinning wheels, antique furniture, and wayside inns in the world, how much can three persons spend of a single year's profit of over $44,000,000? Obviously, not very much. The one thing possible is reinvestment, and the only possible place for reinvestment is production. This means that production must pay further interest and dividends. Year after year this reinvestment in stocks and bonds (which are, of course, mere shares in the debt owed by production) has demanded more and more interest on production.

In order to keep up with this mad business production has to In order to keep up with this mad business production has to increase at a compound interest rate in order to pay for the river of money being invested in it. This, of course, is impossible, and the result has been—this is not guesswork, but a statement proven by bleak and cold figures available to anybody—that debt has increased faster than production. The only way to maintain this debt (for neither the bankers nor anyone else expect it to be paid) is with continuously increasing sales of goods, and when debt increases faster than we have made the goods, which is exactly what has happened, we steadily approach a point where the whole concern goes to pieces. To pay our debts we have to borrow on our goods faster than we can make them. And all the while the rate of the debt increase is greater than the population increase so that each year we owe more than we did before, and next year we must owe more than we do to-day. next year we must owe more than we do to-day.

Let me cite another example in support of my point that the existing system is making a beggar out of capital. Stuart Chase, in his book The New Deal, says:

In the United States we have at the present time a shoe facand could hardly wear out 500,000,000 pairs a year. We buy 300,000,000 and could hardly wear out 500,000,000 pairs, yet new shoe factories, in normal times, are constantly being built. Bankers loan money to their promoters. The extension of the shoe business is held to be a cardinal requisite to progress, prosperity, employment. Meanwhile the existing shoe factories stand, on the average, two-thirds empty. The resulting appalling burden of overhead Meanwhile the existing shoe factories stand, on the average, two-thirds empty. The resulting appalling burden of overhead costs forces manufacturer after manufacturer into bankruptcy. And always will. We have the plant but can not make adequate use of it. Jam yesterday, jam to-morrow, but never jam to-day. Men want jobs, people want shoes, but men can not go to work in these all but empty factories. They can build new shoe factories in a boom and walk the streets in a slump. In addition to building the plant itself a favorite practice in recent years has been to devote the surplus to financing spirited selling campaigns and to pyramiding the financial structure through mergers, holding companies, and stock-selling promotions. ing companies, and stock-selling promotions.

· Labor and management, supported by bankers and creditors, supported in turn by savings seeking profitable invest-ment, go on rearing the capital structure to the skies. Look at the towers of Manhattan, look at the new mills of North Carolina, look at the new mechanized cotton farms of Texas. Virtually half of the investments in the United States in recent years is never put to work, while on all of it is snugly laid a blanket of indebtedness carrying a huge volume of fixed charges. The profitable investment demands a profit and rent and interest. But the underlying plant is increasingly incapable of earning a profit because of inadequate utilization.

If this brief and inadequate sketch of the economic systems since the medieval period is insufficient to lead the thinking man and woman to the conclusion that we must, governmentally, discard the remaining vestiges of the laissez-faire doctrine of Adam Smith, and return to a governmentally controlled system similar to that which has existed through most of the period since the Middle Ages, then nothing that I could say would accomplish that end. Unquestionably the economic world is now sick. I believe with Colonel House that we can not return to the old order of things, and I further believe that for the happiness and comfort of our children and our children's children we should not return if we could.

The suggestions I have made seek a middle ground between laissez-faire capitalism on the one hand and communism on the other. They seek to preserve a capitalistic society by limiting the returns which capital may take from | bill on the ground that it is unfair to capital. He would the enterprise engaged in interstate commerce, and this would force distribution of the balance between the consumer and the worker. Guided by business intelligence, the surplus earnings of industry would have to be distributed to the workers in the form of shorter hours, possibly in higher wages, and to the consumer in lower prices. This would increase employment, with little if any decrease in wages, and would in turn increase the demand for the products of the farm and factory. Capital could not take all the traffic would bear, all the excess earnings, and reinvest them in larger and larger plants, in more and more producers' goods as compared with consumers' goods. Instead of the earnings, in excess of the marginal wage, going to capital to be reinvested in useless plants which are a social and economic loss, for the most part, such earnings in excess of a fair rate of return would go to the worker and to the consumer, who would increase their standards of living, buy better homes, and who would use these excess earnings to much better advantage than the Fords, for instance, who can not possibly use their incomes from capital. To this extent, the plan is not unlike the results obtained by the guilds, except that instead of fixing prices the amount of profit is fixed. Prices are left to be fixed, as they now are, by the cost of production, competition, and demand and supply. Even if the Constitution should be modified to permit it to be done. I do not think that in this complex age a government could successfully fix prices of commodities.

Contributory to this basic idea the plan provides that a certain percentage of the net income of industry engaged in interstate commerce should be set aside and invested in Government securities-National, State, and municipal-to be used as an unemployment fund during periods of business recession. During the prosperous years industry could build up an employment fund to tide it over the lean years, and to this extent the proposal differs from the recapture clause of the interstate commerce act, sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in two cases, which does not permit the balancing of excess earnings of prosperous years against deficits in lean years, with the result that we have the railroads of the country in a very bad condition, with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation dishing out the public credit to the railroads, including those which have had excess earnings in prosperous years, in an attempt to tide them over the danger of bankruptcy. Such a scheme would eliminate the pressing demand for unemployment insurance, oldage pensions, and the dole.

The limitation of the amount of profit capital could take from interstate industry will tend to eliminate unfair methods of competition for which we are now spending large sums of public money in largely abortive corrective attempts. Wasteful and uneconomic advertising and selling campaigns would be largely eliminated. After I had considered these things there came to my attention an extract from the report of President Hoover's research committee, which expresses my thought on this point in the following words:

We devote far more attention to making money than to spending it, and the buying public is confronted with high-pressure salesmanship, installment-selling propaganda, and other sales tactics adopted by competitors in business to get their share of the consumer's dollar.

The profit motive has led to this turn of affairs. By reducing the profit motive to not exceeding a fixed return, the buying public will not be so largely confronted with so much sales propaganda. At the same time combines will be made possible in the interest of economic production without fear on the part of the consumers that such combinations would result in increased prices due to monopolies. In my judgment, the Granger movement, culminating in the Sherman Act, while necessary at the time to curb ruthless capital protected under the fetish of laissez faire, went too far, to the detriment of both capital and consumers, by preventing combinations necessary for reduction of the cost of production. Under this plan all these questions will be eliminated from our economic life as concerns interstate commerce.

The devotee of laissez faire will doubtless condemn this prefer, doubtless, that the capitalistic system be wrecked than that we revert to a modified form of controlled capitalism which served mankind for centuries. There is no hope of convincing those who firmly hold such opinions, but I would call attention of the country to the undoubted fact that the Federal Government has, in the past, limited the return to capital by taking, in the form of taxes, all of the income in excess of a certain percentage. Through taxation the Federal Government could doubtless take all profit from industry, whether or not engaged in interstate commerce, but such unreasonably high taxes imposed on capital is no solution to the economic problems confronting us to-day.

Aside from the fact that I am not one of those who believe that the burden of taxation should be borne by the few; such a form of taxation leads to extravagance, favoritism, and waste in governmental expenditures. It also leads to the taking of money from productive enterprises until finally we reach the situation we are in at present, when the Government is the only organization which can command the funds for enterprises, and we have the spectacle of Government credit being loaned, or, in the end, given to private industry. The burdens of government should be borne by all in proportion to their benefits from government, and in all cases the citizen should pay some amount of taxes to help support his government. Moreover, as I have heretofore pointed out, the difference between limiting the returns to capital, by taking all above a certain amount in the form of taxes for nonproductive enterprises, and my plan of forcing the distribution of the excess above a certain amount among the workers and the consumers is as broad as the Atlantic Ocean.

Granted that our economic system is out of joint; that there is the gravest danger both to capital and our Government in the present plan of drift, and that something should be done about it, I realize that my plan will meet with objections from some quarters. The man who points out the dangers and urges that something be done about it has the advantage of the man who offers a specific plan. Yet, as I have said, I offer this plan to the country at this time that it may give it thought, offer both constructive and destructive criticism during the coming months, and when we enter on the next session of Congress I hope that it may be taken up for action.

There is one further thought I wish to mention at this time. Shortening the hours of labor, distribution of a larger share of the earnings of industry to the consumers and workers, and the establishment of unemployment funds can not be accomplished through voluntary action on the part of capital. Mr. Edward A. Filene, the distinguished Boston merchant and philanthropist, writing for the New York Times of January 1, 1933, urged that capital adopt a shorter work day and a shorter work week with no reductions in wages; in other words, that capital voluntarily give the workers a greater share of the net earnings of industry, on the ground that such action on the part of capital would not only cure the existing depression, but would tend to prevent future depressions. He did not mention unemployment insurance or old-age pensions, presumably on the theory that the Government should continue to care for the needy and the aged, with capital bearing only a share instead of all the expense of such care. Said he:

The admitted hitch in this plan lies in its requirement of concerted action. Big business must lead the way if little business is to follow. But there is no reason why big business should not be expected to lead the way. It has become big business by leading the way. We have a right to ask that it be big in some other respects than in its total capitalization, or the total number of acres of space in its combined plants.

Mr. Walter C. Teagle, the able and conscientious president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, very unselfishly and patriotically has temporarily deserted his business in an attempt to secure the voluntary adoption by industry of the share-the-work movement, a movement designed to secure the voluntary adoption by industry, for the period of the depression, of the shorter work day and the shorter work week. The work of Mr. Teagle has been good, and I, for one, give him all honor for the results. But we all know that the unemployment situation has grown worse.

As Mr. Filene has well said, "The hitch in this plan is its requirement of concerted action," and, I might add, voluntary action. It can no more succeed without compulsion on the part of the Government than could the regulation of the hours of industry, the rate of wages, and so forth, succeed during the guild and mercantilistic periods without the compulsory action of superior authority. Undoubtedly there are many others in big business who think with Mr. Filene and Mr. Teagle, and their plans would have been adopted long ago but for the force of competition. There must be interposed the strong arm of the law to assist the good industries in bringing about reforms in our present competitive capitalistic structure which they can not accomplish unaided. Their unscrupulous competitors must be compelled to follow a minimum order of things for the good of the social order. I appreciate the fact that the blundering of Government in business in recent years gives no assurance that a Government-controlled economic system will always be enlightened, but I have hopes that under my plan business men will take the same interest in good government as was taken by the guild leaders of another period.

The adoption of a 6-hour day and a 5-day week, without the distribution to the workers and consumers of a greater share of the earnings of industry, will not correct the existing evils, though it is possible that it would greatly mitigate them. But, even if such a shorter workday and work week were desirable, there is, in my opinion, no possibility of its acceptance through voluntary action on the part of industry. Human greed will prevent it. There is likewise, in my judgment, no constitutional power in the Federal Government for a law requiring its adoption. The hours of work are a matter of contract between the employer and the employed, and, under our Constitution, there can be no such interference with the matter of contract. Of course, the Constitution might be amended, after several years, to authorize the adoption of such a law, but I fear that it would then be too late.

This Nation came into being largely because of the necessity to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution expressly gave the Congress unlimited power to regulate such commerce, and under that power I propose that the Congress shall deny the right to engage in interstate or foreign commerce to any corporation, individual, or association for profit that is not incorporated under Federal law, and, as an incident of that incorporation, I propose to limit the amount of the net earnings that capital may take from industry and to require that a certain percentage of the net earnings be set aside each year as an unemployment fund. Having regulated industry in these two respects, I believe that capital, or the entrepreneurs in charge of capital operations, may be left free to divide the balance of the earnings between labor and the consumer.

The penalty for failure to observe these requirements would be the forfeiture of the Federal charter and consequent denial of the right to engage, or ship products, in interstate or foreign commerce. The plan does not provide for the establishment of commercial tribunals to enforce these requirements or to determine disputed questions as to cost of reproduction of plant, distribution of earnings, and so forth. I believe that the existing machinery of the law may be sufficient to enforce these requirements on industry where the buccaneers will be watched by competitors, by labor, and by consumers, even as under the guild and mercantilistic systems. If experience should prove that special tribunals are necessary, we can then establish them.

Mr. President, the suggestions which I have made are rather crude I know. I believe the time has come when it is of the utmost importance that we deal sincerely and intelligently with the many grave questions that confront the country on every hand. Business is about destroyed. Industry is prostrated. If we are going to bring business back again, then we ought to start out on a better foundation than that on which we builded before. We ought to plant the recovery and the new business on a solid rock, so that there may never again occur the same things that we see in the country, which have been continuing for the last few years and which will continue probably for many years to come.

I do not believe we are even approaching or nearly approaching the end of the depression. I do not believe that we need expect that we will find some solution that will bring prosperity to us again within the next six months or the next year or probably in the next few years. We have a long, hard fight before us. If we fight valiantly, using the wisdom that we have, using the experiences of the past, if we go back far enough and make a study of all governmental problems, I have hopes that again we may make America what she has been in the past and what she ought always to be, and that is the greatest nation in the world. But if we hesitate much longer, if we wonder how we are going to find a way out, and stand and wait patiently for some fairy to come to us and whisper that if we will follow a certain road it will lead out of the morass and on to safe ground-I am afraid if we wait for something of that kind that the prophesies which have been made by many wise men that destruction is not far away may be fulfilled.

Mr. President, I do not know whether the suggestions I have made contain any very great merit, but I am hopeful that somebody will bring forward a suggestion that at least will hold out some hope that the people are not going to have to endure much longer a continuance of present conditions. We take too much time with little things. We do not view the entire canvas. We do not survey the entire horizon. We circumscribe our vision. I think that we must give our combined judgment to a consideration of the questions that affect our entire country and the entire world. We can no longer live by ourselves alone, neither in the community, in a State of our Union, or in our Nation itself. must live as a part of this great world that is so closely interwoven that we can not any longer say we will live alone.

LIMITATION OF WORKING HOURS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in line with the very thoughtful and interesting discussion just presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] I desire to send to the desk and have read a letter from Mr. Joseph Berlinger, of 1333 Broadway, New York, touching to some extent upon the same subject. I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 20, 1933.

Senator BLACK

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Being a strong believer in your proposed bill to prohibit interstate shipments of goods produced by persons employed more than 5 days a week or 6 hours a day, I take the liberty of calling your attention to the condition that exists in the silk industry.

This industry, in spite of the general depression, has continued to enjoy as great a yardage consumption as in its most prosperous years. The producers, however, who have been running their mills from 54 to 60 hours a week and a great many running their looms on a day and night shift, have created such a condition that in spite of a continuously active demand they are actually forced to sell their production at cost or below cost with the result that 95 per cent of the manufacturers are virtually in hankruptey. in bankruptcy.

Nothing, in my opinion, would bring back confidence and prosperity quicker than your bill to limit working hours. It would put back to work at least 5,000,000 people who are now unemployed. This would enable the producer to sell goods at a profit instead of a loss by eliminating overproduction.

To illustrate how other countries attempt to spread employment.

On a recent trip to France a friend of mine who is an exporter in Paris (not a producer) was fined 3,000 francs by the govern-ment for having worked two nights merely shipping merchandise. All kinds of remedies have been suggested. These have been fruitless clutchings at a straw. It is my firm belief that nothing will end this depression or bring back prosperity quicker than the spreading of employment which your bill, by the restriction of working hours, offers. It will give the struggling merchant an opportunity to sell his product at a profit rather than at cost or at a loss.

I am at a loss to understand why there has not been more emphasis given to this movement and sincerely hope your bill will receive the consideration that it so richly merits.

Yours very respectfully,

JOSEPH BERLINGER.

ALEXANDRIA, LA., February 22, 1923.

Vice President and President of the United States Senate:

As a nonpartisan business man, the first week's investigation in New Orleans confirms my conviction of the honest and legitimate election of Mr. Overton to United States Senate not even claimed by Senator Broussard. Further investigation will entail useless expenditure, will multiply discord and personal feeling, and cause business disturbances in Louisiana that years will not overcome.

THE BOSTON NAVY YARD

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present for printing in full in the RECORD, under the rule, and to be appropriately referred, resolutions of the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress in opposition to a proposed closing in whole or in part of the Boston Navy Yard at Charlestown, Mass.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Boston, February 17, 1933.

Resolutions memorializing Congress in opposition to proposed closing in whole or in part of the Boston Navy Yard at Charles-

Whereas the Boston Navy Yard was long since established as one of the ports of our national defense; and
Whereas said navy yard employs upward of 2,000 persons, whose families rely upon the employment in said navy yard; and Whereas conditions of unemployment are creating extreme hardship and suffering in this Commonwealth; and Whereas such hardship and suffering would be greatly aggravated in the event of the closing in whole or in part of the said navy yard; and

Whereas the resultant wholesale discharge of said employee would throw them and their families upon the Government, thus requiring increased welfare appropriations: Therefore be it Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts opposes any policies that involve the closing, in whole or in part, of the Boston Navy Yard, and protests against any action by the Secretary of the Navy or the Congress of the United States which will affect as aforesaid the said navy yard; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded at once by the secretary of the commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Navy, to the chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and to the Senators and Rep-resentatives in the Congress of the United States from this Commonwealth.

THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague and myself, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD and appropriately referred a senate concurrent resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, memorializing Congress to refrain from enacting legislation which would decrease the strength and effectiveness of the armed forces of the United States.

The concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,

February 13, 1933. Whereas the present Congress of the United States is considering, under the guise of economy, the radical cutting of appropriations for the support of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, and of the National Guard of the several States;

Whereas the Army is at present pitifully insufficient for the defense of our mainland without regard for our insular possessions; and

Whereas the Navy is far below the standard decided upon as necessary for the safety of the United States and agreed to by the Powers in a far less unsettled time; and whereas the Marine Corps, although small, has proven for more than a century the most mobile and effective police force in any national or international emergency this Nation has ever had; and Whereas through Federal aid and supervision the National Guard has risen to a point of efficiency heretofore unknown; and Whereas no reasoning person can believe in pacific safety in the face of existing facts. Every peace pact, treaty, or League of Nation action has proven and is at present proving futile and useless to turn any nation from a policy of aggrandizement; and Whereas events within the last 20 years have proven the futility of preserving the neutrality of the United States in the event of a major conflict; and Whereas the existing national and international debts are the result of past unpreparedness, and existing brawl over the col-result of past unpreparedness, and existing brawl over the col-lection thereof the result of present unpreparedness; and Whereas the voice of the United States in the interests of universal peace is respected only in proportion to its existing and active power; and whereas the effects of the present economic chaos on the governments of the world have conclusively proven that only strong, well-sustained governments can survive: Therefore be it

*Resolved (if the house of representatives concur), That the Senate and House of Representatives of the 1933 session of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania hereby memoralizes the present Congress of the United States to refrain from taking any action for the purpose of economy or other purpose that will further decrease the strength and effectiveness of the armed forces of the United States and the several States thereof. thereof.

The foregoing is a true and correct copy of the resolution adopted by the senate February 20, 1933, and concurred in by the house of representatives February 20, 1933.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 5684) to authorize the Comptroller General to allow claim of district No. 13, Choctaw County, Okla., for payment of tuition for Indian pupils; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. DILL introduced Senate bill 5685, which appears under a separate head.)

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 5686) to protect depositors in national banks, to regulate the withdrawal of deposits in such banks in certain cases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CONSOLIDATION OF FARM-LOAN AGENCIES-FARM MORTGAGES

Mr. DILL. I introduce a bill and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 5685) to provide for the refunding of farm and home mortgages, making loans to farmers, issuance of agricultural bonds, the deposit of Government funds, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a few words about the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in these hard times high interest rate mortgages on farms and homes are the greatest burden and handicap to the recovery of prosperity.

Of course, the first necessity for restoring prosperity is the raising of prices for commodities so the producers will make a profit and be able to buy new goods. But even after that has been brought about it will be impossible for most of the farmers and home owners to free themselves from the debt octopus unless interest rates come down.

For this purpose I have prepared this bill, Senate bill 5685, and had it referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

If Congress will enact this bill into law it will:

First. Bring under one control all of the different farmloan agencies of the Government now operating through several different departments and organizations, and thereby greatly reduce the expenses of these loan operations.

Second. Make possible the exchange of the present highrate interest mortgages and farm-loan bonds for Government-guaranteed bonds and reduce the interest rate on farm mortgages to 3 per cent by refinancing existing mortgages.

Third. Provide abundant funds for loans for livestock and crop production at 3 per cent interest.

Fourth. Enable bona fide home owners to refinance the mortgages on their homes at 3 per cent interest.

Under this plan the Government will simply lend its credit to the farmers and home owners by selling 2 per cent bonds to raise the necessary funds for this purpose. This will lift the burden of expenses for administration from the taxpayers and place it on those who receive the benefits.

The difference in interest of 1 per cent will easily pay all costs of administration. If it is found that this 1 per cent rate brings in more money than is needed for administration Congress can later lower the interest rate to farmers.

Under present conditions, the holders of farm-loan bonds and mortgages will be glad to exchange them for Government-guaranteed bonds at the lower interest rate.

Not only is this legislation highly desirable for the present emergency, but it will establish a sound, permanent policy for credit to farmers and home owners.

It will stabilize the values of real estate and real-estate values are after all the basis of the Nation's credit structure.

METHOD OF CALLING CONVENTIONS IN THE STATES

Mr. KEAN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 368), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General is requested to furnish to the Senate as soon as practicable an opinion with respect to the proper method to be followed in the calling of conventions in the several States for the purpose of ratifying or rejecting the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States contained in the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211), of February 20, 1933, entitled "Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States," giving particular consideration to the question as to whether provision should be made for such conventions by enactment of the Congress or by legislative action of the several States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 4020. An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict;

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

IMPORTATIONS OF CUT FLOWERS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer and have considered immediately a resolution which simply provides for an investigation by the Tariff Commission of the difference in cost of production of a domestic and a foreign commodity.

Mr. KING. What is the commodity?

Mr. WAGNER. Cut flowers.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I shall vote against it, because I think it is wholly unwise at this time, and that an investigation would furnish no basis for any legislative action by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to present a Senate resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Let the clerk report the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 369) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Cut flowers, fresh, classified under paragraph 753 of such act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks further unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that quite a number of similar resolutions have been offered, and I expect to hold a meeting of the Committee on Finance in a very few days, when we will decide whether all the resolutions shall be reported or not.

Mr. WAGNER. I am simply asking for an inquiry. I am not asking for any decision on the subject. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRODUCTION COSTS OF COTTON FISHING NETS AND NETTING

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of Senate Resolution 361, directing the Tariff Commission to investigate the production costs of cotton fishing nets and cotton fishing netting.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, but I want to give notice now that when further requests are made for the consideration of such resolutions I shall ask their reference to the Committee on

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this resolution has already been referred to the Committee on Finance, and the first action for the Senator from Vermont will be to move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the resolu-

Mr. AUSTIN. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Vermont asks for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate for the purpose of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930 the differences in cost of production between the domestic article or articles and competitive foreign article or articles, and to report at the earliest practical date on the following items:

Cotton fishing nets and cotton fishing netting, classifiable under paragraph 923 of the tariff act of 1930.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion.

CLARENCE R. KILLION-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REED submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1. Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

> DAVID REED. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Managers on the part of the Senate.

LISTER HILL. NUMA F. MONTET, B. M. CHIPERFIELD, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REED. I move the adoption of the conference report. The report was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, is the bill still open for general amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Without objection, let the Chair state first the clerks will be authorized to make corrections of the totals. The bill is still open for amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me before he proceeds, I notice on page 37 the Printing Office has made a mistake in arranging the printed lines. There is apparently a transposition of the lines.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The printers have merely transposed the language?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in several places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the correction has been made by the clerks at the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I merely wished to be sure that the correction is made.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 28, line 2, "Valuation of property of carriers," strike out the numerals "$2,313,542" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,750,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, this relates to the valuation of the property of carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The item has been carried in the bill since 1913. There has been spent on this work about $50,000,000. in round numbers. I remember in 1923 and 1924 there was a promise that the commission was going to formulate a plan by which to complete the work. I can cite the promises they made in 1928 that they would complete the work in three years. Now they are promising again to complete it in three years. They suggest if given this amount of money this year they will want only $1,750,000 next year. I think the only way we will get the reduction is to make the reduction now and keep the amount reduced. I hope the Senator from Utah will consent to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield-

Mr. DICKINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation referred to by the Senator under the subheading "Valuation of property of carriers" was discussed by the Subcommittee on Appropriations. The commission takes the position that the valuation of the property of the carriers ought to be completed at the very earliest date possible. I know that what the Senator says is true—that it seems almost an interminable proposition. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment at this time. I think the provision will virtually take care of the work now with the exception, perhaps, of a very small appropriation next year.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator is relying upon what has been presented to the committee, let me say to him that I have very carefully read the hearings before the House committee. I want to go back to 1926 in the House hearings in a statement by Mr. Lewis:

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, on December 31, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, on December 31, 1924, appearing before this committee I laid before you two proposals. Both dealt with the same subject—the completion of the long-drawn-out work of the primary valuation of steam, telegraph, and sleeping-car carriers. This was a so-called 3-year program, which was accepted and on which we are now engaged.

Now we have another 3-year program. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that unless we cut down the amount, we will have another 3-year program next year, and another one the following year, and still another one the year after that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to go into it a little more fully. I think I had better accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield for that purpose?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Borah	Carey	Dickinson
Austin	Bratton	Clark	Dill
Bailey	Brookhart	Coolidge	Fess

Watson King La Follette Smoot Steiwer Patterson White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senate should not pass upon this amendment without realizing just what it involves. I do not know how the Senator from Iowa arrives at the amount which he has determined should be granted to the valuation division of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but obviously it is a very substantial cut which he proposes in the appropriation. It must be remembered, of course, that this item, like all others, has been passed on by the Budget Bureau; it has passed the House of Representatives; it has been before the subcommittee and the full Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; and has been reported at the figure now carried in the bill. The Senator from Iowa now proposes a drastic cut in the appropriation.

I submit, Mr. President, that at a time when the Federal Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is loaning hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars to railroad corporations for the purpose of sustaining their capital structure during this period of emergency; at a time when we are considering legislation that deals with the subject of bankruptcy and receivership proceedings is not the time to cut the appropriation for the valuation of the railroads, which is the only protection the Government has in the premises so far as the loans which it is making and so far as the receivership proceedings are concerned.

If this matter was to have been taken up seriously, Mr. President, it should have been presented to the committee; hearings should have been held upon it; the Interstate Commerce Commission should have had an opportunity to present the situation which the cut proposed by the Senator from Iowa will produce if the amendment shall become a law.

We had a similar fight over this matter in connection with the last appropriation bill, and, after considering all the aspects of the situation, the Senate reversed the position of the committee and provided a reasonable amount for the continuation of this work.

I know, Mr. President, that it is difficult at this time to secure consideration of this important matter, but it does seem to me that the Senate should not pass upon this amendment without fully realizing the implications of the action that it was about to take. So I hope, Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa will be rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am very reluctant to criticize any measure which was sponsored by the distinguished father of the very able Senator from Wisconsin. I looked into this question soon after I came to the Senate. It seems to me, with the changing conditions in the physical aspects of the railroads, that any figures of to-day would be valueless to-morrow or in the near future; and with the wreckage of railroads, the abandonment of many miles, and the great changes which they have undergone, it seems to me that any valuation found 5, 6, 8, 10, or 15 years ago would now be of no value. I wonder—and I ask for information—what advantage there is in finding out the mileage and the trackage of the Union Pacific Railroad, for instance, or the Oregon Short Line or the Denver & Rio Grande, the latter of which has undergone half a dozen reorganizations since it was valued? What advantage would the figures arrived at some years ago as to trackage and the assets of the organization, many of which have been dissipated or lost in the meantime, now be in determining the basis upon which rates should be fixed or loans should be made by the Government?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the work of the valuation division of the Interstate Commerce Commission is particularly important at this time, when, as I have suggested, we are considering the extension of further Government loans to the railroads for which, under the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and in accordance with an amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], the consent or approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission must be secured before such loans may be extended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As the Senator will find if he will refer to the debate upon the independent offices appropriation bill last year, the commission fully sets forth the importance of the continuation of this work in connection with the many aspects of the railroad problem upon which the commission has to pass.

Furthermore, as I suggested, perhaps before the Senator came into the Chamber, we now have as the unfinished business of the Senate a bill providing for a change in our bankruptcy laws and our receivership laws. It is my understanding that an effort will be made on the floor of the Senate to amend that bill so as to provide that the railroads may come under its provisions.

In view of all those circumstances, I submit to the Senator that this emergency is no time to cut off this activity of the Government in gathering information, which is so essential not only in passing upon the important questions which must be determined in the crisis but also in helping us in the future to determine general policies so far as the railroads are concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator from Wisconsin has referred having relation to the modification of the bankruptcy act, as passed by the House of Representatives, contains a section dealing with the subject of compositions and reorganizations relating to railroads. The Senate committee reported an amendment striking that section out, but whether the Senate rejects or accepts the Senate committee recommendation, it is true that the question of railroad organization will be in conference.

I myself have no hesitancy in saying that I think, if it is possible to do so, the Senate ought to consider very seriously before accepting the committee amendment striking out the provisions in regard to the reorganization of railroads. Those provisions have been pretty carefully considered, particularly by the committee at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to draw the attention of the Senator to the hearings which were held by the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee with relation to stopping loans to the railroads. The main plea of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, the railroads and their representatives, was that we should not stop railroad loans until the proposed reorganization plan was adopted by Congress. That shows how urgent the matter is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I really feel that that, phase of the issue is urgent—almost equally urgent, if not quite equally urgent, with other provisions in the bill that were retained by the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to add a word to what has already been said.

In my judgment, if the Congress adjourns without passing legislation which permits and sets up a plan for reorganizing the railroads, it will mean millions of losses through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans. In other words; there seems to be no sentiment for discontinuing and more practical manner of reorganizing them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Manifestly, if reorganizations are to occur, an arrangement for them should be made as soon as practicable, because many believe that as to some of the railroads, at least, it is impossible for them to continue operations indefinitely without reorganizations having relation to their present capitalization.

I take it that that is the thought that is in the mind of the Senator from Michigan—that reorganizations as contemplated by the amendment that was stricken out by the Senate committee would be helpful to the reestablishment of some of the railroads, at least, upon a sound and successful

Mr. COUZENS. That, Mr. President, is exactly my view, because what the Government has been doing through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to maintain the interest and maturities of bonds coming due, largely to prevent receiverships under the old system and the old plan. It is hoped that by setting up this plan, as proposed in the amendment which was taken out by the Judiciary Committee, the procedure will be simplified and further loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may not be necessary, because it is obvious that if we do not continue loans and if we do not pass this bill many of the railroads would have to go into receivership.

With respect to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], I desire to say that if there is either a continuation of loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the passage of the new bill providing for the reorganization of the railroads every dollar that is in this appropriation will be needed to satisfy the courts and others who participate in the reorganization or to satisfy the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that the settlement is a just and fair one as related to the values of the railroads. So it does not turn on the question raised by the junior Senator from Utah as to old valuations. I concur in what he says about old valuations. What we need now, if we are to do the job properly, is to ascertain what the property is worth to-day; and certainly, to protect the Government, we are justified in spending the money provided in the appropriation.

Mr. KING and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield; and to whom?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, information concerning the physical properties of the railroads has been ascertained during the period of nearly 20 years since this law has been upon the statute books, the ascertainment of which has cost the Government more than $50,000,000, when it was understood at the outset that it would cost only four or five millions.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator has overestimated the amount that has been expended by the Government.

Mr. KING. No; I think it is $50,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. By the Government alone? No: I think that is the combined amount that has been expended by the railroads and the Government together.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have the items here for each year; and the total amount is $51,022,000, including this year.

Mr. KING. That was my recollection.

Mr. COUZENS. That may be so; but the Senator has not estimated how much that has saved the users of the railroads by protecting them against higher rates.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not think it has ever saved them a nickel.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, replying to the last suggestion, the rates have been increasing notwithstanding the activities of this organization; but the question I was going to ask the Senator was this:

What superior information would the men in this organization have as to the value of property than the banks, or loans to the railroads until Congress has set up an efficient | the individuals, or the Senator from Michigan? A thing is worth what it will sell for. We know what the physical assets are. We know that the good will of the railroads is not very much, and perhaps the values which were placed upon the railroads were largely predicated upon the alleged good will. I was wondering what information they could give as to the value of railroads that would induce the Senator, if he were a banker, or if he were a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to extend credit of five, ten, fifteen, or a hundred million dollars to a group of railroads. He would know, of course, the physical assets, because they are apparent; but as to the market value, I am sure the Senator from Michigan is a far better judge than any of the experts in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

> Mr. COUZENS. In response to the Senator from Utah, I will say that if I were passing upon a loan or a reorganization plan it would be necessary to consider the value of the securities, whether they were first mortgages and a primary lien upon the property, whether they were junior mortgages, or refunding mortgages, or what; and, obviously, it would be necessary to know something about the physical values of the property and the divisions which the several mortgages cover; and it would also be necessary to know the relation of the earnings to the respective divisions of the

> For example, in a long discussion I had this morning with one of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, it was pointed out that even the railroad securities of to-day, in many cases, are bringing much less than the earnings of the railroads justify. For example, take a railway mortgage that is selling to-day for 12. If we should take the actual earning power of the railroad under to-day's depression we would find that it was earning sufficient to pay a return on that mortgage at 50. I mention that because the mere market value, or what a thing can be sold for to-day, is not necessarily the controlling factor as to the future.

> In that connection I wish to say that before the Finance Committee yesterday, as I think the Senator will remember, we had a considerable discussion as to whether loans to railroads or banks might be justified under to-day's values. It is alleged that these things can not be determined on today's values; and so we have to project ourselves into the future somewhat to determine whether ultimately these values are going to return to some normal point, or to some point along the line where they heretofore were.

> The Government must be protected if any loans are to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Government must be protected if the Interstate Commerce Commission is to authorize reorganizations and the issuance of securities. Certainly the governmental agencies that would authorize the reorganization of a railroad should not certify to the issuance of securities, either primary or junior, without having expert information not only as to the physical value of the property but as to the prospective earnings of the property; and it seems to me shortsighted policy to cut out a million dollars for maintaining that organization for one year.

Mr. DICKINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President— Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a short statement with reference to this situation.

I know of no place where we can save half a million dollars, without doing anybody any harm other than this

The strongest argument in favor of this item is the fact that it will require the furloughing of some of the personnel of the Interstate Commerce Commission engaged in this work. I do not like that. So far as the valuations that are necessary for the loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are concerned, I want to make this suggestion:

We have already had valuations of the 1,685 steam railroads that were listed for valuation. Those primary valuations have been completed. Throughout these records for the last 20 years it is shown all the while that after the valuations are once completed they could be kept current for $400,000 per year. Now we are told that for the purpose of making loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or for the purpose of the reorganization of the railroads under the bankruptcy act, we ought to carry this item in practically the full amount for next year.

If the emergency is as great as is suggested here on the floor of the Senate, most of this will have to be done before July 1, and this appropriation bill does not become effective until July 1. They have all of the data up to that date.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to have this question answered: I am impressed with what he says. If this thing is of no value, why have it at all? Why not cut it all out or let it all stay?

In other words, if the work is not going to be worth anything, we ought to cut it all out. If it is worth something, we ought to furnish enough money to carry it on.

Mr. DICKINSON. The reply I want to make to the Senator from Maryland is this: The commission say they have made their primary valuation; the rest of it is a completion of records, and so forth. All that is required is about half a million dollars to keep this work current. Instead of cutting down the way they should cut down, and saying, "We only want enough to keep the work current," they want to carry on for another year or two some of the ramifications that they have been in during the past few years.

As a matter of fact, under Order No. 3, the railroads are required to keep records of all changes in physical property and the cost thereof from the date of original valuation and to file summaries thereof.

They report to us-

This is a member of the commission testifying-

They report to us all changes in their properties, and we put people in the field—

Now. listen:

We put people in the field to check those reports.

I suppose if a railroad has a mile of road and it puts in a thousand new ties, it is desired that somebody from this bureau shall go out there and count the new ties. That is not necessary. We have these volutions summarized. We have them in shape, so that all we need to do is to check those reports on improvements and betterments to see whether or not they are in line with the usual and actual costs.

That is all that it is necessary to do. That is all the information that is necessary to make loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is all that is necessary for the reorganization of railroads under the bankruptcy act. It is all that is necessary for the Government to have all the information they need with reference to the valuation of the railroads.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to go a little further before I yield.

The recent railroad committee—and it was a good committee, and it has made some observations with reference to what should be done so far as the railroads are concerned—made its report only a little while ago. In section 2 I find this:

The policy of trying to appraise railroad properties on some selected basis of valuation and then saying that they are entitled to earn a fair return on this appraisal should be reconsidered. Where competition with trucks and other methods exists it will determine rates. In other cases rates must be regulated; but the basis of cost of operation under efficient management is a better general guide than any attempt to preserve capital structures regardless of economic trends. We see no reason why the ratemaking rule should not say in plain English that railroads are entitled to make a reasonable profit based upon costs of efficient operation, and that they are not entitled to earnings merely to preserve present structures if overcapitalized.

Unless the railroads are permitted reasonable earnings on the cost of efficient operation, there is no alternative to Government ownership and complete socialization of our railroad system. But that does not mean that railroads, any more than other industries, are entitled to a guaranty of earnings on their investments in property.

Those are the findings of a committee that has been appointed and has been making a special investigation of the whole railroad problem in this country; and yet we are saying that we want to continue the employment of a thousand people down here to check the railroads' inventories, to see whether or not they have put a new tie in where they have said they have or have put on a new iron where they have said they put it on, and keep up this detailed checking. The enforcement of prohibition was never in it with this class of investigation at all. I want to say that for the benefit of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings].

Mr. President, on top of this, this appropriation is not to become effective until the 1st day of July. If the crisis is such as described by the Senator from Michigan, it will be either on or over by that time.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has not visualized the situation at all, because it will not be over for two years, let alone by July 1. The reorganization and the setting up of the capital structure of these railroads under the amendment provided will take from a year to two years before it is definitely settled. The Senator has entirely overlooked, in his discussion, the changing commodity prices, and certainly the Senator does not mean that the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should base loans on the valuation of 1928 and 1929, without regard to what the valuation is as of to-day. There must be somebody with judgment to fix a valuation between the low point of to-day and the high point of 1928 and 1929.

Mr. DICKINSON. We have here $1,750,000, when they admit that it takes only $500,000 to keep the valuations up to date. Therefore all they have to do is to revise their figures by percentages, in accordance with the percentage of change, and we will have all the information the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any reorganization committee would need.

I admit that this provision would reduce the personnel in the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think they can meet that situation by furloughs. Mr. Lewis, in his testimony, said that for 1935 they will reduce their appropriation to $1,750,000. I am asking them to reduce it in the 1934 appropriation bill. If they can do it in two years, they can do it just twice that fast and do it in one year. There is no reason why Congress should appropriate an extra half a million dollars in order to carry on this work.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I would much prefer to take the judgment of Commissioner Eastman than even my own judgment, or the judgment of the Senator from Iowa. I have complete confidence in the judgment of Commissioner Eastman, who has devoted more hours and more years unselfishly and earnestly and honestly to the railroad problems than any Member of Congress ever has; and I do not exclude the Senator from Iowa or myself. When he says that, in his judgment, in order to maintain the service needed, this amount is necessary, I am willing to leave it to his judgment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I was going to ask the Senator, What is the use consuming time in an effort to have Congress reduce these expenses? We have authorized the President, in a certain measure, to make savings, which will go to the extent of eliminating the Interstate Commerce Commission if, in his judgment, that ought to be done. There can not be a reduction of $500,000 by a vote in Congress. What is the use taking up the time?

Mr. DICKINSON. My thought is this, that when it comes to a consolidation of these departments, the amount of money to be involved in the consolidation is to be a very important factor. We do have the right to limit this money if we will.

Mr. FESS. The Senator knows we are not going to do it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DICKINSON. Apparently not. Mr. FESS. Absolutely we are not.

Mr. DICKINSON. We cry "economy," but when we get a chance to vote we all vote the other way. I would like to have a roll call on this amendment. I want to see how many Senators want economy, and how many want to keep on spending the Government's money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the testimony given before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations this statement was made:

Under the Budget estimate for 1934 the commission expects, by the end of that fiscal year to have all valuation data brought down to a currency as of January 1, 1933, and that the amount of annual appropriation for subsequent years for keeping such information current, can be materially scaled down below its present level.

Then the witness gave the details, covering the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, that is the same type of statement those people have been making from 1921 down to date. When they started in they said they would complete the valuation in five years at a cost not to exceed $12,000,000. They have been at it 12 years, and the cost has been practically $50,000,000. They will make the same statement next year if we give them an opportunity.

Mr. SMOOT. We might as well vote upon it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, not being informed that this matter was to come up, I have not had an opportunity to obtain any current information, but at the time the item was up last June, when the appropriation bill was under consideration, I received a memorandum transmitted to me by Commissioner Eastman. At that time it was stated that the work of valuation was 80 per cent completed. In view of the statement just referred to by the Senator from Utah, which shows that substantial progress has been made, I wish to refer to the statement which will be found on page 14019 of the Record of last session. It is as follows:

The commission is in a position to produce within 60 days a reliable estimate of the current physical valuation of the railroads, as a whole or for the recognized rate groups. Such data were produced in the recent 15 per cent rate increase case, Exparte No. 103. While the commission can not now do this for each individual railroad, it will soon be able to do so, provided it is permitted to go ahead with its work.

Under present conditions and on the basis of present earnings and present market values for their securities, it may be argued that valuation of the physical properties of the railroads has lost all practical importance. But it was only a brief three or four years ago, when market prices for securities and reproduction cost indices were at top levels, that some estimates of aggregate railroad values ran as high as $40,000,000,000 or even $50,000,000,000. Based on past experience with prophecies, it is a rash man who can be sure that the situation will not change as radically in the other direction within the next three or four years.

Furthermore, the railroads have until recently been claiming the benefit of valuations based on reproduction costs much higher than original cost, and the tendency of the Supreme Court has

Furthermore, the railroads have until recently been claiming the benefit of valuations based on reproduction costs much higher than original cost, and the tendency of the Supreme Court has been to sustain them in such claims. At the present time reproduction costs are trending rapidly in the other direction. There are many railroads whose reproduction cost is now below original cost, and there soon will be more. Under these conditions the interest of both railroads and public utilities in physical valuation is evaporating. The public is clearly entitled to the services of an organization which can produce on short notice the facts in regard to current reproduction costs and current depreciation, and this is what the bureau of valuation, as at present organized and equipped, can do. It is impossible to say when the need for such information may arise.

It is at least conceivable that if the present economic depression continues, it may be necessary for the Government to take over the rallroads, as it did in the war emergency, for a period of time. If there should be need for such action in any one of a number of possible forms, the existence of a well-equipped bureau of valuation with complete valuation data at its command would be an invaluable protection to the country against possible unwarranted claims. Under such circumstances it would be folly now to disrupt and ruin this organization.

It requires years of time to build up a trained and experienced organization, such as the commission now has in its Bureau of Valuation. It takes only a short time to wreck such an organization, and that is what is now proposed. It is respectfully submitted that not even the present financial emergency is justification for such drastic action.

Mr. President, in addition to the other matters which I mentioned when I spoke a moment ago, concerning the importance of the services rendered by the valuation division, I neglected to recite the responsibilities fixed upon the commission in connection with reorganizations and mergers of railroads. It must pass upon those mergers, under the law, as they are presented, and, without a continuation of valuation work, the commission will be absolutely helpless in meeting the claims of the various railroads which are to be considered in a particular merger. It would be forced to take the value claimed by the individual carrier in such a situation.

If the Congress desires to abandon the valuation of railroads, we should have the matter presented in the form of an amendment to the act, and we should have an opportunity to test it out upon its merits. To propose an amendment as the Senator from Iowa has done, without giving any opportunity for a consideration of all of the facts in the case, seeking to secure a virtual abandonment of valuation by cutting the item in an appropriation bill, is not the proper way to proceed.

My understanding of the situation is this, that if the present item reported by the committee is permitted to stand in the bill, when the next appropriation bill is presented, sufficient progress will have been made in the process of continuing and completing valuation of roads so that it may be entirely possible to make a substantial reduction in the force of the Bureau of Valuation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The statement of the Senator from Iowa is not fair, that claims have constantly been made by those responsible for the work of valuation and that no progress has been made. On the contrary, progress has been made, although perhaps not as rapidly as those representing the commission hoped at the time they made their statements. Nevertheless, the fact is that on June 27, 1932, 80 per cent of the valuations were complete. As was said by the Senator from Utah in his statement, the commission is now prepared to estimate that if this appropriation is continued at its present figure, the valuation will be virtually completed in a relatively short time.

I think there is every reason to hope that it will be accomplished, for Mr. Lewis, who has been so long upon the commission, and who has rendered such excellent service, has, I understand, now been made the chief of the valuation division. We will then be in a position where, with a much smaller appropriation, we can provide a force which will be able to furnish, from the data they have then completed, accurate information for any use which the commission may have to make of it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. The same Mr. Lewis made this statement on February 6, 1926:

This was the so-called 3-year program which was accepted and on which we are now engaged.

He was at that time making exactly the same commitment he has now made, and to which the Senator is referring; and, on top of that, with the theory that the present valuation of railroads is not a proper basis for rate making, it will not be a proper basis for reorganization, it will have but very little value other than to furnish an inventory to show its completeness and as to how the roads could be reorganized, or what the valuation should be in the reorganization. So that most of the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, it seems to me, is beside the point.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa. If the railroads are going through receiverships and reorganization, certainly some protection must be afforded the public in the amount of stock which is to be issued by the new corporations. The Senator said the physical valuation will have nothing to do with that. I do not agree with him. Upon what value will we rest the issuance of the securities? Certainly in view of the past history of railroad finance I trust that we are not going to rely upon the judgment of the operators and owners of railroads and permit them to issue such amounts of stock as they deem suitable for their purposes.

Mr. President, if we are going to incorporate a provision in the bankruptcy law, which is the unfinished business, permitting railroads to come in and to have "ofie-day bankruptcy proceedings" and to reorganize, there certainly should be, in view of the long and black history of railroad finance in this country, some agency to protect the public interest. The Senator from Iowa, it seems to me, has not taken into consideration the important part which valuation will of necessity play if the public interest is to be protected. Therefore, I hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, permit the item to remain at its present figure, and give an opportunity for the completion of this important piece of work which has been undertaken and has been in progress for so many years.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I simply want to make the suggestion that the public is interested in the service it receives and the price it pays for it. The Interstate Commerce Commission are authorized to fix rates. Everyone knows now that they are no longer going to be able to permit the usage of a rate or to grant a rate that will pay a profit on the physical valuation, because the railroads can not get the traffic to carry at that price. In other words, the railroads are in competition now. They are no longer masters of the transportation of the country. They have competition in freight, they have competition in passenger traffic. They have competition in the automobile and they have competition in the air. Therefore, there is an entirely different situation.

The public interest is to be protected, yes; but it will be protected in two ways—first, by the competition which the railroads are compelled to face and, second, by the fact that we have the Interstate Commerce Commission that have the right to supervise and fix the rates. But to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission must continue to grant a rate that will pay a certain return on the valuation fixed by this bureau or by any other bureau is entirely in error. We are clear beyond that stage of operations so far as our transportation systems are concerned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the importance of the protection of the public in a reorganization will be very evident to him if he will read over the testimony taken in connection with the receivership of the Milwaukee Railroad. If there ever was an indication of the necessity for having the public interest protected in these reorganizations, that case certainly fully proves it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am very familiar with the reorganization of the Milwaukee Railroad. Having lived on it most of my life, I know something about the questions involved. But I want to say to the Senator now that if the Milwaukee road is compelled to continue to charge rates and make an effort to pay a reasonable return on its fixed valuation, it is facing receivership in the morrow, and I do not know but what it is still in receivership now as it was for a number of years. Therefore the Milwaukee Railroad has to adjust itself to where it charges for services it renders rather than attempting to charge upon the basis of a return on its valuation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, the Senator did not propose the amendment to the bill as it came over from the House in order that the amendment might be considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DICKINSON. I was not on the subcommittee, and I was not present at the meeting of the full committee when the bill was considered and reported out, or I should have presented it then.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment was not proposed at all to the committee, and the committee had no chance to consider it?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is true. Let me suggest to the Senator from Florida that this is a time-old discussion. It has been going on since 1913. The commission promised to complete the work in three to five years. In 1922 and in 1923 and again in 1924 they agreed upon a 3-year program. That time has come and gone and they are still asking for practically the same amount of money for which they originally asked. The result is we are simply dragging the thing out. They have now committed themselves to the point where they say that next year they will ask for only $1,750,000. With the work as nearly completed as it is now, with the work in the condition in which it now is, I am convinced they can close it down and put it in a position to be kept current, and can do it much more quickly than they have suggested, and the only way we can get them to do it is by reduction of the amount appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a great deal in what the Senator has said. I recall the discussion heretofore and some of the things that have taken place. I am sorry the work has been dragged out as long as it has, but I hesitate on the floor of the Senate to vote for an amendment offered on the floor which no committee has had any opportunity to examine and consider, and no chance has been given to bring the facts down to date. The House investigated very fully and very carefully, and hearings were held there; but the Senate committee have not considered the subject at all. There was no such amendment before them. I hesitate not only in this case but generally to vote for an amendment on the floor which has not been considered by a committee and about which there is a great variety of views. I quite agree with a good deal the Senator has said, but it appears now from those closely related to the subject that there is need for the work to be continued. I am not in the position to say that it should not be continued.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Iowa left the impression that these appropriations had not been reduced. I want to refer to the fact that in 1931 the valuation division had $3,547,313; in 1932 they had $3,554,368; and in 1933 they had $2,750,000. So that since 1931 there has been a reduction in the appropriation of nearly $300,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. In 1915 the appropriation was $2,330,000; in 1916 it was $3,000,000; in 1917 it was $3,500,000; in 1918, $3,500,000; in 1919, $3,575,000; in 1920, $3,000,000; in 1921, $2,750,000. There is the one place where they promised, "If you will give us more money, we will complete the work." In 1922 the amount was reduced to $1,750,000. In 1923 they were given $1,300,000; in 1924, $1,250,000; in 1925, $1,065,000; in 1926, $1,946,000; in 1927, $287,000 plus an unexpended balance of $1,715,000; in 1928, $2,563,000; in 1929, $2,200,000; in 1930, $2,539,000.

The $3,000,000 appropriation to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers was when they again said, "If you will give us a 3-year program, we will complete the work." But they still have to have $2,313,000 in order to carry on the work.

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield that I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if he does not appreciate the fact that last year and this year the valuation that was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission respecting the Grand Central Post Office site in the city of New York saved the Government of the United States $5,000,000 in that one case alone? There are several scores of those cases where the Postmaster General and the Treasury Department may make a request for the valuation. The valuation relates to property either owned by the railroad companies or property that is valued for the purpose of forming a basis upon which adjoining or adjacent railroad property may be subject to valuation. If the Postmaster General and the Treasury Department will avail themselves of the information gathered by the Valuation Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the saving to the Government of the United States will pay the appropriation now proposed for the next 10 or 15 years just on a few of those sites alone.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that I have no objection to the organization being continued, but I do not think that in order to appraise a post-office site in New York City we need a thousand men on the pay roll, nor 750 men on the pay roll, nor 500 men on the pay roll. I may suggest that the amount which I have proposed, $1,750,000, will mean about 600 men on the pay roll, and for that reason the work is available to the very type of service suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have served on the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate for 10 years. One of the subjects that comes to that committee constantly is the railroad situation with reference to reorganization and the operations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Perhaps the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] can refresh my recollection on the point I am about to mention. As I recall, when this proposal was first offered—and I will ask the Senator from Utah if I am correct—it was stated that it would not take over $2,000,000 to complete the work of railroad valuation and that it could probably be concluded within three years.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, going back into the history of the item, that up to the appropriation of last year $44,633,000 had been appropriated.

Mr. FESS. I am aware of that, but what I wanted to ascertain from the Senator was the correctness of my recollection. Were we not led to believe when the original measure was introduced and passed that the work would not take over two years to complete and that it would not cost over $2,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember the amount which it was estimated the work would cost, but it was a small amount.

Mr. FESS. A very small amount, and the time within which the work would be completed was very limited.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the time was limited.

Mr. FESS. I have just been handed the statement that was made before the committee on the occasion when the legislation was before it, and the statement was made that Professor Adams, the statistician, had said that he considered this matter when he was with us a few years ago and his final estimate was, as well as he could judge, that it would probably take $3,000,000 for the valuation.

That is the impression that I have had from the beginning, that it was understood that the work was going to be very quickly done and that it was not going to cost much. I rose to my feet to ask the Senator from Utah, for I thought he would know, what has taken place to prolong this work for 20 years at this enormous cost, when originally it was thought it would only cost $3,000,000 and require two years to complete it. What has been added?

Mr. SMOOT. In the first place, I want to say to the Senator that I think if he will go back into the record he will find that a great many of us at the time stated that the work could never be done for the amount of money then estimated. Of course, changes have taken place in the years that have passed since the first appropriation was made. I suppose a revaluation of many roads in receivership has been required, but, as I have said, I believe that almost everybody who considered the first estimate knew that the work could not be done within that estimate.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true whenever we establish some bureau or office of a temporary character that, unless it is very closely observed by Congress, it comes to be of permanent character? Is that not true?

Mr. SMOOT. The history of our Government bears the Senator's statement out, I think, in every particular.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the first suggestion I had that the valuation division was to be a permanent organization was from the letter of Commissioner Eastman. He wants to know why we should wreck it? The organization, he states, could easily be wrecked and he asks why it should not be continued? That is the first statement I have heard that it is to be permanent, and that any effort to discontinue it will be not in unison with the desires of the commission. That is not disclosed here, but that is in conformity with the uniform history of all the departments of the Government. A new bureau or agency, whether it be the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Trade Commission or this independent commission or that dependent commission, is recommended to be created.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I am not yielding to anyone just now.

When such new agencies are created naturally, they grow by accretion, unless when making the appropriations we are constantly on guard to prevent it. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wanted to make an inquiry. I may repeat something said when I was not in the Chamber, but, as I understand, in order for the railroad valuation work to be beneficial to the country we must make it permanent. In other words, when we get a valuation as of a certain date the valuation the next year may be different, and if the division remains in existence the valuation can easily be continued. Is not that the object of the appropriation?

Mr. FESS. If that is the theory, let us stop the discussion right now. If the valuation division, created 20 years ago, at which time it was expected that the work would be completed in 2 or 3 years, as was stated before the committee—and it was also stated that it would not cost over $3,000,000—is to be made permanent, then let us make an annual appropriation; and I have not anything more to say. But I am concerned, after the promise made almost every year for the last 20 years, that the work was going to be completed, that it should be proposed to continue it indefinitely.

Mr. NORRIS. It has been practically completed, has it not?

Mr. FESS. Last year 80 per cent of it was completed.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator-

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am not yielding further. I rose simply to make the observation that this discussion has disclosed two things: The first is that a temporary organization, unless we remain constantly on guard, will become a permanent organization. In this case a bureau which was originally intended to be of a temporary nature, lasting for 2 or 3 years, has continued for 20 years; and now the argument is made that it is to be permanent, and there should be no assault upon it. That is the first thing disclosed.

The other is that it is perfect folly for us to talk about reducing any appropriations in this or in the other body.

That can not be done, and that is one reason why I have urged from the beginning that we have got to give authority elsewhere to do the thing that we ought to do but we will not do because of pressure. That is why I urged that such authority to be given President Hoover, and, not having given it to him, that is why I voted during consideration of the bill recently passed by the Senate to give such authority to President-elect Roosevelt. We are going to give him, if that provision shall finally become a law, as I think it will, sufficient authority, but it may extend even to the total abolition of some of the independent organizations of the Government. I am not free to go to the extent of giving to the President the authority to do what the law would otherwise forbid him to do; that is, I do not want to delegate to the Executive power to make or repeal legislation by his own decree; I think that goes too far; but where there is waste, such as there appears to be in almost all the independent bureaus and establishments, that could be corrected by consolidations, transfers, and so on, I think there is no way for us to bring about any saving along that line except to give the authority to the Executive, and I am perfectly willing to go that far.

I desire merely to add that when a new Government agency is created, though it is stated at the time that it will be but temporary, there will be sufficient interest on the part of those connected with it to cause them to exert influence to continue its activities and add to them until what started in a small way gradually grows until it assumes large proportions, and the cost, which was originally slight, gradually becomes enormous. That is inherent in organization itself. Much of the insistence in this case comes from the Interstate Commerce Commission itself and not from Members of this body, and we listen to their recommendations in spite of the committee raising the question constantly as to whether or not a continuation of the appropriation is wise. We are inclined to give heed to the commission, and when we come to consider economy here their voice and not ours is to be final. I know we are not going to make this reduction-not because we ought not to make it, but simply because we will not make it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator in discussing the permanency of the valuation division and the suggestion that the pending proposal would wreck the commission made reference to a memorandum from which I had read.

Mr. FESS. I referred to the letter from Commissioner Eastman.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In justice to the commission I simply wanted to point out that the memorandum was submitted at a time when it was proposed that the appropriation to be provided last year should be cut from $3,554,000 to $750,000, which would have been a cut of something like 78 or 79 per cent. That led to the statement that such a drastic cut would wreck the commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has just attributed to Congress virtues which many persons believe it does not possess, or at least that it is not exhibiting. Certainly there is no evidence that the present Congress is demonstrating a greater desire to reduce expenditures in the Federal Government than the preceding Congresses. With knowledge of a certain deficit for the current year of approximately $2,000,000,000, and with the certainty of a larger deficit for the next fiscal year, unless drastic cuts are made in Federal expenditures, Congress fails to apply the pruning knife to appropriation bills.

It is not an agreeable task to challenge attention to alleged defects in legislation or unsound or unwise measures which receive the attention of committees and of Congress; but I can not escape the feeling that it is the duty of Senators to oppose measures which they regard as devoid of merit, and appropriation bills which they believe carry improper and extravagant appropriations.

The bill before us carries more than $1,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year. It furnishes convincing proof that promised reductions in Federal expenses have been forgotten or repudiated; it carries an enormous appropriation for the Veterans' Bureau, notwithstanding the situation calls for reductions in the bureau which deals with veterans' legisMr. President, upon several occasions during this session of Congress I have challenged attention to the failure of Congress, as shown by the bills reported by committees, to live up to platform pledges made by the two great political parties. The appropriation bills which have come to the Senate during this session have carried, in my opinion, hundreds of millions of dollars in excess of what can be justified under the conditions of the Treasury and the economic condition of the country.

It is to be regretted that platform pledges are treated with contumely. The enormous deficit for the last fiscal year, as well as a certainty of a nearly $2,000,000,000 deficit for this fiscal year, demands of Congress drastic cuts in appropriations for the next fiscal year. Many cities, counties, and States are attempting to balance their budgets and in so doing are cutting expenses, reducing the salaries of employees, and inaugurating economies and reorganizations calculated to aid in meeting present emergencies. In many parts of the country taxpayers are organizing for the purpose of reducing the amount of taxes and are also demanding of those agencies authorized to levy taxes that material reductions be made in the levies for the coming year. Incontrovertible evidence is furnished that millions of people are unable to pay their local taxes, and many are defaulting in meeting their Federal-tax obligations.

The value of many forms of property has been reduced almost to the vanishing point, and persons who a few years ago possessed incomes are now wholly without means of support. Those who own real estate are sufferers from the decline in the value of property, and they are the ones who are experiencing the greatest difficulty in paying the taxes levied upon their property by States and their political subdivisions. The people of the United States, as well as the Federal, State, and municipal Governments, have indulged for a number of years in a wild orgy in expenditures. There can be no justification for expenditures by our Federal and State Governments of approximately fifteen billions of dollars such as has been the case during this and preceding fiscal years.

Notwithstanding the heavy and indeed unjustifiable expenditures by Federal and State Governments, it seems impossible to reduce expenditures or to bring the minds of legislative bodies, State and Federal, to a realization of the unwise, unsound, and dangerous course of continuing appropriations upon the same high plane as that which has existed for a number of years. When bureaus have been created and Federal agencies organized and a large personnel entrenched behind civil-service laws, it is almost impossible to effectuate reforms, or to relieve the people of burdens which this bureaucratic system places upon the backs of the people.

The Democratic Party in its convention last July was pledged to reduce governmental expenditures 25 per cent. The Republican Party also insisted that Federal expenses should be reduced. But platform pledges, Mr. President, seem to be meaningless; they certainly are not being observed by either of the great political parties. In view of these pledges those who believe that they were made in good faith and should be fulfilled, must look with astonishment, if not with indignation, at the failure of both political parties to live up to their pledges. I know it is repetition, and useless repetition, to protest against these appropriation bills that are brought to the floor of the Senate.

I think that a majority of the American people expected relief from these heavy Federal burdens; but when this session of Congress shall have adjourned and the people have had an opportunity to appraise the work of Congress and to learn of the stupendous sums appropriated, there will be a rising tide of criticism leveled at the National Legislature for its defaults. I appreciate, however, that there are many of our citizens who are demanding larger appropriations and who are insisting upon the Federal Government appropriating billions of dollars in excess of the amount needed for legitimate governmental purposes. Within this group are found those who insist that the Government, notwithstanding the Treasury is empty and deficits are daily increasing, shall issue billions of dollars to meet the mort-gaged indebtedness of the people, to protect bank depositors, to discharge pressing obligations of the railroads, to aid industrial corporations as well as private persons in their business undertakings. Many of the people fail to understand that Governments are maintained only by taxes wrung from the people.

The credit of governments can only be maintained when its finances are adequate to meet its obligations. Of course, a country possessing the resources found in the United States with a reasonably efficient and economical government may enjoy great credit, and can therefore borrow money within reasonable limits to meet emergencies or to meet temporary deficits; but no government, regardless of its wealth and prestige, can indefinitely extend credit and issue bonds to meet expenditures without having its credit impaired and ultimately coming to grief. I have had occasion to say within the past few days that the credit of the National Government must be maintained; that our whole economic, industrial, and political structure rests upon the faith and credit the people have in their Government. In this view there is a solemn obligation resting upon Congress to take no steps to destroy the prestige and the credit of the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, this bill as well as other appropriation bills which we have considered, conclusively demonstrates that this Congress is not sufficiently impressed with the imperative necessity of the strictest economy in government operations. It is apparent that the appropriation bills in the aggregate that will be passed this session of Congress will exceed by approximately $1,000,000,000 limits which safety and prudence and wisdom demand. I am advised that the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill, which recently passed the Senate and went to conference, will soon be returned to the Senate with the reductions and economies which the Senate attempted to incorporate into the bill, eliminated by the action of the conferees supported by the House.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] who has just in a very lucid manner referred to the failure of Congress whenever organizations are created for temporary purposes, to abolish them or to reduce expenses.

Mr. President, it seems to me we lack the courage and the wisdom, and apparently the ability, to inaugurate reforms in the administration of the Government. It has been claimed that Congress is controlled by active minorities; by organizations of Federal employees and by factors extraneous to the Government itself. Certain it is that when reforms are suggested and reductions in Federal expenses advocated, there is a powerful mobilization of forces to frustrate such efforts. I should add that aside from these organizations and forces to which I have referred, many of the constituents of Senators and Congressmen lift their voices in protest against movements to effect reforms in the Government service and to reduce expenses of the Government. Unfortunately there is a growing demand for the Government to exercise greater authority; to create additional bureaus and to introduce socialistic or semisocialistic policies into our economic, industrial, and political life. The suggestion has been made during the discussion upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] that we may soon be confronted with the governmental ownership of railroads. Undoubtedly there has been for a number of years a movement supported by many in favor of the Government taking over all the railroads of the United States. This movement has been enlarged during the past few years and seeks to have the Government take over all public utili-

Mr. President, it is to be hoped that these movements, socialistic in character, or at least paternalistic and bureaucratic, may not assume larger proportions. Rather it is to be hoped that the owners of the railroads will inaugurate needed reforms, modify their capital structures, and adopt policies that will make the railroads effective instrumentalities for the service of the people and for the benefit and profit of the owners.

Yesterday we listened, and I hope with deep respect and reverence, to the reading by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] of Washington's Farewell Address. Annually both Houses of Congress convene for the purpose of drawing strength from that great reservoir of wisdom and knowledge. It has been a source of inspiration to the people of the United States, and succeeding generations will find in it guidance to meet problems that will arise. Washington declared that—

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit.

I pause to remark, Are we observing this wise counsel? Are we cherishing public credit when we fail to observe those principles of thrift and economy so essential in public as in private life? Profligate expenditures, waste, and extravagance in government, indifference to enormous appropriations; all these indicate that we are not observing the requirement that we should "cherish public credit."

I read further from the Farewell Address:

One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear.

Mr. President, it is iteration, indeed reiteration, to challenge attention to our growing deficits and the aggregate deficit for the two preceding fiscal years and the present fiscal year of $6,000,000,000. Moreover it is apparent that we are lacking in moderation and wisdom, when after we made appropriations for the next fiscal year, there will be added to the $6,000,000,000 the deficits of two or three billions more. With the fountains of taxation drying up, and with our collections from customs constantly shrinking, it is obvious that the revenues for the next calendar and the next fiscal year will be below the low levels for this fiscal year or the next calendar year, all of which indicate continued deficits, dangerous to the credit of our Government.

Mr. President, the bonded indebtedness of the Government exceeds $21,000,000,000. The interest charges upon this enormous sum is an important addition to the annual appropriations for the Government. In order that the credit of the Government be preserved, provision must be made for the amortization of these governmental obligations.

Returning to the Farewell Address-

The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate.

Washington understood the importance of public opinion. Public opinion in the end will control, but public opinion is sometimes misdirected. The public may not be advised as to all the facts involved in governmental policies and national concerns. Jefferson believed in the competency of the people to govern themselves, but this belief rested upon the proposition that the public should be informed in regard to their Government and its policies. He insisted upon education, upon the avenues of knowledge being opened to the people. He believed that if they knew the facts their judgment in the end would be a safe guide for the Republic.

Unfortunately the public are not always acquainted with the facts involved in questions and problems, political and economic. Oftentimes clouds darken the skies and the light does not shine upon the pathway of the people. Not infrequently misleading and dangerous propaganda is disseminated, and as a result of misinformation, demands are made inconsistent with sound policies or constitutional provisions. Washington further stated:

To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Mr. President, recurring to the discussion upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, my friend from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] a few moments ago stated, in substance, that there had been no hearing upon the proposition to reduce the appropriation carried in the bill for the valuation of the railroads, and he was therefore, while sympathizing with the motion, disposed to not support it. I have examined the hearings before the House and Senate committees, and there is nothing, in my opinion, to justify the large appropriation carried in the bill for the purpose indicated. I do not desire to be critical of committees, particularly committees serving the legislative body at the other end of the Capitol; but I confess that an examination of the hearings upon many of the appropriation bills, or many of the items carried in such bills, fails to supply adequate information to justify the appropriations demanded.

The fact is that representatives of departments, bureaus, and Federal agencies are vitally interested in appropriation bills. It is seldom that any person is heard by committees in opposition to the appropriation bills reported to the House or to the Senate. The witnesses who do appear are interested in securing appropriations; they come usually with prepared statements, ready to support their demands for appropriations; but an examination of many of the hearings reveals that witnesses appearing are subjected to no cross-examination, and their statements are seldom challenged. The representatives of the bureaus and departments usually state that a given sum is required for certain purposes or that various amounts are necessary for the bureau or agency for which they speak. I repeat that many of the hearings fail to justify the appropriations recommended.

Mr. President, it seems to me that full opportunity should be given to the public to oppose these demands, to appear before committees and express their opposition and furnish reasons therefor. Moreover, it would be in the interest of the public and of economy if one or more persons were employed to cross-examine the witnesses who appear before committees in support of the appropriations and compel complete disclosures of all facts pertinent to the matters under consideration. I repeat that too many of the examinations are superficial and the facts adduced are unconvincing.

With respect to the item of $2,313,542 appropriated for the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry on the valuation of the property of carriers, I respectfully submit there is no evidence in the hearings either of the House or the Senate to justify this appropriation. Substantially the same inadequate and imperfect testimony appears in the hearings as appears in hearings upon former appropriation bills. I think that it is not inaccurate to state that the hearings simply show that the representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission desire this large sum and in effect say that if it is not obtained, a number of employees in the Interstate Commerce Commission will be furloughed.

For years the Interstate Commerce Commission has been submitting requests for large appropriations for the so-called "valuation of the railroads." In my opinion, this so-called valuation of railroads ought to have been completed years ago; indeed in 1913, as the record shows, when a bill was passed providing for obtaining the valuation of the railroads, the claim was made that the work could be completed in two or three years at a cost to not exceed $3,000,000. As the Senator from Iowa stated, more than $51,000,000 have been appropriated, and still millions are requested for the next fiscal year with every assurance that additional millions will be required for subsequent years. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in my opinion, has not been frank with Congress; it has not dealt in a candid way with the work of the Valuations Commission.

I have carefully examined the bill before us. It carries more than $1,000,000,000, and there is scarcely an item of appropriation in the bill that should not be materially reduced. I shall not vote for the bill in its present form. I believe that it has not been sufficiently considered by the appropriate Senate committees, and that it carries in the aggregate a large sum in excess of what is fair or just. I appreciate that the Senate will act adversely upon any efforts to cut the appropriations in this bill. I am tempted to move before the bill passes that it be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the aggregate amount of appropriations by at least 10 per cent. I have submitted similar motions with respect to many appropriation bills, but such motions have been rejected by the Senate.

Mr. President, there are many people in the United States who are watching Congress and demanding that the appropriations shall be reduced. Protests are not infrequent; but Congress seems indifferent to the effects of these extravagant, if not profligate, appropriations that are made and to the consequences of these mounting deficits.

It is unfortunate that so little interest is manifested in the Senate when appropriation bills are under consideration. Only a limited number of Senators, except when some hotly contested item is under consideration, are in attendance when appropriation bills carrying hundreds of millions of dollars are before us. It is true that committees are in session and many Senators are compelled to be absent from the Chamber when important bills are before this body because of the demands made upon their time by the numerous committees which are in session during most hours of the day. Nevertheless I can not help but believe that when economies are so imperatively demanded, every item of appropriation should be carefully scrutinized and appropriation bills should be reduced to the lowest possible limits. A balanced Budget will tend to restore confidence. If the people know that Congress is determined to apply business principles in the conduct of governmental affairs, and is determined to cut out unnecessary expenses, abolish many bureaus and agencies and keep expenditures within the revenues of the Government, then a step forward will have been taken towards the summit of confidence and prosperity.

Mr. President, while I have the floor I desire very briefly to call attention to a number of items of appropriation carried in the bill. Many of these items justify the contention which I am making that this bill carries appropriations beyond the needs of the Government and which in this period of depression can not be justified. In my opinion the appropriations for the Board of Mediation and Tax Appeals should be reduced. The appropriation for the former amounts to $132,483 and the appropriation for the latter aggregates $545,000. Both of these organizations are necessary, but without impairing their usefulness reductions should be made in the appropriation for each.

On page 9 of the bill is an appropriation amounting to more than $146,000 for the so-called Bureau of Efficiency. That bureau was organized for the purpose of promoting efficiency in the Government service. It has failed to meet the expectations of its sponsors. A measure was passed a few weeks ago either by the House or the Senate abolishing this bureau.

The provision for its abolition is found in one of the bills now in conference. In view of that fact it seems to me that this item should be stricken from the bill. It seems, Mr. President, that when a bureau or executive agency is created it becomes immortal; it entrenches itself and has sufficient resources and influence to defy all assaults from Congress. Mr. President, bureaus and Federal agencies and instrumentalities stand like the great pyramids; they can not be moved and they look with complacency upon attacks from all sources. The Senator from Ohio a few moments ago, with his experience and wisdom, indicated how futile are the attempts to bring about reforms in the executive departments of the Government.

An appropriation of more than $1,374,000 is carried in this bill for the Civil Service Commission. Mr. President, this organization has not accomplished the results which its protagonists claimed it would accomplish. Its personnel has been increased and its appropriations have likewise been increased.

Nearly $800,000 of this sum is to pay the salaries and expenses of the commissioners, and the personnel of the commission who are in the District of Columbia. More than $400,000 is carried in the bill for the salaries of the field force, and other items are found in the bill, making the aggregate, as I have stated, of more than $1,374,000. Mr. President, there should be a reduction in this appropriation of at least $100,000.

Mr. President, there are large appropriations for employees of the Compensation Commission and the Federal Board for Vocational Education and for so-called vocational rehabilitation. I have examined the hearings and in my opinion these appropriations are too large. There should be reasonable reductions in the appropriation for each of these organizations.

The Federal Farm Board is still in existence, and there is an item of $500,000,000 carried in the bill. If I understand the language of the bill, it is to meet some of its expenses between the 1st of July and the 31st of December of this year. Bills are pending in both branches of Congress for the abolition of this organization. A number of bills before committees restrict its operations and seek to transfer whatever vestiges of the organization remain to the Department of Agriculture. It is quite likely, Mr. President, that within the near future, under the reorganization which will soon be effected in the Government departments, the act creating the Farm Board will be greatly modified if not repealed, and the Agricultural Department will be charged with the responsibility of performing such duties now discharged by the board as Congress may devolve upon it. There is a general feeling that the Farm Board has failed to accomplish that for which it was created. More than $400,000,000 have been lost in the operations of the board, and what additional losses will be sustained it is difficult to determine. Undoubtedly most of the $500,000,000 taken from the taxpayers has been lost, and the Treasury of the United States will probably lose a considerable part of whatever assets now remain.

Mr. President, the bill carries a large appropriation, nearly $800,000 for the Radio Commission. While that organization is important, in my opinion there should be a material reduction in the appropriations provided in this bill for it. The Senate a few moments ago materially increased the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission. In my opinion I do not think the situation was such as to justify so large an increase.

Mr. President, the bill carries a very large appropriation for the General Accounting Office. This bureau has been of incalculable benefit to the Government. It must be continued, but I believe that the appropriation of nearly $4,000,000 is not warranted at the present time.

The appropriation carried in the bill for the Interstate Commerce Commission can not be defended. Its expenditures for years have been too great. Mr. President, I have referred to the item of $2,313,542 providing for the valuation of railroads. In my opinion this amount is entirely too large.

When I came to the Senate in 1917 I made an investigation of the genesis of the provisions providing for the valuation of railroads. I recall that it was claimed, as has been stated, that the work could be accomplished within two or three years at a cost not exceeding two or three millions of dollars. After making an examination I reached the conclusion that the work which was being performed did not justify expenditures beyond the amount originally asked for, and in 1917 or 1918 I offered a bill repealing the provisions of the law requiring such valuation. Each year since 1913 large appropriations have been demanded and received, until, as the record shows, more than $50,000,000 have been absorbed in this undertaking, the results of which are not commensurate with the expenditures. The reports of valuation have no limit of finality, and do not constitute a sufficient basis upon which to rest judgments or findings as to the value of the properties of the railroads of the United States.

I am in accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Iowa. However, Mr. President, I shall insist, when the next appropriation bill comes before the Senate dealing with the Interstate Commerce Commission, that there be important reductions in any appropriation which shall be made in behalf of the valuation section.

Mr. President, I do not approve of the appropriation provided in the bill for the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital. I protest against the enormous sum carried in the bill amounting to $2,568,235,000. I also object to the enormous appropriations which have been made for Federal buildings in the District of Columbia. The cost of the Department of Commerce Building can not be justified, nor can appropriations for other Federal buildings be justified at this time.

Mr. President, I believe that the appropriation for the Tariff Commission is excessive. There should be a reduction made. The bill carries a large sum for the United States Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. These organizations have been the recipients of hundreds of millions-indeed billions of dollars. The bill in effect provides for $50,000,000 to carry out the merchant marine act of 1920 and also carries an item of nearly $3,000,000 for the salaries of the Fleet Corporation assigned to the Shipping Board. One million dollars is provided to meet the expenses of liquidating some of the ships and property of the corporation and $10,000,000 is reappropriated to enable the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to operate ships or lines of ships which have been taken back from purchasers by reason of competition or other methods employed by foreign shipowners or operators. In other words, ships which are sold may be taken back by this corporation and operated at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States

Under the head of Veterans' Administration, the bill carries an appropriation aggregating $945,988,634. I regret that the committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the entire question involved in appropriations for veterans has not concluded its labors and of course has not submitted its report to Congress.

Mr. President, I can only repeat what I have so imperfectly stated, that this as well as other appropriation bills which have been before the Senate, impose a great burden upon the taxpayers of the United States.

I appreciate that opposition to the bill will be ineffective. I can only protest against its passage in its present form. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when an amendment of the importance and merit of the one just rejected fails to command any considerable support it indicates the unwillingness of the Senate to support platform pledges or efforts to

Mr. President, on page 9, I move to strike out lines 7 to 15, inclusive, being the provision for an appropriation of $143,600 for the Bureau of Efficiency. In connection with the motion I desire to read from a letter addressed by the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. McCarl, to the Mon. FREDERICK E. STEIWER, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That committee has under consideration a bill offered by me for the abolition of this bureau. Without reading all of the letter I invite particular attention to the part bearing upon the motion which I have just made:

The act of May 10, 1916, in making an appropriation for the Bureau of Efficiency included to enable it "to investigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service.

That was the purpose of it. It was recognized by Congress that there were duplications and inefficiency in executive departments; and it was thought that if a bureau of efficiency was created and given authority to go into the governmental organizations and weed out the inefficient and incompetent employees, and ascertain where parallel activities might be avoided and economies obtained, there would be great savings to the taxpayers.

This additional purpose was continued in the appropriation acts of March 3, 1917, and July 3, 1918, the appropriation act of March 3, 1917, also including certain other investigations to be reported to Congress at the next regular session. By the act of May 16, 1928, the powers and duties of the Bureau of Efficiency prescribed by law with reference to investigations in the executive departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government were extended to include the municipal Government of the District of Columbia.

That was wholly unnecessary and wholly undesirable from my point of view and from my understanding of the work of the District Committee of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if the economy provision becomes a law, of course, this appropriation will not be effective, but we have to provide in this bill for the Bureau of Efficiency in case the economy provision of the appropriation bill does not become a law. I will say to the Senator that if it does, then, of course, this money will not be expended.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course the economy provision, abolishing the Bureau of Efficiency, will not become the law. The bill has been in conference for some time and has been reported back to the House, and I believe the House has stricken that provision out. But whether that has been done yet or not is immaterial, because it will be done eventually. That was one of the real economy items in the bill that was adopted. It will be remembered that the House unanimously, as I recall, joined the majority in the Senate to strike out the 5 per cent Bratton amendment, so called, which brought about a saving of about $150,000,000; and another amendment which brought about another saving of $19,000,000; and another one which I offered, relating to tax refunds, which probably would have resulted in a saving of not less than $50,000,000; or a total of more than ciency shall be abolished, and we do not strike it out, we $200,000,000. In other words, if I understood the result of the conference report, it is that substantially all of the economies which the Senate committee spent months in bringing about and which the Senate adopted, have been utterly destroyed in conference, and we will have practically no economy.

The Bureau of Efficiency is like a fifth wheel of a wagon. The head of the bureau is a very delightful gentleman by the name of Herbert D. Brown. This bureau is maintained in order to keep him in office. We might as well call things by their right names. It is of no earthly use to this Government. All the service that is rendered is performed in a much better way by the Comptroller General's Office and by the Bureau of the Budget. It is merely a bureau for the benefit of one man; and we have kept it going year by year at a cost of about $150,000, which means, in the aggregate, in the neighborhood of two and one-half million dollars or three million dollars of expenditures that are fastened on the American people in these hard times. It is a wicked misuse of Government funds.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska in a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Utah striking out this provision will be adopted, as it ought to be adopted, for, as I have said, there is no earthly use of continuing it.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. As I understand, the Bureau of Efficiency has already been abolished by a bill which has passed the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senate struck out the provision for the Bureau of Efficiency, but when the bill went to conference the amendment of the Senate was stricken out.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the House had agreed to that provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was stricken out by a majority of the conferees and then by the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I had a misconception, then. I had an idea that the House had agreed to the amendment; and if that were true, there would be no use of this appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Under a bill which has previously passed the Senate the Bureau of Efficiency was transferred to the Bureau of the Budget. That was in the economy section of the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill. Nothing was said as to how many of the employees of the bureau should be transferred to the Budget Bureau, but the work now being performed by the Bureau of Efficiency was to be transferred to the Bureau of the Budget. At the present time it does not look as if we are going to pass that bill at this session of Congress. Therefore the House put in this bill the provision which appears for the Bureau of Efficiency. That is the program exactly as it is.

I will say to the Senate that if the economy bill shall pass, and if the Bureau of Efficiency shall be transferred to the Bureau of the Budget, then, of course, this appropriation will not be used at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, the Senator, it seems to me, ought to agree to this amendment. If the Bureau of Efficiency shall be abolished there will be no need for this appropriation and it ought to be stricken out. On the other hand, if the House view prevails, and the Bureau of Efficiency is retained, then the Senate could recede from its amendment. If we leave the provision in this bill it will not be in conference. The only way to get it into conference is to strike it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. If, in the meantime, the Bureau of Effi-will have made an appropriation and there will be no way to rectify the mistake of making an appropriation for a bureau that does not exist.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct. If the conferees do not act upon this bill before action is taken and an agreement reached on the economy provisions of the bill which has already passed, we would have to hold this bill up until we finally agree upon the other bill.

Mr. NORRIS. It would naturally follow that action on the other bill would take precedence over action on the pending bill, because the other bill has already been in conference for some time.

Mr. SMOOT. We would not succeed in getting all the appropriation bills through if we had to wait upon the conference report on the other bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Have the conferees agreed on that bill? Mr. SMOOT. They have not.
Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the only safe thing to do is to strike out the provision from this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. And let it go to conference?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, that is the only proper thing to do, in my judgment.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield further

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read from section 14 of the economy bill, as follows:

Sec. 14. The Bureau of Efficiency and the office of chief of such bureau are hereby abolished; and the President is authorized to designate another officer to service in place of the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency on any board, commission, or other agency of which the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency is now a member.

Under the present law he is a member of a number of boards and commissions. Then the economy bill provides that all records of the Bureau of Efficiency shall be turned over to the Bureau of the Budget, in which so much of the present work of the Bureau of Efficiency is duplicated.

I think the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Nebraska are entirely right, and, under any circumstances, this provision ought to be stricken out of the pending bill and the matter carried to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague. Mr. SMOOT. The only thing that would happen would be that this bill might be held up for perhaps weeks, although there are some provisions of the bill that ought to become a law. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that by striking out this provision it will be in conference, but the conferees could not agree upon this bill, as evidently the House could not agree, because they have already taken action regarding the Bureau of Efficiency, until it is finally decided what will become of the economy provisions of the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill. That is all there is to it. I care not whether we strike this item out or not, other than for the reasons I have mentioned.

Mr. KING. Then, I ask my colleague to accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to deceive my colleague in the matter, I am willing to let it go out, but if there shall be a deadlock on the economy provisions of the Treasury and Post Office bill I do not want to be charged with being disloyal to the Senate if the Senate conferees have to yield on this item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels that he should call attention to the fact that the amendment should include lines 16, 17, and 18, because those two appropriations ought to go together.

Mr. KING. I thank the Chair for the suggestion and I so modify my motion.

Mr. SMOOT. The portion of the bill referred to by the Chair is a part of the provision and should also go out.

Mr. KING. I include in my motion lines 6 to 17, inclusive. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah IMr.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from Mr. McCarl bearing upon this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter referred to is as follows:

> COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, March 23, 1932.

Hon. FREDERICK STEIWER

Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, United States Senate.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: There has been considered your request for report on S. 2488, pending before your committee, and particularly with reference to any information that this office may furnish as to any saving that might result if such legislation were enacted into law.

The bill provides, in substance, that there shall be abolished the Bureau of Efficiency; that all the records and papers of such bureau shall be transferred to the United States Civil Service Com-bureau shall be transferred to the United States Civil Service Commission; and that all unexpended appropriations for the use of said Bureau of Efficiency available at the time the act takes effect shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 413), provided, in section 4, that the Civil Service Commission should establish, subject to the approval of the President, a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them. trict of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Apparently there was administratively established in the Civil Service Commission a division of efficiency to establish such ratings (see act March 4, 1915, 38 Stat. 1008), and by the act of February 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 15), this division of the Civil Service Commission was separated from the commission and made an independent establishment to be known as the Bureau of Efficiency. It was made the duty of the Bureau of Efficiency to make the efficiency ratings which had theretofore been imposed on the Civil Service Commission and to investigate the administrative needs of the service relating to personnel in the several executive departments and independent establishments imposed on the Civil Service Commission by the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 750). 1913 (37 Stat. 750).

The act of May 10, 1916 (39 Stat. 76), in making an appropria-tion for the Bureau of Efficiency included to enable it "to inves-tigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of tion for the Bureau of Efficiency included to enable it "to investigate duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service." This additional purpose was continued in the appropriation acts of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1080), and July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 768), the appropriation act of March 3, 1917, also including certain other investigations to be reported to Congress at the next regular session. By the act of May 16, 1928 (45 Stat. 576), the powers and duties of the Bureau of Efficiency prescribed by law with reference to investigations in the executive departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government were extended to include the municipal government of the District of Columbia, and the act of May 20, 1923 (45 Stat. 886), made a certain sum of the bureau appropriation available "to secure actuarial data in connection with the various retirement plans for teachers in the District of Columbia and for civil-service employees."

The act of February 20, 1929 (45 Stat. 1233), required the chief of the Bureau of Efficiency to certify annually to the Bureau of the Budget, along with his estimates of appropriations for the ensuing year, "a statement of the amount of the savings which he estimates have been effected in the various bureaus and offices of the Government, including the District of Columbia, as a result of the surveys and recommendations made by the Bureau of Efficiency in cooperation with the bureau or office involved during the previous fixed var." and there are possibly other statutes permitting the previous fixed var." and there are possibly other statutes permitting in cooperation with the bureau or office involved during the pre-vious fiscal year," and there are possibly other statutes permitting employment of the services of the Bureau of Efficiency temporarily otherwise and in connection with similar administrative matters.

The work that apparently caused the creation of the Bureau of Efficiency; that is, efficiency ratings for personnel in the executive branch, having since been acted upon by the Congress and the administration of the classification laws intrusted to the Personnel administration of the classification laws intrusted to the Personnel Classification Board, the bureau seems to have since been functioning largely as an investigating agency, and, of late, principally in making investigations and observations for committees of the Congress. The extent of its work in this connection during recent years has apparently been such as to make the question of a need for its continuance largely one as to the desire of Congress for its services as an independent establishment.

There appears talent in the bureau that could continue to serve the Government well, but to retain the entire organization—and as an independent establishment of the executive branch for investigational work of the character that has recently branch for investigational work of the character that has recently engaged its attention—might be of doubtful wisdom, inasmuch as established agencies having other duties appear adequately equipped and able to render such service. Of course, to give the equipped and able to render such service. Of course, to give the bureau other than investigational authority would at once involve duplication of both work and jurisdiction.

There is for pointing out in this connection that the Bureau of Efficiency in its present state is an establishment in the executive branch—not the legislative—and in estimating its future usefulness no doubt the Congress will wish to give consideration to this phase of the matter.

In connection with the proposal to abolish the bureau it is respectfully suggested there be considered the wisdom of transferring its activities, personnel, etc., to an establishment having investigational duties and force, preferably having relation to the legislative rather than the executive branch, to the end that the incompleted work of the bureau may be finished, the better talent continued in the Government's service, and through the nonfilling of vacancies as they occur, ultimately accomplish substantially the reduction in personnel and the savings contemplated by the pending bill.

A similar report is being sent to the Hon: John J. Cochran, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, on similar H. R. 8388, rending before his committee.

pending before his committee. Sincerely yours,

J. R. MCCARL Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while I have the floor, I should like to make one further observation. May I say to the Senator from Tennessee that if the report is true that the economy provisions of the bill which were adopted by the Senate and which would save the Government between two and three hundred million dollars a year-

Mr. McKELLAR. About $205,000,000, as I estimate it. Of course we can not be absolutely accurate about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's figures are about correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are substantially correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; they are substantially correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. The saving will amount to about $205,-000,000.

Mr. KING. If the conferees report back to their respective Houses that the Senate's amendments are to be rejected, in other words, if the House prevails in its position, much as I should dislike to see that appropriation bill or any other pending appropriation bill fail at this session, I think the Senate would be entirely justified in rejecting the conference report, even though it resulted in the failure of the measure to become law. There will soon be a special session, and a bill will then be passed that will materially reduce the amount carried in this bill referred to.

Senators will recall that in the closing hours of the short session in February and March, 1919, opposition was manifested in the Senate to a number of appropriation bills that had passed the House, and Congress adjourned without them being enacted into law. When Congress met in special session in April or May, 1919, as I recall, appropriation bills were promptly passed, carrying reductions of appropriations amounting to over $800,000,000; that is to say, the aggregate appropriations carried by the bills were approximately $800,000,000 less than provided in the bills which failed to pass the Senate during the short session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think my colleague is wrong as to the amount of the reduction in the two bills, but there was a saving.

Mr. KING. I am certain that I have not overstated the reductions made. My colleague will recall that there were stupendous sums carried in the bills not passed for the Army and the Navy, and the reductions made in these measures saved hundreds of millions of dollars. I know the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] with others protested against the enormous appropriations carried in the naval appropriation bill as sent to us from the House, and that bill and the Army appropriation bill, as well as several others, were considered in the special session and speedily passed, with the result that there was a great saving to the taxpayers of the United States. So if we should be compelled to reject the conference report upon the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill because of the action of conferees, there would be no great loss to the country, because I feel sure that when the Congress convenes in April or May a measure will be enacted that will carry an amount greatly below the total recommended by the conferees.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator speaking of the conference report on the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill which contains the so-called economy provision?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I certainly agree with the views of the Senator, and I hope that conference report, unless it contains those provisions, will be defeated.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to be associated with the able Senator from Idaho in the contest which will follow the report of the conferees if it should be submitted in the form indicated by the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MINING CLAIMS IN UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, after this measure was passed by the Senate the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] entered a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. I am now authorized by the Senator from South Dakota to withdraw that notice and motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the motion? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. BORAH. Now I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Patterson, Mr. Oddie, and Mr. Hayden conferees on the part of the Senate.

BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a bill on the calendar, being House bill 13817, to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 13817) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am not entirely familiar with the bill, but I understand that it is a very brief one. I have received communications from some of the institutions for the blind under the jurisdiction of States, and my understanding is that those institutions object to the passage of the bill. I should like to be able to secure those communications and ascertain whether or not that is a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that the fact is just the reverse; and if he does not find that to be the case I will ask for a reconsideration of the matter to-morrow. The American Foundation for the Blind (Inc.) writes me the following letter, signed by its president:

The bill (H. R. 13817) has been reported out from Senator METCALF'S Committee on Education and Labor. This is the hator that you were good enough to present, permitting the use of funds appropriated for printing Braille books to be employed for talking books, as well, and phonograph records.

This is a marvelous invention, Mr. President. By means of it there are made available for the blind so-called "talking books" which can be put on a phonograph or a talking machine and reproduced just as plainly as if a person were talking.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his request until I can send for the communications I have, office immediately. I object for the time being.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator objects for the LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14562, being the legislative appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would necessitate displacing the unfinished business, if the Senator wants to do that. Mr. HALE. What is the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The so-called bankruptcy bill. Mr. HALE. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative appro-

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall feel constrained to object unless the Senator assures us that the proposal meets with the approval of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS 1.

Mr. HALE. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. KING. If he does, he is entitled to the right of way.

Mr. HALE. I think he understands the situation. Mr. KING. I would not want him to be taken advantage of in his absence.

Mr. HALE. I think there is no question of that, Mr. President.

Mr. FESS. The unfinished business could be brought before the Senate at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Maine to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill referred to by him.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14562) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, some Senators who are not present have suggested to me that they desire to be present when this bill is taken up. Therefore, I suggest the absence

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 19, to change the item for reporting the

The next amendment was, under the heading "Government Printing Office," on page 36, line 18, after the word "buildings" and the semicolon, to insert "for construction of a 1-story fireproof extension to the Government Printing Office on lots 813, 814, 828, square 624, District of Columbia, not to exceed $25,500, to be paid from the working capital fund for the Government Printing Office," so as to read:

In all, $1,750,000, and in addition thereto the sums resulting during the fiscal year 1934 from the application during such fiscal year to the Government Printing Office (except the appropriation herein made for "Salaries, office of Superintendent of Documents") of the provisions of law relating to the legislative furlough, compensation reductions, and reduced differential for night work, to the extent of not to exceed $1,000,000, shall be credited to the working capital for the fiscal year 1934 and shall be available for such fiscal year for the purposes of this paragraph; to which shall be charged the printing and binding authorized to be done for Congress, the printing and binding for use of the Government Printing Office, and printing and binding (not exceeding $2,000) for official use of the Architect of the Capitol when authorized by the Secretary of the Senate; in all to an amount not exceeding this sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, after the word "library," in line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the quarters, heat, light, fuel, and telephone service heretofore furnished for the director's use in the Botanic Garden shall not be regarded as a part of his salary or compensation, and such allowances may continue to be so furnished without deduction from his salary or compensation, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 5, 1928 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 678), or any other law.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in the House the provision regarding the deduction of light, heat, and quarters from the salary of the Superintendent of the Botanic Garden was eliminated on a point of order. Unless it goes in this bill those items would have to be deducted from his salary. It is not fair that that should be done. In the past it has not been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator from Arizona his view of the matter.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this matter was considered in the committee, and the chairman was authorized to offer the amendment.

Mr. KING. I have no objection. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 10, line 26, we have just adopted an amendment relating to the Senate kitchens and restaurants. I offer, as a further amendment, to insert the words "$10,000 of which shall be immediately available."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 26, after "$47,288," and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

$10,000 thereof to be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will be accepted. It is necessary for the prompt execution of the work.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 26, line 17, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a matter and let the Senate do as it pleases regarding it; but it relates to the roof of the Senate Office Building.

The roof of the Senate Office Building is of copper, but it was laid on galvanized-iron ribs. If Senators are interested, and will look at the samples which I present, they will see how the entrance of water and the rusting of the galvanized iron has resulted in the destruction of these ribs. The Architect of the Capitol says that in order to make the building safe the copper will have to be taken off, and a new and better arrangement of ribs arranged for and placed upon the roof.

I am perfectly satisfied for myself to let the matter go if the Senate so decides; but the condition is such that it requires constant expense to keep the roof from leaking, and all the time there is a chance that a wind storm might lift the entire roof off the building. It will cost $62,000 to repair the roof, and the Senate must decide what it chooses to do regarding the matter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York will not insist upon the amendment. The committee went into this matter very thoroughly. The Architect of the Capitol told us that we could get along with temporary repairs on this roof for a matter of a year.

As far as the danger of the copper roof blowing off and doing damage to some outsider is concerned, I do not think we have to fear that. There is a railing around the outside of the roof, and the architect told me there was no chance that it might blow off into the street.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not going to press the matter, but I think the Senate ought to know exactly what the situation is. Then if we wake up some time and find the roof of the Senate Office Building in the Street, at least I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that the attention of the Senate has been called to the matter.

One other matter, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator offer an amendment on the subject just referred to by him?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I am not going to offer an amendment, unless somebody here has been inspired to want to do the thing which would protect the building. I know that the feeling of the architect is that in all human probability the roof will be there next year and perhaps another year. Nevertheless, it is right to protect him as well as to protect the committee by letting the Senate know the facts.

Mr. President, I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of the legislative bill, but I could not be present when the bill was written up. I was away attending a funeral.

In addition to what I have said I may remark that I have been asked by the leader on this side to serve as a subcommittee having charge of the Senate Office Building, temporarily, at least. The amount which the committee has allowed in line 17, page 26, is not sufficient to operate the old building and the new wing. Last year it cost $164,360 to operate the old building. We have the new wing, which contains 26 suites of offices and committee rooms. The amount estimated by the Architect of the Capitol and the superintendent of the building for the operation of the new wing is $35,640, which added to the amount which it cost to operate the old building the past year would absorb every cent of the $200,000.

Mr. President, it is necessary to do some painting, and to take care of the moving of the effects of the Senators from the old building into the new wing, which will cost money, and some of the awnings are out of repair. More than that, there is but one motor to operate the elevators, there is no reserve motor, and if the present one were burned out, the elevators could not run. Repairs are necessary to the elevators which require some machine-shop equipment, and it has been estimated that an amount of $15,500 in addition to the $200,000 will be needed to operate the old building, plus the new wing, and take care of these things of which I have just spoken.

In view of what I have said, I move that the amount stated in the bill, $200,000, on page 26, line 17, be increased to $215,500.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as I understand it, next year the Senator is to have control, under the Committee on Rules, of the Senate Office Building.

Mr. COPELAND. Temporarily, at least.

Mr. HALE. I have every confidence in the Senator, and I believe that he will administer the building wisely. In view of the fact that we are trying to economize in every way possible, and are hoping the Senator can make some further economy in the operation of the building, can he not get along with the amount we have already provided in the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I hope I can, but when I talk with the men who have operated the building, and they put before me figures which I have gone over repeatedly, I am forced to believe that the sum fixed is too low. Had I been in the meeting of the subcommittee when the bill was written up I should have made the same effort I am making here. I think the amount recommended is not sufficient.

I pledge to the Senate, as I have to my leader on this side, that, while I have the power to be reposed in me temporarily, I shall do all I can to economize. But it is unwise to ask an impossibility, and I think it is not unreasonable at all to ask that this sum be fixed as I have suggested.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I believe the chairman of the committee should accept this amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is the Senators on the other side of the aisle who will have charge, and if they believe it is necessary, I will accept the amendment and take it to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, one more thing. I should like to have added to the amendment which has just been adopted the words "and $1,000 shall be immediately available."

The purpose in asking for $1,000 is to enable the superintendent of the building to have the doors cut in the old part of the building, so as to change the suites into 3-room

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAY-DEN] iffers the following amendment:

"The provisions of the legislative pay act of 1929 are hereby amended so as to correspond with the changes made by this act in the designations and rates of salary of certain positions under the Senate. The March 16, 1933." This paragraph shall be effective from and after

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I was directed by the minority leader, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], to examine into the various positions in the offices of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant at Arms, to see whether it was possible to bring about some retrenchment in expenditures. I am glad to say that the savings proposed in the amendment I have offered are greater than was expected.

I had pay rolls made up showing not only the positions but where the persons holding the positions actually worked. To illustrate the way in which certain savings will be brought about if the amendment is agreed to, I might begin by pointing out the situation with respect to messengers on the pay roll of the Senate.

Messengers act as doorkeepers. There are nine openings to the Senate gallery. Two messengers are required at each opening, so that the services of 18 men are required. There are 5 openings to the Senate Chamber; there are 2 messengers at each door, which means 10 more. There are messengers stationed at the foot of the two private stairways. That makes a total of 30.

There are 38 messengers on the Senate pay roll. Each of them is now paid a basic salary of $2,040 a year. Persons on the House pay roll acting as messengers, performing the same identical service as those in the Senate, receive salaries of $1,740 per annum.

My amendment proposes to do away with 8 messengers' positions and to reduce the salaries of the 30 remaining upon the pay roll so that their salaries will be exactly the same as that received by messengers for the House of Representatives.

In the case of the Senate post office, I found a different situation. Under existing law there are 7 postal employees. called mail carriers. There are actually 21 employees in the post office, and that number is required, because they work four shifts to handle a very large quantity of mail, beginning at 3 o'clock in the morning, through the day, and into the night. I found salaries there varying from $2,040 to $1,250. By equalizing the salaries so that there should be equal work for equal pay, and providing for an adequate force in the office, there is still a saving of over

In the case of the Senate document room, it is possible by a rearrangement of salaries to make a saving and to pay the employees at the same rate paid to employees in the document room of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, these illustrations demonstrate the method which is followed generally in the amendment, with the result that there will be a net saving in the office of the Secretary of the Senate of $16,080 per annum, and in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of $17,520 per annum, or a total annual saving of $33,600, still providing an adequate force of attaches for the Senate.

One provision of the amendment is that these changes in compensation shall take place upon the 15th of March next. By so providing there will be an additional saving of $9,800 between the 15th of March and the end of the fiscal year on the 30th of June, or a total saving in the next 151/2 months of $43,400.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, on page 30, line 24, in the paragraph dealing with the legislative reference service, I move to amend by increasing the amount, so as to read "$68.365."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, line 24, the Senator from North Dakota proposes to strike out "$61,875" and to insert in lieu thereof "$68,365," so as to read:

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, including not to exceed $5,700 for employees engaged on piecework and work by the day or hour at rates to be fixed by the Librarian, $68,365.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, this matter was given some consideration in the committee, yet there was a feeling at the time that the increase was one not being sought by the Librarian, and that no encouragement had been given by the library people themselves looking to such an increase.

Mr. President, when it developed that there was a seeming resignation to the figure which had been written into the bill, I wrote to the Librarian asking him briefly what the effect of this continued cut would be, and won from him, under date of February 16, the following response:

LIERARY OF CONGRESS,

Washington, February 16, 1933.

My Dear Senator Nye: I have your note of this morning asking the effect of the cut of $6,490 (made for this year, and con-ing the effect of the cut of $6,490 (made for this year, and continued in the pending legislative bill) in the appropriation for our legislative reference service.

All of the appropriation is for personnel. The effect, therefore, will be to reduce this during the final quarter of this year and for the year beginning July 1. The impending extra session renders this peculiarly unfortunate; but it is also unfortunate on principle, the staff at its normal being a small one and carefully halanced.

The service is to Congress itself. It is greatly valued by certain committees and by numerous Members—and is actively drawn upon by a majority of the latter in each House. The recent demands made upon it have been overwhelming; for at no time has there been such anxious study of the principles expounded, and the experience recorded, in books.

The service constitutes apparatus—a tool for the use of Congress itself. It is a pity to impair that tool when its efficiency is of such immediate consequence.

Faithfully yours,

HERBERT PUTNAM, Librarian.

Note.—The volume and range of the demands are indicated by the list of recent inquiries of which I inclose a copy. Many of them required elaborate research by people with special training in history, law, economics, and foreign languages, and familiar with our collections and our bibliographic apparatus. Such people, if dropped, can not be summarily replaced.

I can see, as all Members of the Senate see, the need for a reduction in the general expenditures from the high figures to which the appropriations have mounted during the last half dozen years; but I should like to call attention to the fact that in the case of the reference service there has been no such increase during recent years as has been the case with other departments of the Government. In 1925 the Legislative Reference Service was afforded an appropriation of $56,000, which has increased up to the present time to $61,875. At one time it was $67,500.

In view of the splendid service Members of Congress and the committees of Congress are receiving from that service. I hope most earnestly that the chairman of the committee may take the amendment which I have proposed and seek to accomplish that improved service or continued service so much to be desired.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, did not the Senator, in reading the letter, read some language to the effect that this appropriation was to be used for the coming special session of Congress?

Mr. NYE. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Of course, the appropriation in the bill is for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1.

Mr. NYE. I understand; but the plans for this year have been largely built on the understanding of what they were going to have to get along without in another year, and a six weeks' furlough is in prospect right at the time when the new Congress will be convening in special session, if I may call that to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Was there not something said at the hearings before the Appropriations Committee about several employees who would be taken care of by this item who were doing work with another department?

Mr. NYE. Yes, there was a reference to the possible transfer from the index to State legislation service, but I have been studying the Budget figures and have found that the estimates were providing to cover that item a rather limited amount:

Legislative reference: Increase incident to the transfer of certain positions upon the completion of index to Federal statute, $1,740.

That has not been increased by either House.

Mr. HALE. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to taking the matter to conference, but I am quite sure the House will not accept it.

Mr. NYE. As long as the chairman has indicated a willingness to take it to conference, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum which has been prepared covering the entire subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

1. The appropriation of $61,875 for the Legislative Reference Service in the pending legislative appropriation bill presumably represents the same amount as was appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1933 (the present fiscal year), less 8½ per cent deducted from the original amount itself rather than through a subsequent impounding process now in operation under subsequent impounding process now in operation under the economy program.

2. The appropriation of $67,500 provided for the present fiscal year is short approximately $7,500 of the appropriation for the previous fiscal year, although there have been materially increased demands upon the service by Members of the House and Senate and a correspondingly necessary increase in the personnel.

3. The shortage of $7,500 in the appropriation for the current fiscal year is due to a misapprehension and error arising in the Senate at the time of the passage of the legislative appropriation bill as to the manner of applying the proposed $½ per cent reduction under the economy program, for, after deducting approximately 12 per cent in the bill as reported from the Senate, the later adoption of the legislative furlough caused an additional curtailment of $½ per cent, as contemplated under the principles of the economy program.

4. The result of the foregoing legislative activity has been to

4. The result of the foregoing legislative activity has been to reduce the appropriation for the Legislative Reference Service during the current fiscal year by a net sum of approximately \$15,000, or 20 per cent, a part of which, $8\frac{1}{3}$ per cent, is covered by the legislative furlough applying to all departments of the Government, the remainder must be made up by an administrative furlough of six weeks for the entire staff of the service.

5. This administrative furlough of six weeks to be imposed upon the entire personnel of 35 members of the Legislative Reference Service should be contrasted with the fact that although the Legislative Reference Service is a direct service of the Congress, the work of which is exclusively for the benefit of Congress, the library proper, comprising a personnel of approximately 800 members, is operating under an actually increased appropriation during the present fiscal year.

6. So that, while 800 members of the library personnel will not be required to take an administrative furlough, and although many members of the personnel of the library proper were given increased salaries through reallocations, the entire personnel of the Legislative Reference Service—only 35 in all—will be compelled to take an administrative furlough of six weeks. This despite the fact that all are employed in the Library of Congress and directly under the Librarian of Congress. Why should the Legislative Reference Service be singled out for a reduction?

7. Since the legislative reference service functions exclusively for the Members of the Congress, and directly upon the demands for the Members of the Congress, and directly upon the demands of the Members of Congress, and since these demands have been so numerous and so urgent, it has so far been impracticable to put the administrative furlough into operation. Unless Congress makes immediate provision for the exigency it will be necessary to shut the entire service down temporarily for a period sufficiently long to take care of the administrative furlough.

It is imperative to observe that although the work of the

8. It is imperative to observe that although the work of the legislative reference service is exclusively for the Congress, and although it responds exclusively to the demands of the Congress, the Library of Congress proper has many departments, such as, rare book, aeronautics, fine arts, music, orientalia, Semitic literature, and Smithsonian divisions; a European representative, consultants in church history, Chinese history, culture, paleography, classical literature, Spanish literature, etc. These divisions of the Library proper have so many ramifications that they can not properly be regarded as of particular service to Congress.

9. If the appropriation for the legislative reference service contemplated in the pending bill prevails it will be necessary for the service to impose during the next ensuing year administrative furloughs for as long a period as for the present fiscal year, plus such additional furlough as will become imperative through the resumption by the service of such salaries as are at present being provided for by special appropriations to cover the cost of preparing the index to the Federal statutes for printing. The salaries for the personnel engaged in this duty will thus increase the burden upon the legislative reference service unless outright dismissals are provided for. dismissals are provided for.

10. Thus, the question before Congress is: Does Congress desire to lose the benefit and services rendered by the legislative reference service by the failure to provide the small sum of $15,000, without which the service must be temporarily suspended? Congress has provided generously for the Library of Congress proper, although, as indicated, the Library may no longer be regarded | as exclusively of service to Congress.

11. No other Federal agency is comparable with the legislative reference service. No other Federal agency renders such service, nor is equipped to render such service as is rendered by the legislative reference service. The legislative reference service is a fact-finding research service to the Congress itself. It is exclusively the agency of the Congress.

12. On February 10, of this year, Senator Fess, of Ohio, in addressing the Senate upon the subject of the Library of Congress emphasized the fact that the legislative reference service receives emphasized the fact that the legislative reference service receives only the small sum of $75,000, yet renders valuable service to the Congress. As Senator Fess manifestly regarded the small sum as hardly adequate to the needs of the service it is manifest that he would be shocked to learn that even the small sum is at present reduced $15,000, and that no greater sum than $61,875 is contemplated for the next ensuing fiscal year.

13. If the appropriation for the legislative reference service for the next ensuing fiscal year be retained at the low sum proposed in the pending bill, one of two alternative courses will become imperative:

(1) An administrative furlough of two months or longer, despite the provision in the present economy act that furloughs shall not be in excess of 60 days, or,

(2) The absolute dismissal of at least five members of a staff having a total personnel of only 35 in all.

having a total personnel of only 35 in all.

14. The work of the legislative reference service should be carefully distinguished from the work of the Library of Congress proper. The function of the legislative reference service is exclusive service to the Congress based upon the requirements of Congress in connection with every problem. The functions of the Library of Congress, on the contrary, are anything but an exclusive service to the Congress. The Library of Congress has long since assumed the characteristics and functions of a national university; its activities are widely diversified, and its ramifications are extensive. tions are extensive.

15. The legislative reference service should not be lost sight of in the vastly ramified operations, functions, and activities of the in the vastly ramified operations, functions, and activities of the Library of Congress. It is the legislative reference service which informs Congress with respect to problems concerning legislation. The legislative reference service should not be made to suffer a reduction in a small appropriation of only $61,875, nor a reduction in a small personnel of only 35, when the appropriation for the Library of Congress has been increased in amount and its personnel of 800 will not be compelled to suffer any reduction except that of the legislative furlough.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, unfortunately we can not hear the discussion between the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Maine, who is in charge of the bill. We would like to know to what the amendment refers. If the Senator from Maine is going to accept the amendment I would like to know what it is.

Mr. HALE. We have already had the amendment before us.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask that it may be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, line 24, the Senator from North Dakota proposes to strike out "$61,875" and insert in lieu thereof "$68,365."

Mr. NYE. Was the Senator absent from the Chamber when the letter from the librarian was being read?

Mr. BYRNES. I did not hear it read. If it has been read, I certainly did not hear it. Is this the amendment urged in the committee to compensate certain employees who have not been engaged in this work but whom we now propose should be returned to the work?

Mr. NYE. No. As nearly as can be gained from the estimates that were prepared by the Bureau of the Budget. the employees in that service dealing with the indexing of State legislation are not cared for under the amendment.

What is the explanation for the increase Mr. BYRNES. in the amount?

Mr. NYE. To provide for a continuation of the reference library in keeping with the service that we have been receiving from it in times past.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on page 33, line 14, I move to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000." This is the amount of the Budget estimate for the law library in the Library of Congress. As Senators know, that library is one which we ourselves use, which is used by the Members of the House, and which is used by the Supreme Court as well. The amount ought to be $75,000, and that has been strenuously urged by the American Bar Association and by other groups of lawyers, the Federal Bar Association, and the American Patent Law Association. Some of the justices of the Supreme Court have urged that we make the amount much higher. The Budget estimate, however, was held down to $50,000; but for some reason not explained the committee cut it down further $20,000. That is only about onehalf of what is required to keep up a law library in a firstclass university.

Our law library is notably deficient in many respects. About $400,000 would be required to purchase books that are obviously needed to round out the library. Of course, in these times we could not dream of asking for an appropriation so large, but it certainly is reasonable to ask the Congress to comply with the Budget estimate, which I find on page 15 of the Budget message of this year, and to give the $50,000 which is urgently needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether provision for the annex to the Library was discussed in the committee.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it was discussed in the committee at length, and, while we thought there was a great deal of merit in it, the general policy was not to go ahead with the building program at the present time. The committee decided we could get along without it at any rate for another year.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, about five years ago we authorized the purchase of land for what we call the Annex to the Library, and also we authorized an addition to the present building. The authorization had no opposition in the Senate at all. While we authorized appropriations at that time, yet the appropriations have never been made. The authorizations amounted to about $6.500,000. We authorized, also, the appropriation necessary to buy the land, and that appropriation was made and the land was bought. Three years ago the authorization was made to proceed with the construction of the addition. We are now completing the addition to the present building, and it evidently will be completed in the next year. The appropriation is made in this bill of about $325,000 to complete the addition.

I think there was a general misunderstanding as to what the addition is to be. It is to have on one floor the bibliographic work, which will be the finest in the world when completed. On another floor is to be exchange work, the mailing, and so on, in which millions of items will be dealt with each year. On one of the floors is the union catalogue. I think the committee did a fine thing in making provision to complete that work.

But I notice the committee have omitted entirely the provision for even the beginning of the construction of the annex. That is a part of the original authorization. had hoped we might have about $1,675,000 to go on with it. I find that there is so much opposition to it because of the economy program that it was suggested that we might have an appropriation of $422,000 to begin the construction of it—the excavation, and so on.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator realizes, of course, that with the appropriation of $400,000 to $500,000 at the present time, next year we will be called upon to go ahead and complete the project. It seems to me in these times we ought to do as little as possible of that work.

Mr. FESS. The project is already begun.
Mr. HALE. It is only begun to the extent that we have bought the site. We have not begun the building.

Mr. FESS. We have the addition feature of it in process that will be completed next year.

Mr. HALE. But the annex has not been touched. Mr. FESS. The annex and the addition are one project. We have never separated the two. In the original authorization they were considered as one project. They are to be connected by a tunnel. We are just building one end of it and not the other.

Mr. HALE. But they are not actually in the same building. They may be connected by a tunnel.

Mr. FESS. It is the same building. It is not connected physically above ground.

Mr. HALE. It will do no harm to the addition if the annex is not started this year.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I had not expected to have that sort of statement made. Here is the project started. One part of it will be completed next year, and the other part of it is not even allowed to be begun. My concern is to have the authorization go on and at least begin the other end of the project, one end of which will be completed this year. I had hoped that the economy urge would not be sufficient that we would stop the construction of the Library project. We do not stop the construction of the other buildings. We are going on with them and that is proper. I had hoped that this unusual undertaking in connection with the Library would have the same treatment that we have given elsewhere. In order to test the committee I am going to offer an amendment.

On page 28, line 24, after the numerals "$325,000,000" add these words:

That makes the appropriation so we can go on with the work which we authorized three years ago, a part of which is already undertaken and will be completed this year. This is to begin the other end of the project.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I only desire to say that the committee considered the matter. We have great sympathy with the view expressed by the Senator from Ohio. The committee was of the opinion at this time, when we are pursuing a policy of economy in every other branch of the Government, that when we came to the legislative branch of the Government we should attempt to follow the same policy that we exercised as to the other departments of the Government. The matter was discussed at length and we determined that at this time, no matter how deserving or how desirable the project might be, the question was whether it is absolutely essential that it be done this year. We concluded that under the existing situation it is not an absolutely essential project at this time and could well wait until the next fiscal year. That was the motive actuating the committee in not making the appropriation, and I hope it will prevail here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the bill contains two sections, with the two sections that were stricken out by the committee as the bill came from the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, would the Senator from Delaware like to have a quorum present?

Mr. HASTINGS. I was about to make an inquiry. It has been suggested to me that all of the Senators are very much interested in the bankruptcy bill; that it is quite late in the day, and the chances are that many of the Senators would prefer to finish their mail and do other work in their offices, and that it might be better to wait until to-morrow morning before I undertake to explain the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think if the bill goes over until to-morrow we ought to meet not later than 11 o'clock a.m. How does the Senator from Delaware feel about that?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. FESS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he make that motion.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, Mr. President. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 24, 1933, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 23 (legislative day of February 21), 1933

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We approach Thee again, our Father in heaven and our Father on earth. Thy protecting arm has been about us, and we thank Thee. To-day, if trials come, if temptation meets us, let them not stain our souls by gaining mastery over us. Create within us a noble passion to serve Thee and a fine idealism of life. Through the span of this day, that reaches from dawn to dark, may it not be broken by harsh discords. O lead us in that pathway that brings gladness at the first and glory at the last. O God of love and God of mercy, bless abundantly the loves of our hearts and the centers of our homes. In the name of our Savior.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5408. An act relating to the revolving fund established by the joint resolution of December 21, 1928, for the relief of Puerto Rico; and

S. J. Res. 183. Joint resolution to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Puerto Rico, approved December 21, 1928," as amended by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 48. Joint resolution to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of the bequest of the late William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, State of California, for the benefit of the museum and library connected with the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make the statement to the House that the condition of business is such that it will be necessary for the House to remain in session each day, in all probability, until 6 o'clock in the afternoon during the remainder of this session. I want to ask the Members to be in their seats so as to prevent quorum calls, but, if necessary, there will be a quorum call whenever the point is made.

It will be necessary for the House to meet at 11 o'clock each morning during the remainder of this session, and I now ask unanimous consent that during the remaining days of this session, unless otherwise ordered, the hour of meeting be 11 o'clock a. m., instead of 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to do anything to interfere with the regular, logical, normal procedure of the House. I know there is a great deal of business that ought to be transacted, but before I agree to this unanimous-consent request I would like to know from the gentleman from Illinois when he intends to take up the rule on the Smith cotton bill.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know. The gentleman will have to ask somebody else. I do not know when that will come up.

Mr. SNELL. I am very deeply interested in this, because I am very much opposed to the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. I presume it will not be taken up until we get through with the Navy Department bill.

Mr. SNELL. I expect we will finsh the Navy bill to-day or to-morrow, and while eventually, I shall not object to this request, at present, I shall have to object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman objecting on the theory that he does not understand what might be done with the rule with reference to the so-called cotton bill?

Mr. SNELL. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think I am in a position to state that there is a possibility that that rule will not be pressed.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will assure me of that, I shall not object at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want to make any hard-and-fast statement to the gentleman, but I want to be entirely candid with the gentleman and the membership of the House. We fully realize there is considerable opposition to the proposition, and there has been a concert of action in this House for a long time between the agricultural forces, the wheat people and the cotton people and the tobacco people and the dairy people, and we are anxious to see if it may be possible to work out a continuation of this concert of action. I think I am justified in saying, after a short conference with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that we would like an opportunity to feel out somewhat the sentiment of the House with reference to the cotton proposition.

Mr. SNEIL. I would like to have that done, because I am very much interested in the status of that piece of legislation, and, as I said before, I do not want to do a single thing to in any way cripple the final passage of all the important measures that should be considered at this session, and with this understanding with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask a question. Does the gentleman from Illinois know what the disposition of the other body is with regard to the passing of the supply bills? We are now finishing up the last supply bill here in the House. What is the use of our working day and night if another body is going to kill all these appropriation bills? When the Congress dies all of the unpassed appropriation bills die with it and would have to be reintroduced and reconsidered in the next Congress. I do not see any use of the House working day and night if another body is going to kill all these bills.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not advised as to that, except I think we have the right to assume that the other body will discharge its full legislative duty and will take care of these bills.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. When they start on appropriation bills they go pretty fast over there.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman what is going to follow the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. RAINEY. There are some rules, as I understand, and some unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. DYER. I notice in the Record that in the general debate yesterday on the Navy Department appropriation bill there was very little discussion about the bill itself, but a lot of extraneous matter printed in the Record, taking up most of the day.

Mr. RAINEY. I may say there will be a deficiency appropriation bill a little later.

Mr. DYER. I think that without tiring the Members by sitting here so long, we ought at this late hour in the session to eliminate a lot of unnecessary discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LEASE OF POST-OFFICE GARAGE IN BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof, for printing under the rules.

BUSY YEARS AHEAD UNDER THE PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE ACT

Mr. OSIAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I insert the following address delivered by me at the inaugural program of the Filipino Club of Washington, D. C., on February 5, 1933:

I indulge in no mere formality when I say that I am twice happy to be with you this evening. I am pleased to greet the new officers of the club and to have a part in your inaugural program. It is a duty and a pleasure to be here and witness the presentation of a Filipino flag to Mr. Butler B. Hare, the author of the House bill on Philippine independence which has since become a law. I join the members of the Filipino Club in full measure in paying to a deserving public servant the honor which is his rightful due. I am glad to have been informed that in the near future when Senator Hawes will return from his trip to the Bermudas for a much needed rest, this organization will render homage to Senator Hawes and Senator Cutting, the authors of the Senate bill on independence.

OUR GRATITUDE

It is meet and proper that we should honor Mr. Hare. I feel very much at home to be here with him after the various parliamentary battles we have fought together in Congress. My countrymen may not know that before he accepted the chairmanship of the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. Hare made sure that serious effort would be put forth to have a Philippine independence bill pass the committee and the House of Representatives. Largely due to his disinterested labors, early hearings were held on independence before his committee, and action on the bill was expedited. Were he not present in person, I would be more inclined to speak at greater length of him and his eminent services. I shall not embarrass him by doing something which would run counter to his modesty of character.

I desire, however, to inform my countrymen and our friends here of the sacrifices of Mrs. Hare. It was a great sacrifice on her part to permit Mr. Hare to absent himself from home so that he might pay a visit to our people in the islands; to allow him to come to Washington for conference with the Philippine delegation upon his return to this country only two or three days after reaching his home in South Carolina. Then, too—and I want my people to remember this—during the crucial days when the fate of the bill hung in the balance in the House of Representatives, Mrs. Hare was seriously ill at Saluda, S. C., and yet she consented for her husband to come to Washington to pilot the measure while she was suffering on the bed of pain. These are unrecorded human touches; they are sacrifices without a price.

Let us likewise remember in this hour of triumph Senator Cutting and Mrs. Cutting. And when I say Mrs. Cutting, I mean the Senator's beloved and inspiring mother, for he, so far has seen fit to enjoy what some refer to as "single blessedness." Senator Cutting as a coauthor of the Senate bill and his invaluable help as a member of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, are of peculiar significance. Being a Republican, and Senator Hawes, his coauthor, a Democrat, the Senate bill on independence is a nonpartisan bill. We might say it is a bipartisan or a truly American measure, and it is well that it should be so because the promise of independence to the Philippines is not only a Democratic promise or a Republican promise but an American promise. Our people will never fully know the extent of Senator Cutting's assistance. In order for you to know the type of man he is you should read the veto message of the President, the letters of four department secretaries, and Senator Cutting's scholarly reply and notable defense of the bill in the Senate on January 16 and 17, 1933. His entire address was most devastating to the formidable opposition. So clear was he in the presentation of facts that, by the very force of his logic, he left little or no doubt in the minds of his colleagues as to the soundness of his position.

Of Senator Hawes it is difficult for me to hold myself in check. I have worked with him at close range. During the last three years he gave of his time, energy, money, and mentality without stint to what he has come to consider as a human cause. It would do many of the Filipino leaders good to do the reading he has done on the question and possess in their own private libraries the references dealing with the Philippines like those which he has gathered. He traveled and then wrote a most illuminating and informative book on Philippine Uncertainty and otherwise prepared himself for the great battle necessary to pilot the bill prepared himself for the great battle necessary to pilot the bill to a harbor of safety.

He created interest among his associates. He inspired enthusiasm among the members of his secretarial staff. His secretary, Mr. Bon Geaslin, accompanied him to the Philippines, even as Mr. William Bowers went with Mr. Hare to the islands. Mrs. Hawes and her daughters in various ways rendered valuable help. Senator Hawes worked systematically and effectively. No better tribute has been paid any man in Congress than that paid Senator Hawes two days ago for his character and public career. It was an inspiration to be on the floor of the Senate when, on the 3d of February, the Senator resigned to give way to his successor, Senator Bennett Clark. Senator after Senator from both sides of the aisle rose to do him honor. of the aisle rose to do him honor.

I would like you to hear the words of Senator McNary, the acting floor leader of the Republican Party:

"Mr. President, I can not let this occasion pass without expressing my very high regard and sincere affection for Senator Hawes, who has just relinquished his seat in the Senate. I have Hawes, who has just relinquished his seat in the Senate. I have served with him on committees of the Senate and on the floor, and all his public service has been characterized by consideration for his colleagues and studious reflection upon the problems before the country and the Senate. It is with deep regret that I witness his voluntary retirement from the Senate, and when I say that his departure is a loss to this body I am sure that feeling is shared by every Republican Member of the Senate."

Listen to the touching tribute of Senator Copeland, who, more than any other, combated the Hawes-Cutting bill in the Senate:

"I wish to say to the people of the Philippine Islands that regardless of my attitude toward the Philippine bill I want every friend I have in those islands, as well as here, to know that I regard Mr. Hawes as a true friend of the Filipinos, and if I can say a single word to give assurance to those people of the loftiness of his character, I desire to do it."

Senator Bingham, chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, made these meaningful remarks:

"When the day comes that the people of the Philippine Islands achieve their fond hope and expectation of independence, it should be recognized by them that to no other person do they owe their independence in greater—or even equal—measure than to Senator Hawes, of Missouri. A gentleman, a scholar, a statesman, a faithful Member of this body, he leaves it with the regret of all his colleagues.

From this morning's editorial of the Washington Post, a paper which has persistently opposed the Philippine independence bill, I quote the following: "Senator Hawes has served with great distinction, and the encomiums of his colleagues have been well

That the Philippine bill was favorably acted upon by the Senate is a tribute to the personality of Senator Hawes. His voluntarily relinquishing his post before the expiration of his term to help his successor and friend is one more evidence of the nobility of

while we pay our tribute of gratitude to these authors of the Philippine independence act, let us not forget Speaker Garner, whose daring determination was in a great measure responsible for the successful passage of the act. With him are the members of the House Committee on Insular Affairs and the 306 Representatives who voted for the independence bill on April 4, 1932. They, together with ever so many unknown soldiers, as it were, are all deserving of our undying gratitude.

I would be recreant to my duty if I did not inform my countrymen of their indebtedness to Senator Bingham, chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. I admire him because he was ever frank in his dealings with the official representatives of the Philippines. Throughout our negotiations he was cordial and gentlemanly. Without the aid of Senator Bingham and Republicans like him, and the able assistance of men on the Democratic side like Senators Robinson, Pittman, Tydings, on the Democratic side like Senators Robinson, Pittman, Tydings, and others, it would not have been possible to push through the Philippine independence bill in the face of the formidable opposition of President Hoover and four department secretaries.

To the Seventy-second Congress and its Members, Democrats and Republicans alike, belongs the distinction of enacting an inde-pendence measure that is unique and unparalleled. The Philip-pine independence act which we now have ought to be a new pact of friendship between the United States and the Philippine Islands.

NO PERSONALITIES-NO LONG-DISTANCE DEBATING

I have been a little saddened by criticisms which of late have become somewhat rampant.

During my entire incumbency as Resident Commissioner I have, During my entire incumbency as Resident Commissioner I have, as a matter of policy and for the sake of unity in our fight for an independence law, maintained silence in the face of criticisms from my countrymen in the United States. I have been attacked, maligned, and traduced. I kept quiet. I bared my breast to every shaft of criticism in the interest of our common objective. I am satisfied that the great cause demanded of us forbearance. It demanded a united front. Now we have an independence law at last. It is desirable that our union be maintained as we undertake the equally expecting task of reconstruction.

last. It is desirable that our union be maintained as we undertake the equally exacting task of reconstruction.

I do not object to criticisms as such. In fact, I welcome them. They are necessary in a democracy. But some of the criticisms are premature and baseless. Others have been exceedingly vitricult, indulging in personalities. Let us fight, if we must, on issues, ideas, and principles.

I was a little sorry to see in the Bulletin of the Filipino Club velled personal criticisms against Mr. Quezon. Let us not forget that he is still the Filipino leader in the constitutional scheme of things. You who are in Washington know of his labors and his patriotic services. He does not need me to defend him. The record of his career is his own defense. He is coming to the United States in the near future and I ask my countrymen and our American friends not to judge him harshly or prematurely.

In the Sunday Star of this morning (February 5, 1933) there is an article devoted to a discussion of the record of the present session of Congress. It comes from the pen of Mr. William Hard, session of Congress. It comes from the pen of Mr. William Hard, an internationally known political analyst. In that article the following paragraph appears and I desire to read it:

"Its total record of major accomplishment to date is the approximation hill absolute magnetic production."

propriation bill already mentioned and the Philippine independence bill. The latter bill turns out to be highly displeasing to the most powerful politician in the Philippine Islands—Manuel Quezon. Mr. Quezon is jocularly accused of simply wanting complete independence (with all offices manned by 100 per cent Filipinos), plus complete free trade with the United States, plus a pinos), plus complete free trade with the United States, plus a certain amount of protective hovering about by the United States Navy. In any case, Mr. Quezon is thought here to be strong enough in Manila to render the work of this session of this Congress on the subject of the Philippines futile."

I submit that Mr. Hard does not accurately portray the views of Mr. Quezon. In his well-known report to the Philippine Legislature on his last trip to the United States Mr. Quezon said:

"In conferences with some Senators, among them Senators King and Hawes, some Representatives, and high officials of the administration, I expressed my opinion that the Philippine problem could be solved satisfactorily through any one of these three procedures: procedures

"First. Immediate establishment of an independent government, with free trade between America and the Philippines for a period of 10 years, limiting the amount of sugar entering the United States free of duty to 1,000,000 tons, and of oil to the amount that is exported at present, and restriction of labor immigration into the United States.

migration into the United States.

"Second. Immediate establishment of an autonomous government with all the consequent powers, including that of enacting measures considered necessary to meet the responsibilities of an independent government, when independence is granted with the restrictions necessary to safeguard the rights of sovereignty of the United States in the Philippines. For a period of 10 years the trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and the labor immigration into the United States would be governed as stated in the first plan. At the end of 10 years absolute independence of the Philippines will be granted, or the Filipino people will decide through a plebiscite whether they desire to continue with this kind of government or prefer to have one that is absolutely independent. In the latter event independence shall be granted forthwith.

"Third. If neither of these plans protecting Philippine economic interests shall be acceptable to Congress, I said that the Filipino people would, as a matter of course, accept any law granting independence even under the most burdensome conditions."

In such a report he specifically stated that the plan of immediate independence followed by 10 years of free trade was impossible. These were Mr. Quezon's exact words:

"The first plan found no acceptance in any quarter.

"Even Senator King (the American Senator who has been fighting for Philippine independence with the greatest zeal and disinterestedness) told me that the American people would never consent to the continuance of free trade between America and the Philippines in any form after independence has been granted us. This view is shared by all."

I transmitted Mr. Quezon's views to Senator Hawes opportunely when there was considerable confusion produced by dispatches from the Philippines and my letter was inserted in the Congressional Record for December 16, 1931. Senator Hawes subsequently included the entire report of Mr. Quezon in the Congressional Record for December 22, 1931, as part of his extension of remarks. sion of remarks.

It might be stated in passing that General Aguinaldo advo-

It might be stated in passing that General Aguinaldo advo-cated the scheme which, according to Mr. Quezon, "found no acceptance in any quarter." In a letter to Senator Hawes dated July 25, 1931, General Aguinaldo said: "I am convinced that the contemplated readjustment of free trade relations should come after the concession of independence. Disposed as we are to face the consequences imposed by new obligations that will arise, our country will intensify its ac-tivities in all lines of endeavor with those new obligations in mind. Necessity is the mother of progress, and on the necessities mind. Necessity is the mother of progress, and on the necessities incident upon an independent government, the Filipino people will construct the edifice of their prosperity and national greatness. On the understanding, therefore, that the adjustment regarding free trade should not precede the concession of independence, notwithstanding opinions to the contrary, I would suggest a period of not more than 10 years within which we hope to be able to adjust the economic difficulties attendant upon separation in a way satisfactory to both peoples. Let independence come at the earliest hour, however, at the latest within the next five years, inasmuch as the continuation of the present guardianship will kill our spirit of initiative as well as the characteristic elements of our nationality." (Hawes, Philippine Uncertainty, pp. 320–321.)

guardianship will kill our spirit of initiative as well as the characteristic elements of our nationality." (Hawes, Philippine Uncertainty, pp. 320-321.)

Senator Pittman, who is going to be even more influential in the next Congress than he is in the present Congress, made very pointed comments on the scheme sponsored by Aguinaldo recently. In his able address in the Senate on January 17, 1933, he said:

"I know that every member of our committee was unselfish. Differing, as they may partially have done, with regard to the time for ultimate independence, they were unselfish in that they were looking after the interests of the Filipino people. But I hear to-day voices, coming almost silently, so low that one may hardly hear them, moving across the Pacific from another little group in the Philippine Islands, a little group of politicians, a little group who do not represent the Filipino people. They are whispering that if this legislation shall not be accepted by the Filipino people, then those who are doing the whispering will be able to obtain far better conditions for the Filipino people; that they will probably be able to obtain what Aguinaldo wanted—that is, almost immediate independence, with free trade for 10 years thereafter. That was his proposition. That, however, would not be considered fair by the people of the United States; it would not be considered fair by me, and I would vote against it." (Congressional Record, January 17, 1933, p. 1922.)

There is bound to be misunderstanding if we engage in what I call long-distance debating. I record.

ever, would not be considered fair by the people of the United States; it would not be considered fair by me, and I would vote against it." (Congressional Record, January 17, 1933, p. 1922.)

There is bound to be misunderstanding if we engage in what I call long-distance debating. I prefer debating at close range. Long-distance debating reminds me of the story I heard when I was a child during the Spanish régime. It is said that considerable trouble was caused the Spanish Government by troublesome pulahaues in the Island of Samar. The fights that occurred from time to time were reported by the Spanish officials in the Philippines to the officials in Madrid. One time the Spanish governor general reported to the government in Spain that the provincial government building in Samar was destroyed by anays. Immediately upon reading the report the Spanish Minister of the Colonies issued the following peremptory order to the Spanish governor general in Manila: "Arrest and punish all the anays." Of course, the moral is obvious to the Filipinos who know what the word means; but for the benefit of our American friends let me say that anays are white ants.

It is difficult to come to an understanding if we engage in long-distance debating. My injunction to Filipinos in the United States is this: Do not attack or condemn too readily. Do not be unduly critical of the Filipino leaders in the islands who may not hold exactly the same views as you do regarding the new act.

be unduly critical of the Filipino leaders in the islands who may not hold exactly the same views as you do regarding the new act. If I were speaking in the Philippines, I would likewise say to our countrymen there: Do not attack or condemn too readily. Do not be unduly critical of the Filipinos in the United States who may not hold exactly the same views as you do regarding the Philippine independence act. I hope that in the future I will have the opportunity to meet our countrymen in the Philippines face to face and counsel calmly with them. But to Filipinos, one and all, wherever they may be, let us never forget that we are one in blood, one in history, and that we have a common country and a common destiny.

Let us deal with one another as befit men of the same aspirations, the same interests, so that it might not be said of us in the future what our immortal Rizal once said: "It is a pity that in our slavery we should have rivalries over leadership." It would be indeed a misfortune—nay, a calamity—if we should play politics at the expense of our national liberty.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO MY COUNTRYMEN

RECOMMENDATIONS TO MY COUNTRYMEN

After making clear my disinclination to long-distance debating, let me make a few recommendations to my countrymen:

1. Let us investigate the facts and have the same set of facts upon which to base conclusions regarding the Philippine independence act.

 Let us reason together in a fraternal spirit.
 Let us subordinate self and self-interest for the sake of a common good.

4. Let us pull and push together on the things, the important things, upon which we can agree.
5. Let us be grateful to America and merit, by what we do and say, the faith and friendship of the America neople.

6. Let us not jeopardize the good that we have achieved for something elusive, something attractive, but which we can not get.

7. Let us boost more and knock less. Let us live to build, not to destroy.

You have heard the wise old saying, "A bird in the hand is (Shouted some in the audience, "Two in the bush.")

I would say, "Two hundred in the bush."

PHILIPPINE DELEGATION REPRESENTATIVE

As you know, we have had in Washington and we have now a Philippine mission. The members, with the two Resident Commissioners, Mr. Guevara and myself, have worked together as your official representatives in the United States. For the time being, and until we disappear from the scene, we are the consti-tutional representatives of our people in Washington in our negotutional representatives of our people in Washington in our negotiations with the Government and people of America. We are in this country at the behest of the Filipino people. We are here charged with the duty to "petition the Government and Congress of the United States for the early granting of the independence of the Philippines." We have worked to the best of our ability. We did our duty. Now, we no longer have to speak only of an independence bill. We have a Philippine independence act. I do not want to enter into a defense of the Philippine mission or the commissioners. I say the act is our best defense.

Your constitutional representatives in the United States deserve the support from Filipinos such as they would give their armies in war. We have been in a war—peaceful war, it is true, but war nevertheless.

in war. We nevertheless nevertheless.

May I remind you that your Philippine delegation is truly representative? It is representative politically. In its membership the two parties, the majority and the minority, are represented. The concurrent resolution of the legislature provides that the members consist of the presiding officers of both houses of the legislature and the majority and minority floor leaders. They, jointly with the commissioners in Washington, compose the delegation.

The Philippine delegation is representative geographically. The

The Philippine delegation is representative geographically. The north and the south, the different regions of the islands, are repsented. Messrs. Osmeña, Roxas, and Montinola come from the south, or the Visayan region. The others come from the north. Messrs, Tirona and Guevara come from the Tagalo region. Mr. Sabido from the Bicol region, Mr. Aquino and myself from central and northern Luzon.

The Philippine delegation, furthermore, is representative of our The Philippine delegation, furthermore, is representative of our country, viewed from its major economic interests. While all of us, of course, labored with a view to protecting the best economic interests of our people as a whole, let me say for your information that Messrs Roxas, Montinola, and Osmeña come from the sugar-producing Provinces in the Visayas and Mr. Aquino from the sugar-producing section of Luzon. The hemp section has its representation in Messrs. Sabido and Tirona. The coconut Provinces have their defender in Mr. Guevara, and the rice, corn, and tobacco recious have their representation in Messrs. Osmeña. and tobacco regions have their representation in Messrs. Osmeña, Aquino, and myself.

Aquino, and myself.

Politically, geographically, and economically, the Philippine delegation is truly representative. I can not too strongly emphasize that the major purpose which animated all of us was the independence of the Philippines.

LITERATURE ON THE PHILIPPINE LEGISLATION

My friends, I do not pose before you as one knowing absolutely everything connected with Philippine legislation. The literature on this question that has accumulated in the last few years is almost unbelievable. He would be rash who says he has read all the printed matter—let alone the unpublished material—dealing with Philippine independence these last four years.

Do you realize that this particular piece of legislation in its various drafts and the amendments thereto, if compiled, would comprise over 900 printed pages?

comprise over 900 printed pages?

Take the record of hearings. The three printed volumes of the Senate hearings for 1930, the House hearings for 1932, and the Senate hearings for 1932 contain a total of 1,783 pages. Not one of you who are listening to me has read all of the testimony. I have not only read every page but studied it—as it was my duty

I have not only read every page but studied to do so.

I have a compilation of the speeches and extensions of remarks on the Philippines in the Congressional Record for the Seventy-first and Seventy-second Congresses and they take up four large-sized volumes.

I shall not enumerate the different articles, leaflets, reports, pamphlets, and books from the pens of various writers on the subject as they are legion. My secretaries have collected and have had bound some of my own writings and speeches on the subject during my incumbency in office with the result (a) that the duplicate copies of typewritten articles and statements total some 1,400 pages; (b) that the bound volumes of typewritten and unpublished speeches contain 1,225 pages; and (c) that the three volumes of speeches contain 1,225 pages; and (c) that the three volumes of speeches reprinted in small type include approximately 800 pages. Some 200,000 copies of these reprints made at personal expense have been distributed up to this good hour from my office. From these you may get an idea of the tremendous amount of literature on the Philippine question these last three or four years. I call such points to your attention to bring home to you the need of studying the facts bearing upon the enactment on independence which, on January 17, last, passed the Congress of the United I shall not enumerate the different articles, leaflets, reports, which, on January 17, last, passed the Congress of the United States in the face of great opposition from various sources, including four executive departments of the United States Government and the White House.

INDEPENDENCE ON A DAY CERTAIN

If you study the new law, there should be no disagreement that If you study the new law, there should be no disagreement that the Philippine independence act grants increased autonomy to the Philippine Islands and that on the 4th day of July immediately following the transition period of 10 years or the life of the Philippine Commonwealth, independence shall be ours. That is my understanding of the following section of the act:

"Sec. 10. On the 4th day of July, immediately following the expiration of a period of 10 years from the date of the inauguration of the new government under the constitution provided for in this act, the President of the United States shall by proclamation withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty then existing and exercised by the United States in and over the Territory and people of the Philippine Islands, including all military and other reservations of the Government of the United States in the Philippines (except such land or property reserved under section 5 as may be redesignated by the President of the United States not later than two years after the date of such proclamation), and, on behalf of the United States, shall recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, under the constitution then in force,

My interpretation of the act is that independence comes on a day absolutely certain. That is the interpretation of Mr. Hare, the author of the House bill. That is the interpretation of Senathe author of the House bill. That is the interpretation of Senators Hawes and Cutting, the authors of the Senate bill. That is the interpretation of our friends who supported the measure.

And that is not all. It is the interpretation of the most important opponents of the independence bill. One example will suffice. President Hoover, in his veto message, says:

"Complete independence is automatically established in the eleventh year after the inauguration of the intermediate government."

Please note that the President of this country with all his con-

Admitting all that need be admitted regarding the imperfections of the present act, I say if it did not contain but this single feature, the provision of making the grant of independence definite, specific, on a day certain, the independence act merits acceptance on our

PRECEDENTS OF WHAT WE HAVE ACCEPTED

When the original Philippine organic act was enacted doing away with the military rule in the islands we welcomed it.

When Congress passed a law granting us the Philippine Assembly we were happy. We did not reject it.

Our reformers and patriots in Spain, Rizal, del Pilar, Ponce, Lopez-Jaena, the Luna brothers, and others who labored for Filipino representation in the Spanish Cortes, are justly praised for it. When we were given the right to have Resident Commissioners in the United States the Filipinos took advantage of it.

When we were given the administrative concession of a Filipino majority in the civil commission we accepted it.

When the Jones law was enacted giving us the Philippine Legislature, with the senate and the house of representatives, we did not reject the law. We accepted it and thanked America for it. We received those who were responsible for its passage when they returned to the Philippines as conquering heroes

And now that we have a Philippine independence act, as the fruition of years of struggle and sacrifice, an act giving us greater concessions than any we have had, an act which, on a day relatively early and positively certain, grants our independence, should there be any doubt as to the right course for us as a people to

In the light of precedents, in the face of the reality of facts, we can not ignore the moral of the old familiar legend: Grab all, lose all!

BE VIGILANT!

All who are familiar with Rizal and his writings remember his characterization of the youth as the splendid hope of the fatherland. I have always associated myself with that thought. To my people, to the Filipino youth, let me directly address a few words of solemn warning:

The rejection of the Philippino independent of the Philippino in the second second

The rejection of the Philippine independence act may lead to indefinite retention. In our acceptance of it, in my judgment, lies our national redemption.

I call upon my people, I call upon the Filipino youth to be alert. Do not permit this law to become the football of local politics. In the crucial and momentous months and years immediately ahead, there should be unity of thought, action, and

No man should arrogate to himself the right to make politics out of the liberty and the independence of our country.

BUSY YEARS AHEAD-NATIONAL PROGRAM

One of the objections raised in certain quarters is that the 10-year period of transition is too long. But the objection voiced in other quarters is exactly the opposite. "The period for such adjustment in this act," President Hoover in his veto message said, "is too short, too violent." There you have two distinct views, and in the enactment of a major piece of legislation there are precessarily divergent views and conflicting ideas. Myriode are, necessarily, divergent views and conflicting ideas. Myriads of interests, elements, and factors have had to be considered in the passage of this act.

On December 22, 1931, I defined the Filipino people's inde-

On December 22, 1931, I defined the Filipino people's independence stand in these terms:

"Mr. Speaker, in two minutes it is clearly impossible adequately to discuss other phases of this all-important problem, independence, but the extension of time enables me to present succinctly our independence stand. In words as plain and in language as clear as I can make it, this is the stand of my people to-day: If given the choice between a continuation of the present form of government on the one hand and immediate, absolute, and complete independence, with all the attendant consequences, on the other, the Filipino people are a unit in favor of immediate, absolute, and complete independence. To make this point more emphatic: If the choice is between relative prosperity without free-phatic: If the choice is between relative prosperity without freedom on the one hand and independence with relative poverty on the other, my people would unhesitatingly choose the latter. Naturally, if they could secure immediate independence with reasonable economic adjustment they would welcome it. But let there be no mistake. The supreme concern of the Filipinos is the early grant of national independence."

Our combined forces have been in this direction. What did we get? We did not get all that we wanted, of course, but the opponents of independence have fared worse. We did get this 10-year period. Having gone through what I did and knowing what I do know, I, without hesitation, urge that we accept this act. When our people will have accepted it, when the Philippine Legislature will have favorably acted upon it, those who have been friendly to us in the United States will be pleased. Then it will not be amiss to resume negotiations for an improvement of American-Filipino relations on the basis of mutual confidence, understanding, and friendship.

American-Filipino relations on the basis of mutual confidence, understanding, and friendship.

With this Philippine independence act now an accomplished fact, let us see what problems are before us before the expiration of the 10-year period of transition.

1. We need to formulate and draft a constitution and submit it for approval by the President of the United States and the Filipino people. That will take from one and one-half to two and one-half years; let us say two years as a compromise.

2. After that, we shall have to hold an election to select new officials in accordance with the constitution. That will take some officials in accordance with the constitution. That will take some

3. The setting up of the new government of the Philippine Commonwealth will consume some time.

4. The political reorganization and readjustment to be effected will take some time.

5. Then there is the intricate problem of financial adjustment including the restudy of our taxation and currency, the redistribution and the reallocation of funds, and a redefinition of the financial relations among the central, provincial, and municipal governments. That certainly will take some time.

6. There is also the question of economic adjustment and economic appropriate that the extended to the control of the co nomic preparation that must be attended to. In our domestic life, we need to revitalize agriculture, give new direction to our commercial and industrial development, develop fishing and our fisheries, determine the relation between labor and capital. These and related problems will take time.

7. The problem of conservation of our natural resources takes time.

8. There is the trade adjustment between the Philippines and

8. There is the trade adjustment between the Philippines and the United States. Section 13 of the act provides:

"Sec. 13. After the Philippine Islands have become a free and independent nation there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from other foreign countries: Provided, That at least one year prior to the date fixed in this act for the independence of the Philippine Islands, there shall be held a conference of representatives of the Government. shall be held a conference of representatives of the Government of the United States and the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, such representatives to be appointed by the President of the United States and the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, respectively, for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the Government of the United States and the relations between the Government of the United States and the independent government of the Philippine Islands, the time, place, and manner of holding such conference to be determined by the President of the United States; but nothing in this proviso shall be construed to modify or affect in any way any provision of this act relating to the procedure leading up to Philippine independence or the date upon which the Philippine Islands shall become independent." independent.

We should be getting busy preparing for the trade conference between the representatives of the Government of the United States and the government of the Philippine Commonwealth not long after the latter government is inaugurated.

9. There is the future economic adjustment that must be made in our relations with foreign countries. That surely takes some little time.

10. The problems of the judiciary and our defense need some time for study and adjustment.

11. In the matter of legislation we could well afford to devote about two years only to one problem, the elimination of obsolete laws from our statute books. The codification of our laws is a labor of years. Enacting new laws is an annual, not to say a labor of years. Enacting new laws is an annual, not to say a perennial task.

12. Take the question of foreign relations; that needs serious thinking and careful study. We should be training personnel preparatory to our independent existence. That takes time.

13. The question of a unified control and systematic development of transportation and communication surely merits serious attention and necessitates some time.

14. The problem of hospitals, sanitation, and public welfare will demand some time.

will demand some time.

15. Then there is the great and constructive task of our educational and social reorientation. If you assign me to this work, I could easily draft a program that would take more than 10 years. I may be pardoned for tarrying a while on this phase of our national program because it is my special line. We should be projecting a well-defined program for our cultural, social, and spiritual reawakening for a period of 45 years, that is to say one generative beyond the project of transition. eration beyond the period of transition.

16. Not only these but we have the very important work of preparing for a permanent constitution which will have to be attended to before the 10-year period of transition expires.

If this broad and incomplete national program is not enough and you wish me to project still further into the future, let me say that we shall be confronted with two great problems: (1) The organization of our national life on a peace basis, and (2) the retarries of the relatividual particular descriptions of the properties of the relatividual particular descriptions.

The organization of our national life on a peace basis, and (2) the reshaping of our individual, national, and international life to insure the perpetuity of our independent republic.

We have here a most challenging program and it is by no means complete. It is a program as great if not greater, as complex if not more complex, than was ever faced by any nation on earth. Surely it is one of the greatest responsibilities ever entrusted to the stewardship of any people in the history of the

My compatriots, we have truly busy years ahead of us under the Philippine independence act. They are years of weighty responsibility and wonderful opportunity. We must not dawdle, we must not procrastinate, we must not falter in the face of this imperative and unexampled challenge.

CLARENCE R. KILLION

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion.

The Clerk read the conference report.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1. Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "back pay, compensation, benefit or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

LISTER HILL,

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) for the relief of Clarence R. Killion, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: The House accepts the words "honorably discharged" in lieu of the words "discharged under honorable conditions," because the words "honorably discharged" have a well-defined and accepted meaning and are of common usage, denoting clearly a certain type of discharge, whereas the words "discharged under honorable conditions" are not generally used and have no well-defined

On No. 2: The House accepts the words "back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" as fully covering the intent and purpose of the House in its amendment of similar import to the bill, but with less verbiage than embodied in the House amendment.

The conference report was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Doxey in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement made last night, the gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Idaho for 30 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, last night we read the first item in the bill, with the understanding that a very limited number of Members who have been promised time should have that time to-day. If that is agreeable, I shall be glad to yield to two or three gentlemen this morning, and I think the gentleman from Kansas also wishes to yield to two or three Members.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman is correct. We made that agreement last evening.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I invite the serious attention of Members of this body who will be in the next Congress to a procedural change in the way of committee legislation. At a recent meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs, as a parting word, I suggested to that committee that the work of that committee could be improved by having a representation on the subcommittee on the War Department appropriation bill during the consideration of that bill in the making.

As some of you know, I have served on many committees during my 20 years of service over a period of 30 years. My first service was on the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, when that committee had the appropriation power. It was my good fortune to serve on the subcommittee that had the preparation of the Post Office appropriation bill during the first four terms that I was in the House.

Later I served on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which did not have appropriation powers.

Afterwards I served on the Appropriations Committee, both before and after the appropriating powers were taken away from these legislative committees, and I served on the War Department subcommittee after all the appropriation powers had been merged in the Appropriations Committee.

The merging of all power of appropriation and the deprivation of authority that had formerly been vested in legislative committees-namely, the Military Affairs Committee, that framed the military appropriation bill and the Military Academy bill; the Naval Affairs Committee, in the preparation of the naval appropriation bill; the Agricultural Committee, in the preparation of the agricultural appropriation bill; the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the preparation of the Indian appropriation bill; the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in the preparation of the Post Office appropriation: the Committee on Foreign Affairs. in the preparation of the diplomatic appropriation billwere all taken away in 1921, when Congress passed what is known as the Budget system.

It was then the desire to concentrate all the appropriation bills in one committee, and so the Appropriations Committee was enlarged from 22 to 35. At the time of its enlargement, members from the various legislative committees from which appropriation authority was withdrawn were drafted from those committees to the Committee on Appropriations. For instance, from the Committee on Military Affairs Mr. Dan Anthony, the ranking Republican member, was drafted for service on the Committee on Appropriations to help in the preparation specifically of the War Department appropriation bill. That same rule applied to members of other legislative committees.

I have been a student, naturally, of the budgetary system and its evolvement, and, as many Members know, I have followed the appropriation bills from the beginning of my itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state | service 30 years ago rather scrutinizingly under the tutelage of that master legislator, James R. Mann, and there was ! no superior legislator, I believe, not only during my service but in the history of the Government, than James R. Mann.

The end of all committee work is the improvement of legislation. These legislative committees, like the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and others, have suffered by reason of the appropriating powers having been taken away from them. Officers of the Army, for instance, come before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the Army appropriation bill and give testimony over a period of, say, six weeks as to the needs of the military service.

I might digress here to say that I was asked by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, before my term ended, to express these views, as I have expressed them in the committee, and I wish to give the benefit of my views to the Members of Congress who are going to serve here, particularly the Democratic members, who are to have the direction and control of affairs in the next Congress. My one aim is the improvement of legislation, and that is the end of all committee work.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe the gentleman is making a really workable contribution to the conduct of the proceedings of this House, because we had the question before us this morning specifically. I believe the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the attention of every Member

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank the gentleman. I had some hesitancy in taking the floor, because I did not want to be considered presumptuous as a retiring Member, but I felt it my duty to give the Membership of the House the benefit of my study and observation on this important question. When all of these powers were surrendered to the Committee on Appropriations, there was violent opposition upon the part of the members of the legislative committees, such as the Committee on Naval Affairs and others, to surrendering their appropriating powers.

What is my proposal? I would not take away the control of the determination of the Budget from the members of the Committee on Appropriations, but I would by rule authorize the chairmen of these various legislative committees, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Military Affairs Committee, the Agricultural Committee, to delegate the appointment of three or four members of their committee to sit with the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations during the preparation of these respective bills, and to partake in the framing of those bills. That would not only be of value to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, but it would also be of great benefit to the work of framing legislation.

For instance, in the consideration of these appropriation bills, from my experience, matters of legislative proposals arise. There is no liaison arrangement between the Committee on Appropriations and the various legislative committees to which I have referred. I have now served for four years, two terms, on the Committee on Military Affairs. Our attention is not called to the suggestions of the War Department which they make from time to time. Only yesterday the Committee on Military Affairs gave its attention for a whole morning to an amendment that has been incorporated in this naval appropriation bill, and if this subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of the naval appropriation bill had the information we have, they would not, I dare say, and I say it with all respect, have incorporated that amendment in the bill.

I am one of those who believe that on appropriation bills there are times when legislation should be incorporated. In the old days when I was serving on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads there were times when our committee would bring in 10 or 20 matters of legislation relating to the department, which were exigent and which should be considered. We would go before the Committee on Rules, and they would give us a rule making those things in order. Of course, we should not burden appropriation bills with too much legislation.

After much reflection I think no better reform could be established in this House than that which I have suggested. It would give added functioning to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, on Military Affairs, on Naval Affairs, and on agriculture if you would adopt the suggestion of allowing those respective committees to have some representation on these four subcommittees so that they could take from the hearings on these appropriation bills suggestions for legislation to their full committee, and also could sit in in the framing of what is necessary in the appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not a fact that the Senate does that very thing?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Without wishing to cast any reflection upon that greatest of all committees of this House, the Committee on Ways and Means, when the beer bill was under consideration-and my friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] will confirm me in what I say, because he and I were following closely the beer bill during its consideration-that great committee was at a loss as to the legislative features contained in the bill, because that measure had previously been considered always by the Committee on the Judiciary. They did not know what was the purpose of the declaration that beer containing less than 23/4 per cent of alcoholic content should not be considered intoxicating. They did not have adequate legislative knowledge of the purpose of that declaratory interpretation.

Following the suggestion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] as to the procedure in the Senate, take, for instance, the beer bill. As far as the revenue features were concerned, they were referred to the Committee on Finance to pass on those matters; and as far as the legislative feature was concerned, that was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and properly so. Further, in the War Department appropriation bill, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate is the man who has charge of the appropriation bill in the Committee on Appropriations and through its course in the Senate.

Now, it was at the suggestion of my dearest of all good friends, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain], that I have taken the floor, because the gentleman wished me, before I retired to private life, to call attention to this reform, which I believe will not only be for the improving of the framing of appropriation bills, but more for the improvement and functioning of the legislative committees, that formerly had those powers. It will raise them again to some of their former pristine worth that they were deprived of when the appropriation bills were transferred to the Committee on Appropriations. Those committees are now largely passing on private bills. Let us give them some new life. New life, I believe, can be instilled into them by adopting this suggestion. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I merely rise to express my personal regret that the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who has had a long and varied experience in business, in practical affairs as well as legislative service, will not be a member of our committee in the next Congress, and that thus I, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, will be deprived of his sustaining support in the conduct of the business of that committee. There is no politics in questions of national defense.

I want to testify to you gentlemen who may have had your clashes with "BILL STAFFORD" on the Consent Calendar, that as far as my observation of him is concerned, close and intimate as member of the same committee for four years, differing acutely as we have at times, and especially with regard to Muscle Shoals, he is a fair man. I do I ber of the legislative committee. I believe they are very large not believe he ever takes a position in opposition based on mere caprice or whim or prejudice.

If his primary impression is unfavorable to the position that you take, if you have got the facts, and if you have got the argument and will lay them before him, he will try them as impartially as a judge on the bench. If you are entitled to favorable judgment, he will usually render it to you and will reverse his primary position of opposition. Therefore, I lend greatest respect to the suggestion he offers here today. It is true that when he mentioned this suggestion in the committee I requested him to bring it to the attention of the House. He could have no selfish motives in the suggestion. I believe he is prompted here, as I believe he is always prompted, by the highest and most unselfish, patriotic considerations; and I am persuaded to believe that if this suggestion will be put into practice, it will lead to the betterment of our legislative service and thereby lead to the strengthening and development of our Federal services, especially with reference to the national defense of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain] has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I also yield to the gentleman from New York 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am going, for a moment, to discuss the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], proposed with reference to the legislative committees and the appropriation subcommittees. I am going to discuss it, because I believe that is one of the important matters that may be considered sometime.

In consideration of the Navy bill it requires the undivided attention of those who serve on it in the House for from 6 to 8 weeks. In the consideration of the Army bill it requires the undivided attention of those who serve on that committee from 8 to 10 weeks, and sometimes 11 weeks.

I want to suggest to those who have thought of this suggestion that the hearings in the Senate on such matters consume from 1 to 2 days, and sometimes 3, but 3 days would be the peak. Is it going to be possible for members of the legislative committees to sit as members of the appropriation subcommittees for 6 or 8 or 10 or 11 weeks, and give their undivided attention to those matters, and at the same time properly perform the functions they are supposed to perform on the legislative committees?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. TABER. Yes, I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can say without any fear of contradiction that as far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, some of the members of that committee could serve continuously for six or eight weeks, devoting their attention to affairs arising before the War Department Subcommittee on Appropriations.

Mr. TABER. Frankly, I know of certain matters that are brought up in this bill that require a considerable amount of attention, which has not been devoted to them by the Military and Naval Affairs Committees, which perhaps they did not feel should be devoted to them, but which, in my opinion. as a result of the things which have arisen in this bill and in the Army appropriation bill, should be taken up. It is going to be necessary, in the next session of Congress, for the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee to give very marked consideration to matters which will, if they are properly considered, in my opinion, result in the saving of several million dollars to the Treasury, and I believe those things should be taken up. I hope they will be taken up in the next session. I believe it will be impossible for the ranking members on the legislative committees to give the proper consideration to the appropriation bill and at the same time properly discharge the functions of a mem-and important duties and that they require that attention.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Assuming the gentleman is referring to the matter which the distinguished gentleman from New York mentioned a while ago, I want the RECORD to show that the Committee on Military Affairs yesterday unanimously agreed that at the first meeting of the committee in the next session of Congress, whether extra or special, that matter would be begun and have our absolutely impartial and fair consideration.

Let me ask the gentleman one question. The gentleman recognizes, of course, that every Member of Congress has the same responsibility with regard to national defense or agriculture or anything else that a member of the Committee on Appropriations has, no doubt?

Mr. TABER. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. McSWAIN. Now, is it fair to the other Members of Congress who have the same equal responsibility to deprive them even of the hearings that have been taken at public expense, and printed at public expense, until the committee has reported the bill, the day before consideration is to be had upon that bill? Ought not those hearings, as soon as they come off the press, be made available to the Membership of the House generally, even if it be a week or two weeks or thirty days prior to the reporting of the bill itself?

Mr. TABER. I am inclined to believe that the practice of having closed hearings and not making the hearings available until the bill is ready to report has undoubtedly resulted in considerable economy.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman does not agree as to the practicability of the view expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin, does not the gentleman believe the view expressed yesterday before the Rules Committee and the protest made that there ought to be some liaison between the Committee on Appropriations and the legislative committees throughout the course of the hearings?

Mr. TABER. I may say to the gentleman that the naval subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has for years been accustomed to afford hearings to members of the legislative committee, giving them an opportunity to present their views on any matter they were interested in.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Right there, of course, that does not answer it, because unless they are advised of certain things they will not know they are coming up unless they devote their whole attention to the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TABER. That, of course, is true.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman is stressing only the economic feature. Does not the gentleman think there is more to these bills than economy?

Mr. TABER. Certainly; there is a lot more to these bills than economy. There is effective national defense and there is ineffective national defense which can come as a result of ill-considered legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Who are the best judges of this efficiency?

Mr. TABER. Those who spent their time on it to the fullest.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Then, those groups are the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs.

Mr. TABER. I do not know whether the gentleman is correct in saying that they spend any more time on it than the other committee. Frankly, I doubt it. I do not believe that they give near equal consideration to most of these matters.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Is there not legislation in this ! naval appropriation bill that does not come under the Holman rule?

Mr. TABER. Outside of the matter regarding which the committee applied to the Committee on Rules, I do not think there is a single item, with the exception of certain restrictions on the time clock and that sort of thing at the end of the bill, which is, in my opinion, out of order, and which has been thrown out in the House on points of order many times, but placed back in the bill by the Senate and finally agreed to in conference.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. There is a provision that would permit Admiral Pratt to remain on active duty.

Mr. TABER. That is not legislation. That is a change in our limitation with reference to the number on the retired list who might be permitted to be called to active duty.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Is that a matter which can be provided for in an appropriation bill, or is not that a matter which is fixed by substantive law?

Mr. TABER. Under substantive law those on the retired list can be assigned to active duty; but, in the past, there have been limitations preventing more than a certain number paid out of the funds appropriated in a bill to be carried on the active list, and this is a change in that limitation, not legislation.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Of course, the gentleman knows that this, perhaps, would mean the setting of a precedent. I know the Committee on Military Affairs refused to do this very thing for General Pershing who had been Commander in Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces.

Mr. TABER. That is up to the House.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It is a very far-reaching matter if carried to its ultimate conclusion.

Mr. TABER. Under the law at the time General Pershing retired the War Department should have assigned him to active duty without any specific legislation for that particular purpose as I understand it. Now, I may be wrong, but this is my understanding.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; they wanted special provision made in his case.

Mr. TABER. Well, that might be.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed the committee proposition as long as I intend to. I just wanted to project the thoughts I had on the subject and lay them before the House for its consideration.

I want to say something at this time about the general naval situation. I want to talk for just a moment about the condition of the Navy and express my idea somewhat as to what should be done about it in the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, I believe our battleships are in just as good shape as those of any other nation. I believe our cruisers are in good shape. We have 10 cruisers which were built along about 1922 to 1925 of about 7,200 tons each. We have built 8 of the 10,000-ton 8-inch-gun cruisers, and we have under construction 6, and 3 appropriated for, a total of 9.

We have more cruiser tonnage under construction than any other nation. This shows that we are catching up on the other countries and going along now where we ought to be in that direction. With this bill, if it becomes law, we will have appropriated for everything we are allowed to appropriate for in the line of combatant ships with the exception of six light cruisers that might be appropriated for. No estimates have been submitted and no pleas have been made by the Navy Department for the construction of anything of this kind. Frankly, in my opinion, I believe at least one of them ought to be provided for; and I believe the department should give its attention to providing for one of them just as soon as possible, in order that we may know the type of cruisers we want to build. When we built the 10,000ton 8-inch-gun class, we built too many in a hurry. Now, I think we ought to begin and build one with a flying-on deck, and go ahead from that point and build up this group of cruisers.

With reference to submarines, I think we ought to have which would permit us to go with the building program within reason.

With reference to destroyers, we have now exhausted the authorization for destroyers with this bill. We need to build more.

Frankly, the fact that we have not had authorization for any more than has been provided for I do not think is a bad idea, because, until now, I do not believe the department has had in its own mind the type of destroyers that it wanted to build. I believe now they have, and we should go ahead with a reasonable authorization for national defense along that line.

I hope when the Naval Affairs Committee brings in a bill it will not bring in too large a bill, but will bring in a bill that will care for building needs for the two years next succeeding. I think that is the way to get at things—to go at them from the point of view of our actual needs, rather than from something we may need four or five years ahead. I think in that way we can have a better-ordered program.

Now, I want to talk to you a little bit about officers' pay. At the present time the minimum pay of an ensign is $2,000. The maximum pay is $2,200. The minimum pay of a lieutenant, junior grade, is $3,358, with allowances; and the maximum pay runs up as high, due to constructive service, as $4.998.

The normal pay of a lieutenant, senior grade, is $4,158; while the maximum, under the constructive-service proposition, runs up to $6,357.

The pay of a lieutenant commander, normal, is $5,757. while the maximum runs up to $7,200.

The pay of a commander, normal, is $6,997, while the maximum runs up to $7,200.

The pay of a captain is $7,200, unless he happens to be at sea, and then it is something like $6,200.

Now, it is perfectly manifest that these maximums are much too large and pay the officers much more than they ought to be paid.

I have here a chart which shows the minimum and the maximum in the grades. I do not know whether you can see it, as it is small; but it shows great big peaks running up here for each rank. It shows that among the lieutenants, junior grade, and among the lieutenants, senior grade, and the lieutenant commanders, there are great big spreads in the amount of pay, ranging from $2,200 in the lieutenant, junior grade, up as high as $4,900; in the lieutenant, senior grade, from $2,500 up to $6,300 or $6,400; in the lieutenant commander, from $2,900 up as high as $7,200; and in the commander from $4,600 up to approximately $7,200.

This same situation exists in the Army, but in perhaps a more pronounced degree. About the only way you can save any money effectively in the Army and the Navy bills is by wiping out this inequality.

You have a situation where officers are not paid according to their rank or according to their responsibilities. On the battleship Maryland, on November 18, 1928, a particular day, a lieutenant commander in the Medical Corps received the most pay of any officer on the ship, $7,172. A commander, who was the executive officer, received the next highest amount, $6,997. The captain, who was in command of the ship, was the next, $6,219. The next was a lieutenant, engineering, matériel officer, who received $6,207. A lieutenant commander, who was the engineering officer and in charge of all the engineering work on the ship, and who was in charge of the lieutenant last named, received $5,757, and so on all the way down the line.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has the gentleman the facts there as to the ages of the lieutenant commander of the Medical Corps and the lieutenant commander who was the executive officer of the ship and the respective length of their services in the Navy?

Mr. TABER. I have not the ages, but I have the years of service. The lieutenant commander in the Medical Corps an authorization bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs | had 27 years of service, part of which was constructive. The commander who was the executive officer had 25 years. The captain who was commanding, and who was the third in point of pay, had 33 years of service, and the engineering matériel officer had 28 years of service, including a considerable item of constructive service.

Mr. McSWAIN. In the service of the captain was the 4-year period of his cadetship at the Naval Academy counted?

Mr. TABER. Yes; and two years more where he served as a midshipman at sea, making six years of constructive service.

Mr. McSWAIN. Perhaps, then, he had not actually had 27 years of commissioned service.

Mr. TABER. The Navy used to have a practice of delaying commissions for two years after graduation from the academy. I do not think the Army had this practice. So, frankly, the two years, in my opinion, ought to be counted toward their commissioned service.

Mr. McSWAIN. But as to the medical officer, the chances are that in addition to his general education he had four years of professional education at his own expense before he was ever commissioned, and therefore the chances are he is several years older than this captain of the Navy or this lieutenant commander of the Navy in the line.

Mr. TABER. I would be rather inclined to doubt his being older than the captain.

Mr. McSWAIN. I am speaking about the lieutenant commander of the Medical Corps.

Mr. TABER. I doubt his being older than the captain, but I would not doubt his being older than the commander.

Under this constructive service proposition, the Navy is paying out approximately $1,600,000 more than I believe it should. The Army is paying out $3,500,000 more than I believe it should, and, manifestly, this situation ought to be corrected.

I offered an amendment to the Army bill, which was adopted and which I believe is the best way of correcting this. Frankly, somebody else may have a better way. I think it ought to be corrected and ought to be corrected now, at a time when we need to save money, so that we can go on with the things that we need to do that really mean national defense.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman realizes that in 1922, when Congress took this question up, it gave it meticulous attention and adopted a system then whereby the pay of officers was primarily dependent on their years of service.

Mr. TABER. It did not base the pay upon service. It based it upon imaginary service. It is not right that the office boy should be paid more than the man who carries the load and the responsibility, and I do not think it is fair to the Government of the United States and I do not think it is fair to the morale of the Army officers who are carrying the load.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. You would destroy that morale. Mr. TABER. I would not; I would restore it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. You would absolutely destroy it.
Mr. TABER. The gentleman is mistaken on that subject. I believe it would do more than anything else to put morale into the Army. I do not think you can pay the office boy more than the man who is the boss, carrying the real responsibility, and not have destruction of your morale.

I do not think there is any dispute about this, and I hope the conferees on the Army bill will be able to work out this situation. I hope that the amendment will be adopted and we can save some money that can be used for the necessary things for national defense.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The only time the amendment known as the Taber amendment received any hearing was in the War Department Appropriations Committee of the Senate, and there the Chief of Staff of the Army said the following:

My immediate purpose is to urge the elimination from the bill of two provisions, the inevitable effects of which will be so detrimental to our defense establishment as to overshadow completely the small amount saved.

Mr. TABER. But if the gentleman would realize the true situation, the Chief of Staff presented no reason whatever and no justification for such a proposition as paying more than ought to be paid to these officers. This is where the trouble is. They just say something which they do not seem to understand. I have had hundreds of letters from Army officers supporting my position, and these officers are out in the field doing the work and know the demoralization brought about because of this discrimination in pay. I do not believe the picture has been presented in the right way to the Congress.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think you could have an equitable pay bill for the Army without first settling the question of promotion?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I do. I think you can stop this proposition of paying a junior officer more than you do a senior officer. That very proposition was taken up by the joint pay committee headed by Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, consisting of Mr. French, Mr. Barbour, Mr. Crosser, Mr. Cooper of Ohio, and Mr. Oliver, and after extensive study they reported that these inequalities of pay in the ranks which enabled an officer in a lower rank to receive more pay than one in a higher rank, was wrong and that the condition ought to be corrected. Everybody who has studied it thoroughly reports that it ought to be corrected, and I hope that this Congress will correct that situation.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The only time when the question was discussed was, as I have stated, and the Chief of Staff made this statement with respect to the 1922 bill.

Admittedly, many cases of individual injustice were occasioned in the equalizing process, and in the main Congress made possible an intricate and involved situation.

Mr. TABER. Those who have studied the bill realize that that is not so. There are many inequalities. I want to cite one, where a major is working under another, a senior in command, and receives $200 over and above the other, who receives $1,500 a year less pay. Do you suppose that protects the morale of the Army? It does not, and if we are ever going to stop it, this Congress must stop it.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. GARBER. Has the correction been embodied in any provision of the pending bill?

Mr. TABER. It has not, it was provided for in an amendment adopted here on the floor to the Army bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Parks].

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I listened yesterday with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] with reference to the criticism of Congress by the newspapers and the magazine writers in the United States.

I do not believe there is a man in this Congress that ever dreamed we would ever come to a time when these vile, insulting statements would be spread throughout the United States by the newspaper reporters who receive the courtesy of this Congress.

I warn you there is only one purpose in it. The day they discovered there had come a change in the minds and hearts of the American people to turn the Government over to the progressive element, there was a beginning made to belittle this great Congress and Government down in the minds of the American people.

And to-day, without any reason for it, Congress is as little respected as any Congress that ever sat. The newspapers are not alone to blame for it. I have served here for 12 years and never have I lifted my voice here or elsewhere in criticism of the Members of this Congress. Without bitterness this morning I rise to call attention to some things that are being said by our own colleagues. The distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon], honored in his first term by his colleagues here as much as any man who ever sat in Congress, accepted an invitation to make a speech before a joint session of the Legislature of Missouri, an honor that any man ought to appreciate, an honor that ought to bring out of a man the best that is in him. What do you think he said? Listen to this:

Mr. Shannon spoke for more than an hour before a joint session of the house and senate.

He appears to have forgotten Thomas Jefferson, his patron saint.

Here is what he said according to this newspaper, the Kansas City Star, from his home city:

Relating his first experience on his arrival in Washington when the "red caps" at the station avoided him because Congressmen give only 10-cent tips, the Kansas Cityan gave this short description of Congressmen.

Oh, is not that a splendid statement for a statesman to carry back to a joint session of the legislature of his own State? But that is not all. Of course you know that is a fact that ought to be brought to the attention of the American people, that a red cap would not carry a bag if you were a Congressman! I have never had any occasion to have mine carried. I have had little enough in any that I have had so that I could wag it myself. Speaking of Congressmen, he said:

They rank with policemen-

I do not know whether he was trying to compliment a policeman or a Congressman—

They rank with policemen, most of them even below policemen; they put their relatives on the pay roll the first thing and then start running for reelection. They make a 5-minute speech in the House and then send thousands of copies of another speech, thousands of words long, to their constituents at Government expense.

The inference being, of course, that the speeches are printed at Government expense. Of course, we pay for them. Oh, I have not much time to dwell here with him, but listen to this:

Several times Shannon described Members of Congress as "tumblebugs," saying, "They tumble first one way and then another."

Did you ever hear that language used on this floor before? I have looked in the dictionary to see if, perchance, there might be some way by which you could use that term in the presence of decent people, and he was speaking to an audience of high-class people. I challenge anyone to go read the dictionary and see what a "tumblebug" is and put the definition of it in this Record.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PARKS. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the gentleman merely quoting from a newspaper account? Does the Democratic subleader [Mr. Shannon] admit that he made that speech?

Mr. PARKS. I did not ask him.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think we ought to find out, and not transgress the rules of the House.

Mr. PARKS. I shall take care of the rules. This is a newspaper from the home city of the gentleman sitting near me. The gentleman does not deny it. I hope he did not make the speech. Now, let me go over to the other side of the House. You talk over there about demagogues. Ah, gentlemen, in the Democratic Party there may be demagogues, but, thank God, we have not had the Ohio gang to disgrace the Democratic Party like it did your party-and you never raised your voice in protest against it-but let me get along. I have been amazed at my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, whom I have known intimately for 12 years [Mr. Underhill]. He came into this House fresh from the people, and the first thing he did was to attack Members of Congress for letting the lights burn in the daytime in their offices when they were not there, and a distinguished colleague, who is not here to-day, and who is not now on this earth, rose and gave him such a trimming that he did not open his mouth again for six months. But let me go on and see what he said. He had not been here long in his practice of economy until they put him on a special committee to bring about economies; and, lo and behold, instead of discharging these people on patronage that he says do not amount to anything, they come back here and add more on patronage after his committee acted. What did he do? A man named Walter Brown was made the chairman of a committee, and, with the gentleman's support, Mr. Brown drew $7,500 a year as chairman of a legislative committee when he was not in Congress, in the Harding régime. And it was over the protest of every Democrat on this side of the House, but with the support of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Underhill]. And to-day he complains of a few men around here who are on patronage-one elevator boy to a few Members of Congress-and, if you discharged every single man who is here on patronage in the entire city, the money saved would not run the Government for 15 minutes. Let us see what else he did. He complains about Congress and about the

When he came here the Democratic Party turned over to him and his party a Treasury with millions of dollars of surplus, and a land that was flowing with milk and honey. After 12 years under his leadership, we have a $20,000,000,000 indebtedness and a $2,000,000,000 deficit, and the whole country is broke.

Mr. SCHAFER. To keep the record straight, in 1919, under the Democratic administration, our national debt reached the staggering sum of over $29,000,000,000.

Mr. PARKS. No; and I will tell you what the Democratic Party did. We came out of that World War. We conducted it under a Democratic administration with honor to the party and glory to the Nation, and your party appointed twenty-odd snooping committees and you did not find a dollar that we had stolen, and before your party had been in power four years, you had a Cabinet officer that you selected on the road to the penitentiary. Oh, yes; the distinguished gentleman wants to fire an elevator boy to save money, but he voted to spend millions of dollars for the Department of Commerce Building that is unnecessary. He has voted, over my protest, to tear down the Post Office Department Building, squandering thousands and thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money that he is now crying over. I tell you what you need to do. I will tell you what those other gentlemen ought to do. They should get down on their knees and get into closer communion with Almighty God and a sweeter fellowship with man and stop this everlasting abuse and crying out against Congress, based on nothing. Yes. There was an editorial that half the people of the United States probably read declaring not 40 Congressmen were here when an important measure carrying millions of dollars was being passed. Why do you not tell them the Committee on Appropriations from the 1st day of November up until this time has been laboring and laboring, striving to reduce the indebtedness of this Government and cut appropriations by hundreds of millions of dollars? Yet they are sending throughout this land, with newspaper sanction, to every chamber of commerce urging them to write you to cut down appropriations a billion dollars more. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Parks] has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL] such time as he desires. Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the question of how to bring back prosperity is answered in this way: Lifting agriculture out of the depression is the first move. How can it be done? First, by making a market to sell farm products in America. Second, by producing a market for the sale of automobiles, tractors, and trucks. Third, by bringing about a greater use of gasoline as a motor fuel.

Paul Beshers, a chemist in El Paso, Ill., has conceived a plan of mixing 10 per cent alcohol with gasoline to be used in all motor fuels in the United States, and the alcohol to be distilled from the products of the American farm.

This country uses approximately 17,000,000,000 gallons of fuel oil every year; and by using 10 per cent alcohol in all of the gasoline fuel, which would mean about 1,700,000,000 gallons, or, translated in farm products, would mean 680,000,000 bushels of corn, which is about one-fourth of the corn crop of the United States.

Let me analyze this proposition to the Congress of the United States in this way: Alcohol can be made from the products of the American farm. Most of the industrial alcohol of the Nation is now made from blackstrap molasses. This blackstrap molasses is mostly imported, and therefore should not be allowed to be used in the manufacture of alcohol for fuel purposes unless it would be the blackstrap raised in these United States of America.

It is not at all necessary to make all of the alcohol of corn, or barley malt, which makes the yeast, but these products are the most available, the most easily transformed from grain to alcohol; and if the corn of the country is used in this way, it makes it possible for the other products of the farm to be used in other ways, because it takes corn off the market and leaves the other grains for feeding, food, and export uses.

How could this be brought about? By an agreement of the automobile manufacturers and the oil-producing refineries of the country with the agriculture industry.

The mode of procedure would be to get an agreement first with these three great industries of the country. If an agreement could be made with them and it was brought to the Congress of the United States, my judgment is that the Members of the Congress would agree to pass legislation that would bring about the use of at least 10 per cent of the products of the American farm in the production of 200 per cent alcohol to be mixed on a basis of 10 per cent with the gasoline to make the motor fuel of the country.

Distilleries would have to be built for this purpose. They should be built with a large capacity and in locations where alcohol could be produced at the lowest possible cost. Twenty-five thousand bushel distilleries would operate less expensively than the smaller distilleries. The locations should be where there is cheap fuel and in the heart of the corn-producing area. These distilleries could be located in different strategic points and the places where I believe the alcohol could be made the cheapest would include the following cities: Hammond, Ind.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Sioux City or Davenport, Iowa; Pekin and Peoria, Ill. I am rather bashful about mentioning Peoria because it is my home city, but, on the other hand, it was the location of the large-sized distilleries of this country before prohibition, the reason being that it is located in the central part of the corn country, has 14 railroads running into it, has coal within a proximity of 5 miles, and is now on the great inland waterway system. It has good water for distilling purposes, which is a necessity. It has cheap coal and good shipping facilities for bringing in the grain and taking out the finished product; besides, it is accustomed to this very large business and would in all probability be the leading city in the United States for the manufacture of 200 per cent alcohol to be mixed with the gasoline for motor fuel.

At this juncture I will give you some reasons why agriculture has failed, and if you will follow the trend of my remarks you can easily see the reason of agriculture's overproduction. The overproduction is caused largely by the decrease in the animals of the Nation. This was brought about by the increase in automobiles, trucks, and tractors. There has been a general decrease of animals and also a decrease in the birth rate of the Nation, and I quote as follows:

Comparing 10 years from 1920 to 1930: Decrease in birth rate from 23.7 per cent to 18.9 per cent; the number of horses on the farms decreased from 20,000,000 to 13,000,000; the number of cattle on the farms, not including cows, decreased from 47,000,000 to 35,000,000.

In these 10 years there was an increase of 17,000,000 automobiles and a decrease of 23,000,000 farm animals.

Less than one-fourth of the volume of all farm food products is consumed by people and more than three-fourths by other living things, chief of which are cattle, horses, and pigs. Thus between the years 1920 and 1930 the consumption of farm food products by the population of the United States increased in volume from 106 to 122, while the consumption of farm products by all animals, including mules and cows, but not including sheep, changed from 577 to 490. The total consumption of food products by the population and animals changed from 683 in 1920 to 612 in 1930, a decrease of about 11 per cent. In the same time our exports of crude and manufactured foodstuffs decreased (average 1920, 1921, 1922) from $1,400,000,000 to $680,000,000 (average 1928, 1929, 1930), a decrease of about a further 7 per cent of the total production of farm crops.

It would, therefore, seem that in spite of an increase of the population from 106,000,000 in 1920 to 122,000,000 in 1930 the total consumption in the United States and the exports of food products from the United States together declined in volume about 18 per cent in this period. Stated quite clearly, with 26,000,000 automobiles in use, and the consequent loss of farm animals, there is no market, and in the immediate years to come there is not in sight any market, for 18 per cent of all the food crops produced in the United States.

Each automobile, as nearly as can be calculated, means the death of one and one-quarter animals. Each automobile, by destroying the demand for animals which otherwise would have lived, means that $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres of American farm land no longer has a market for its products. Would it not be fair and just that each automobile should remedy the destruction it has caused and be expected to consume its allotted portion of farm products? The most perfect fuel would be 200 proof ethyl alcohol mixed with gasoline.

The United States Navy and the United States Post Office have found that gasoline, when mixed with absolute alcohol, produces a superior airplane fuel. (Quotation from Encyclopædia Britannica under Alcohol.)

If the mixture is an actual advantage as a motor fuel, then a solution of our entire agricultural problem becomes apparent. The simple requirement, that 10 per cent of all gasoline must be a vegetable product, immediately would demand the use of the products of approximately the 30,000,000 acres of farm land for which the market has been destroyed by automobiles. This would furnish a no-knock fuel at an increase in the cost of gasoline of less than 2 cents per gallon, which is about the present cost for similar fuel, and, comparatively speaking, is a small price to pay for rebalancing the chief cause of the present world depression.

In addition to this statement there is a reason why the automobile manufacturer and the gasoline producer should consider this bill, and I quote Sidney A. Swensrud, assistant to the president of the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio:

In reference to 1933 outlook for automobiles in use, effect on gasoline consumption at the end of 1933, it seems probable there will be approximately 4,850,000 cars and trucks less in use, available for gasoline consumption, than at the close of 1930, a decline of approximately 20 per cent.

able for gasoline consumption, than at the close of 1930, a decline of approximately 20 per cent.

Should we produce only the average number that was produced from 1923 through 1930, namely, 3,600,000 a year, presumably we would just keep even with the dismantlements and consequently not increase the total number of cars in use. In that case the oil industry would have to reconcile itself through the next half dozen years to a market that was approximately 20 per cent smaller than it was in 1930.

It is apparent from this statement that the gasoline producers are taking notice of the loss that they are to sustain in the nonproduction of automobiles.

There is no way to increase the production of automobiles in this country except through the improvement of agriculture. If the farmer can sell his grain at a profit so that he will be financially able to purchase automobiles, he will purchase them and then in turn will purchase gasoline.

It is quite evident that this bill, if passed by the Congress of the United States, would be of an equal benefit to the farmer and the automobile manufacturer and to the gasoline producer. These three great agencies can, if they will, combine on legislation of this character and pass it in the Congress of the United States and thus relieve agriculture of its terrible depression.

Congressman Homer Hall, of Illinois, and myself, William E. Hull, of Illinois, introduced two bills very similar. Mr. Hall's bill was H. R. 14626. My bill was H. R. 14627. These two bills were referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

We have consulted each other in the writing of these bills. We have made them different purposely so that the Ways and Means Committee would be able to develop a bill to present to the House that would meet all the requirements. I am positive that if the Members of Congress will give these bills due consideration and adopt legislation to compel the mixing of gasoline and absolute 200 proof alcohol that it will be the means of bringing the farming industry of this Nation out of its terrible indebtedness, because it will use up all the surplus grain in the country and will replace the amount of grain that would have been fed to the people and to the animals of the country and the loss of export grain by having the automobile, the truck, and the tractor use it in the form of fuel.

I present this matter to the House to-day with a suggestion that those who remain in Congress as our successors will give this legislation due consideration and pass it through the Congress of the United States. By doing this you will win a great victory for the farmers of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The alcohol used in gasoline would have to be about 200 proof?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Two hundred proof.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. How many gallons of alcohol can be made from 1 bushel of corn?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Five proof gallons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. William E. Hull] has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. LOVETTE].

Mr. LOVETTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to call attention to a resolution which I am introducing to amend the Constitution of the United States. I will not have time to discuss this resolution, but hope at some later date to have an opportunity to do so. I ask unanimous consent to insert the resolution in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States.

ARTICLE-

Section 1. The Congress shall have power to regulate the hours of labor in mines, mills, factories, and workshops engaged in the manufacture and production of goods or commodities transported or to be transported in interstate commerce.

SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by three-fourths of the legislatures of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Mr. LOVETTE. The Committee on Labor has taken a great deal of proof showing the conditions of unemployment in the country, and in an effort to remedy the same has reported favorably a bill limiting the hours of labor to five days per week and six hours per day in the manufacture of all goods and commodities to be shipped in interstate commerce. I understand also that a similar bill has been favorably reported in the Senate. I am of the opinion that neither of these bills will become a law in this session of Congress. I am also convinced that such legislation would be declared unconstitutional, or at least that there are such grave constitutional questions involved that the chances are largely against its constitutionality. It is urged by some that the general-welfare clause of the Constitution is sufficient to warrant such legislation by Congress. I do not think so. The Supreme Court has held in a number of cases, and particularly in the child-labor case, that such legislation is in violation of the Constitution. I am, therefore, proposing this resolution as an amendment to the Constitution so that there can be no question as to the authority of Congress to enact this legislation, if it should desire to do so. We are in a great crisis; business is paralyzed everywhere; 12,000,000 people are out of employment and conditions are growing worse every day. Something must be done. Something must be done by Congress or something will be done by this vast army of unemployed which is now, in a large part, living on charity. The charity organizations of the country are becoming exhausted. They can no longer meet the demands and certainly the demands of an increasing army of unemployed. If business should be revived and production brought to the normal of ordinary prosperous times, that is, to a state sufficient to supply the normal demands in reasonably prosperous times, there would still be 6,000,000 people out of employment. It, therefore, becomes necessary to limit the hours of employment in order to distribute labor equitably among those who are competent, qualified, and willing to work. The only chance, and the only hope to secure a proper and equitable division of work is by limiting the hours. It can only be done by the Federal Government. To leave it to the States would require uniform State laws on the subject, which is impossible to obtain. The States can not, or will not, pass such laws and make them uniform. It seems that the efficiency of machinery in this machine age has brought disaster to labor. It must be controlled in some way. Even during this depression the experts tell us that the efficiency of machinery has increased 25 per cent and is still increasing. To bring about a proper readjustment of the labor situation and to protect labor against unemployment, legislation by Congress limiting the hours of work is necessary. I hope at some early date to be able to discuss this resolution more fully, and I submit it in the hope that those who are interested in this subject, and particularly the lawyers of the House, give it serious consideration.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this place in the Record and to include certain excerpts from the testimony of the Chief of Staff on the War Department appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

From the very beginning it has been the unswerving purpose of our Government to maintain the American Army, including the commissioned personnel thereof, as a true product of democracy. Our forefathers fiatly refused to adopt the European practice of reserving military commissions for the sons of the wealthy and aristocratic classes. Instead they determined to fix rates of pay for officers on a basis that would permit any man possessing the necessary ability, character, and inclination to enter the military profession without regard to social or financial standing. In furtherance of this same purpose, appointments to the officer corps have long been made on the basis of competitive examination, a system that is now used by the vast majority of Senators and Representatives in designating candidates for West Point.

The result of these measures is a corps of officers constituting a representative cross section of educated Americans. Each member of that corps undergoes a progressive and thorough military train-

The result of these measures is a corps of officers constituting a representative cross section of educated Americans. Each member of that corps undergoes a progressive and thorough military training. Salutary laws require elimination of the obviously unfit. The further result of all this is that the standards of ability among commissioned personnel have been maintained at levels at least equaling those prevailing in any other of the leading professions. On a comparative basis efficiency has been remarkably high; emoluments have been disproportionately low.

Since 1861 the laws governing Army compensation have been based upon the principle of combining a current salary supporting a reasonable living standard with a retired pay to which the officer becomes entitled, either through years of continuous service or because of disability incident thereto.

There are several compelling reasons for adhering to a system of this general character. One of them is its effect in avaiding

There are several compelling reasons for adhering to a system of this general character. One of them is its effect in avoiding wasteful turnover in commissioned personnel. Without a liberal retirement feature, the officer, always on a meager salary, would be tempted to enter civil life whenever opportunity for immediate betterment presented itself. It is an obvious governmental extravagance to educate for the Army fine young men of upstanding character and good minds and then have them resign because of an utterly hopeless future.

Maximum retired pay is fixed by law at three-fourths of activeduty pay; but the actual ratio is much less than this, since upon retirement certain allowances which accrue to active officers are automatically terminated. The average pay of an officer after retirement is about 55 per cent of that he was receiving just prior Laws governing active-duty pay have always taken full cognizance of the advantages accorded the officer by reason of his retirement privilege. Consequently pay schedules have habitually been fixed at levels below those for civil positions in which equal ability and efficiency and unimpeachable integrity are required. This differential has often been far too great.

I want to make perfectly clear my conception of the officer's position with respect to the matter of pay.

An efficient army is a priceless possession of a government, while an inefficient army is the greatest extravagance that a government can have. The Army, therefore, requires that its officers be men of the highest type. Such men can not be secured for a wage. They are not hirelings. Theirs is not a job but a career and a life work of devotion to duty.

The officers and soldiers of an army are expected to consecrate themselves to their country, to subordinate their personalities, their rights, their privileges, and their opportunities to the good of the Nation as a whole. In time of peace officers and soldiers are at a material disadvantage. They must give up the opportunities offered them in our country for gain and for prosperity in civil life. They often live in remote places and under trying climatic conditions that affect their health and the health of their families. They sacrifice what is very dear to everyone—community interests and associations. They are often socially isolated, not from choice but because their economic condition prevents them from participating in the normal lives of civilians of the same education, character, and attainments. They bear the expenses of constantly adjusting their family possessions to the requirements of new dwelling places. They must purchase costly uniforms as well as the normal outfittings of civilian clothes. They are at a disadvantage in the education of their children by reason of frequent moves, and are not able in the majority of cases to send their children to private schools.

Every man in this country has a right to aspire to the improvement of his scale of living. It is one of the blessings of our free Government. Every man in this room has aspired to and no doubt has attained a better place in life, and Army officers are like the rest of the people. I believe that all public-spirited Americans expect the Army to be taken care of by the Government in a way that is commensurate with the importance of their mission in this great country. They expect their officers to be given, by the Government, a scale of living that will enable them to have self-respect and to be respected by their associates, and that will give the country and the people a sense of pride in them as their protectors in war and as the men who must prepare this country for war and lead it in battle.

With this backgrou of devotion to duty.

The officers and soldiers of an army are expected to consecrate

With this background of the purposes and general character of traditional pay and retirement policies I take up first for specific comment the restrictions proposed in this bill upon active duty

The current pay law was enacted in 1922, and more than any previous one is based directly upon the principle of increased pay for increased length of service. Due to the heterogeneous character of the active list at that time, Congress appreciated that a very unequal flow of promotion was to be anticipated, and that large numbers of officers were facing the certainty of many years with little or no advancement in rank. A gradually increasing renumeration was devised as a partial amelioration of the inescapable evils of this situation.

Also because of the nonhomogeneous composition of the list, attempt was made to equalize credit for services of various kinds previously performed, and initial rates of pay were fixed on this basis. This introduced no new principle into our pay system. Cadet service had been authorized as a credit toward longevity for every officer who entered the Military Academy between 1829. Cadet service had been authorized as a credit toward longevity for every officer who entered the Military Academy between 1832 and 1912. Enlisted service has been counted for the same purposes for about a hundred years. In addition, the 1922 law took cognizance of prior service in the National Guard and in the Philippine Scouts. Admittedly many cases of individual injustice were occasioned in this equalizing process, but in the main the Congress made the best of an intricate and involved situation. All officers of the pre-war Army were fully protected in previously accorded rights, while those only recently commissioned thoroughly understood the conditions specified in that legislation. Every officer has naturally believed that if Congress should ever alter the essentials of the policies then laid down or reaffirmed, it would do so only after a full consideration of all pertinent factors and in such manner as would not adversely affect the rights and privileges then proffered him. and privileges then proffered him.

There is ample evidence of the meticulous care the Congress has always exercised in this regard. When the practice of counting cadet and midshipman service for longevity purposes was discontinued by law in 1912, there were definitely excluded from the provisions of that act all men then included in our military and naval services. Again, in the general revision of pay laws in 1922 it was specifically provided that no officer should draw less pay under the new act than he was then entitled to under the old.

Leaving for the moment all questions of good faith and justice involved in this proposal, it is pertinent to inquire into the material sacrifices that would be imposed thereby upon the several groups most seriously affected. I have already commented upon the relatively low levels at which officers have always been remunerated. The general rates of pay in effect just prior to the beginning of the present economic depression were established in 1922. They represented very slight increases over the rates prevailing in 1908. When compared to the enormous salary rises experienced in other professions during the 70-year period following our Civil War, present Army pay is far behind the schedules of 1870. A few random comparisons will clearly establish the very unfavorable position of our officers with respect to the pay situation.

In 1870 a Cabinet officer received $8,000, a Member of Congress

In 1870 a Cabinet officer received $8,000, a Member of Congress $5,000, and a major general $7,500. By 1925 Cabinet pay had risen to $15,000, or an 87 per cent increase; congressional pay to $10,000, or a 100 per cent increase; and the pay of a major general to $8,438, or a 12½ per cent increase.

In summarized form I present here a group analysis of increases in various governmental services covering the period 1908–1928.

Services	Payrange, 1908	Payrange, 1928	Per cent of in- crease in median of range
Cabinet Assistant Secretaries Congress Judiciary Foreign Service Civil service (clerical) Post-office inspector Civil service (mechanical) Public schools, District of Columbia Army and Navy	7, 500 6, 000-13, 000 1, 000-3, 000 720-3, 000 1, 200-3, 000 601-1, 878	$15,000 9,000-10,000 10,000-20,000 2,500-9,000 1,260-6,000 2,800-4,500 1,327-5,333 1,400-4,400 1,1719-9,700	25 111 33 57 187 95 78 169 123

1 Maximum permanent salary with all allowances.

In the Army the average increase, counting all grades, has been approximately 11 per cent during the same period.

The teaching profession has long been known as one of the most poorly paid. Disregarding temporary reductions due to the current depression, members of this profession are paid in New York City the following annual salaries:

Superintendent of schools	$25,000 12,500
Examiners District superintendents and principals of high schools	11, 000 8, 000–10, 000
Elementary-school principals	5, 500-7, 500 1, 608-4, 844

No officer of the Army can hope to attain to the rates of pay indicated for the three highest classes of officials on this list. Only a major general can ever draw the salary of a high-school principal, the fourth classification given above, and only a senior field officer receives the average pay of the elementary-school principal, the fifth classification above. A captain of 15 years' continuous service draws a smaller salary, even when counting all allowances for dependents, than the maximum provided by New York City for a teacher in its schools. A second lieutenant stationed in the field or in a garrison, and without dependents, must serve nine years to reach a pay level of $2,500 per year.

Comparison with foreign armies reveals an equally unfavorable

Comparison with foreign armies reveals an equally unfavorable situation in the American Military Establishment. The only other country in which standards of living approach those of the United States is Great Britain. Since that country, like ours, also uses the volunteer system in her defense forces, a brief analysis of the military pay schedules prevailing there is pertinent to this discussion cussion.

The normal pay of the British chief of staff, at regular rates of exchange, is approximately $25,000, compared to $10,419 in our own Army. In the British forces are a number of generals and lieutenant generals who normally draw, when in positions of command, about $17,500 per year. These grades are unknown in our Army in time of peace, except for the temporary rank given the Chief of Staff. A British major general commanding a division normally receives some 40 per cent more than our officers of equal rank. In lower grades the schedules are more nearly alike. The significance of this comparison lies in the fact that for every kind of position in the industrial and commercial fields American rates of pay are far in excess of the British scales. In some of the trades and professions the ratio is as high as 2 or 3 to 1. This applies also to certain civil positions of government. As an extreme example, the pay of a member of Parliament is one-fifth that of an American Congressman and is about the same as that of a lieutenant in the British Army.

By every standard of comparison it is plain that our officers

By every standard of comparison it is plain that our officers have habitually served at extremely low rates of pay.

The amendment included in the bill as it lies before you would reduce, in varying degree, the pay of those active and retired officers with less than 30 years' commissioned service in the Federal forces who have heretofore been credited by law with service of other kinds. Parenthetically I may remark that no colonel, brigadier general, or major general, or any other active officer commissioned prior to 1904, would have his pay reduced one cent under this amendment.

Senator REED. This would not affect you at all, would it?

General MacArthur. No, sir; in no respect whatsoever, nor any of the senior officers. It hits the juniors.

Two of the groups that would suffer most severely under this proviso are former National Guard officers commissioned in 1920 and others who have some years of enlisted service to their credit. West Point classes from 1904 to 1910, inclusive, would be affected in relatively minor degree, but graduates of that school in the classes of 1911 and 1916 would suffer substantial present and future losses. The West Point class of 1903 entered the service under identical conditions as to kinds of service credited toward longevity as did each succeeding class to include the one graduating in 1916. The 1903 man has drawn longevity pay for 30 years for a kind of service that it is now proposed to eliminate, yet under the terms of this amendment he would suffer not one cent of loss during the coming year, while a 1913 graduate would lose more than $1,200.

The general result of this amendment would be that on the active list the major portion of the sacrifice would be borne by men who were commissioned just before, during, and after the World War. This group constitutes in general what is known as the hump, every member of which had World War service. They face a bleak future now in the matter of promotion, and to add this additional burden seems uselessly unfair and unjust.

Altogether, some 4,000 active officers and about 50 per cent of the retired list would be affected. Among the latter group it is a tragic fact that most of those who would suffer this reduction have been retired for disability in the service of their country. One of these would lose one-third of his present pay. In the vast majority of all cases on both the active and retired lists these reductions would represent real financial hardship.

The effects of this amendment would, of course, extend beyond tions would represent real financial hardship.

The effects of this amendment would, of course, extend beyond the confines of the Regular Army. Every reserve officer when called to active duty and every National Guard officer serving his annual tour in camp would suffer a direct, and in many cases a very considerable loss in pay. Obviously these citizen soldiers increase in value to the Government through their years of service in their respective components. Yet since this type of service is specifically excluded for longevity purposes, no reserve or National Guard officer could ever have his pay increased except through the Guard officer could ever have his pay increased except through the exceedingly slow process of promotion.

But beyond the matter of inequitable distribution of this burden among military personnel a further question presents itself. This involves the justice of requiring men in the uniformed services to make greater sacrifices than any other group of public services.

services to make greater sadrinces than any other group of public servants.

From the officer's meager salary there is taken under the economy act 8½ per cent, a figure which now seems likely to be increased to 10 per cent. His rental allowance has been reduced by 10 per cent, and that for subsistence by approximately 14 per cent. These two reductions we are informed will be increased for the coming year to 20 and 28 per cent, respectively.

Additional pay authorized for many years for mounted officers, for duty as an aide, for particular positions at West Point, and for other special assignments has been eliminated. In addition to the reductions enumerated the Army officer, like all other citizens, is subject to general taxation. He pays Federal income taxes and many types of municipal and State taxes when living in a civil community. The net result of all this is that men in the uniformed services are returning to the Government a far greater proportion of their normal salaries than is generally realized. In every case these contributions are greater than are required for other Federal officials and employees of equivalent authorized income. It is estimated that in the average case these contributions to Government from the Army officer's salary run from 16 to 20 per cent.

contributions to Government from the Army officer's salary run from 16 to 20 per cent.

Our commissioned officers regard all these sacrifices as burdens to be uncomplainingly borne in response to the need of the Government. But in the case of the amendment now before you an entirely different picture is presented. They can not help but feel that discrimination against them has been accentuated, and that this arbitrary action would constitute virtual repudiation by the Government of a long-standing pact entered into with its sworn defenders. This feeling is not confined to those officers directly affected. Rather there is general apprehension that this proviso serves notice of the Government's intention to disregard prior commitments and promises whenever it may become convenient to do so. Should this apprehension change to conviction the effect in the uniformed services would be scarcely less than demoralizing.

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the State of California, $25,000; the State of Massachusetts, $25,000; the State of New York, $25,000; and the State of Pennsylvania, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, and so forth, approved March 4, 1911 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 1121), and for the maintenance and repair of the particular vessels loaned by the United States to the said States on the date of the approval of this act for use in connection with such State approval of this act for use in connection with such State marine schools, $110,400, and no other vessels shall be furnished by or through the Navy Department; in all, $210,400.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, if this language remains in the bill, would it become permanent law?

Mr. AYRES. No. It is just confined to this bill.

Mr. GOSS. It is just confined to this year?

Mr. AYRES. It is just confined to this year. That is all.

Mr. GOSS. I have no objection to carrying the language this year, but I would not want that to go in as permanent

Mr. AYRES. It is just for this year. Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, on the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. AYRES: Page 13, line 19, strike out "$1,163,155" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,134,036."

Mr. AYRES. In adjusting the figures in the paragraph to provide for 48 drills, $29,119 too much was made available to the aviation branch. The total of the appropriation is not disturbed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the item that provides for the pay of the Naval Reserves, I believe?

Mr. AYRES. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the committee, as the gentleman stated in his prefatory remarks, followed the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department bill, in departing from the budgetary estimate of 24 drills, and provided for 42 drills?

Mr. AYRES. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. And in the War Department appropriation bill, as far as the National Guard was concerned, that increase of drills, I believe, resulted in an aggregate appropriation of $9,000,000?

Mr. AYRES. Approximately; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought that was one instance where the Congress, without doing drastic harm to the service of the National Guard, could have curtailed the activity to, say, 36 drills, providing for 3 drills per month rather than 4 drills per month, but it went through this House without any contest at all, surrendering very lightly to the power of the National Guard at home. Now, the committee has followed the policy of the Army Appropriation Subcommittee?

Mr. AYRES. The committee was not disposed to discriminate.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much do these additional drills,

42 instead of 24, entail upon the Treasury?

Mr. AYRES. We have added $300,000. The department's estimate was $405,032, but we effected savings totaling $52,156 and have assumed that the remainder of the difference could be found by the department in administering the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year there was a fight made on the floor of the House, which was defeated by a very narrow vote, providing for the Naval Reserves.

The subcommittee followed the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. What is the policy of the committee this year toward that activity, particularly on the Great Lakes?

Mr. AYRES. We are providing for a period of training duty of 14 days as was the practice before this fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year the committee followed the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy to curtail this activity.

Mr. AYRES. We did; that is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the committee has departed from that recommendation this year.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Largely on the ground, I presume, of the policy the House established as to the National Guard.

Mr. AYRES. Partly that, and also because the department and the Budget advocate resumption of the training cruises.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not much disposition, then, to curtail expenditures after the election. It is all right when we go before the electorate for approval to preach economy, but after the election has been held and the issue decided, economy is then thrown to the winds.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment for the purpose of asking a question. I have received a very large number of letters complaining about the reduction of the number of drills.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman that under the bill the number of drills will be continued at 48. We have disregarded the Budget proposal.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They have not been reduced. Mr. AYRES. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL HOME, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For pay of employees, $57,182: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $15,000.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. AYRES: Page 14, line 18, strike out "$57,182" and insert in lieu thereof "$76,806."

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I may state that in restoring the several amounts taken off the Navy's estimate by the Budget in anticipation of a 30 per cent wage cut, we failed to put back the $19,624 taken off this item.

This change does not affect the total of the bill at all because the Naval Home is supported out of the income from the naval pension fund.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is also necessary, in view of the gentleman's statement, is it not, on page 15, line 16, to increase the appropriation.

Mr. AYRES. I expect to do that by unanimous consent. Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. As I understand from reading page 36 of the report, this item is carried as a total permanent indefinite appropriation. It now comes in here on the annual supply bill. This is not in addition to the permanent appropriation, is it?

Mr. AYRES. No; I may say to the gentleman from Connecticut that it is customary to provide specifically for the Naval Home in the bill itself.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask the gentleman if all the permanent indefinite appropriations as far as the Navy Department is concerned are carried in the annual supply bill?

Mr. AYRES. This is the only one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, auxiliary machinery, and boilers of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats, distilling and refrigerating apparatus; repairs, preservation, and renewals of electric interior and exterior signal communications and all electrical appliances of whatsoever nature on board naval vessels, except range finders, battle order and range transmitters and indicators, and motors and their controlling apparatus used to operate machinery belonging to other bureaus; searchlights and fire-control equipment for antiaircraft defense at shore stations; maintenance and operation of coast signal service; equipage, supplies, and materials under the cognizance of the bureau required for the maintenance and operation of naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats; purchase, installation, repair, and preservation of machinery, tools, and appliances in navy yards and stations, accident prevention, pay of classified field force under the bureau; incidental expenses for naval vessels, navy yards, and stations, inspectors' offices, the engineering experiment station, such as photographing, technical books and periodicals, stationery, and instruments; services, instruments, machines and auxiliaries, apparatus, and supplies, and technical books and periodicals necessary to carry on experimental and research work; maintenance and equipment of buildings and grounds at the engineering experiment station, Annapolis, Md.; payment of part time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employee; in all, $17,945,950, of which $250,000 shall be available exclusively for the procurement and installation of new tools and machinery for shops under the cognizance of the Bureaus of Engineering and Construction and Repair, and $540,000 shall be available exclusively to complete the purchase of certain invent

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph which I hardly think I shall press, but I wish to get some information concerning this item which authorizes the Navy Department to purchase certain patents relating to radio broadcasting for which $500,000 is appropriated in this item.

I would like to have as to the reason why the committee is authorizing the department to purchase patent rights relating to radio broadcasting.

Mr. AYRES. The current naval appropriation act continued in effect an additional period of 18 months the license agreement entered into by the Navy Department May 2, 1931, for the use of certain inventions pertaining to radio control, and authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts for the purchase of the patents covered by that license agreement subject to appropriations therefor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I stated, I hardly intended to press the point of order even though it were well taken, but the report does not give the information I desired as to the reason for spending half a million dollars for the purchase of patent rights.

Mr. AYRES. Some time ago, pursuant to law, the Navy Department entered into an agreement with Hammond, the patentee, and others, for the lease of this patent, the amounts paid for the lease to apply upon the purchase

Mr. STAFFORD. As the gentleman is speaking, and on the suggestion of my friend, the gentleman from Connecticut, there is brought to my mind the recollection that the patent rights for which this appropriation is sought is for directing mechanism connected with torpedoes controlled by the invention of John Hays Hammond, jr.

Mr. AYRES. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the report my mind did not advert to that phase of it.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman we went into the matter very fully in the hearings last year. The history of the whole affair will be found commencing on pages 484 and 852 of the hearings of last year.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. I think it should be said that probably the Congress intended that the department would have the authority either to purchase outright or to lease the patents. This act was passed about 10 or 12 years ago, and when certain moneys were appropriated an act was passed covering back into the Treasury certain funds in which were these funds. It was thought by the department that while the act authorizing the purchase was not specifically repealed, and when the money was taken away, possibly it was the intent of Congress to repeal the authorization for purchase as well as withdraw the money.

Mr. AYRES. That is right.

Mr. FRENCH. In order then to revive the thought and to give the department authority we have carried the language as it appears in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many years of the life of the patent remain?

Mr. AYRES. I do not recall. The life of a patent is

Mr. STAFFORD. But this has been running for several years. We are now about to appropriate $500,000. How many more years has the patent to run during which the department will have exclusive control of it?

Mr. AYRES. Under the contract which has been entered into under authority carried in the current naval appropriation act, I should say we are obliged to go through with this matter irrespective of when the patent rights expire.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the chairman of the sub-

I read the report. It did not give as full information as | retention of Admiral Pratt, a matter referred to in the report?

Mr. AYRES. We have not got to that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I know that, but I can not locate in the bill the section to which it relates.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. I yielded thinking that the gentleman had some relevant inquiry.

Mr. AYRES. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that the Government has had the use of these patents over a number of years.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many more years has the patent to run?

Mr. AYRES. I can not state positively. The time is up, no doubt, as to the earlier ones. These patents were granted at various times since about 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR

For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; accident prevention; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank and wind tunnel; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy yards, inspectors' offices, such as photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified field force under the bureau; services, instruments and apparatus, supplies, and technical books and periodicals necessary to carry on experimental and research work; for payment of partitime or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or to carry on experimental and research work; for payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed; for the difference between inactive and active duty pay and allowances of members of the Fleet Naval Reserve transferred thereto after 20 years' naval service who may be employed as shipkeepers under the cognizance of the Bureau of Construction and Repair; for hemp, wire iron, and other materials for the manufacture of hemp, wire, iron, and other materials for the manufacture of cordage, anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; specifications for purchase thereof shall be so prepared as shall give fair and free competition; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, hammocks, and other work; interior appliances and tools for manufacture of sails. mocks, and other work; interior appliances and tools for manufacturing purposes in navy yards and naval stations; and for the purchase of all other articles or equipage at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; naval signals and apparatus, other than electric, namely, signals, lights, lanterns, running lights, and lamps and their appendages for general use on board ship for illuminating purposes; and oil and candles used in connection therewith; bunting and other material for making and repairing flags of all kinds; for all permanent galley fittings and equipage; rugs, carpets, curtains, and hangings on board naval vessels, $15,434,800, of which $250,000 shall be available exclusively for the procurement and installation of new tools and machinery for shops under the cognizance of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Engineering: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedules of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not averaged $2,115,000. Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $2,115,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This should be a pertinent place to make an inquiry as to the wages being paid to our employees in the Naval Establishment.

I note from the report, and I rather approve the position, that the committee has decided not to recommend any cuts in the pay of the men employed in the navy yards and the Naval Establishment, departing thereby from the recommendation of the budgetary officer.

When I read the report in that particular I was wondering whether the committee had adopted the same policy as to the employees in our arsenals under control of the War Department.

Mr. AYRES. That is my understanding. The Budget made no such proposal touching Army employees and the committee indicate what section of the bill relates to the reason given to us for not doing so was because it was felt that there was little, if any, disparity existing between the wages of arsenal employees and comparable employees in outside establishments.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question arose in my mind as to whether there was a harmony of policy so far as the personnel connected with our Naval Establishment is concerned that is comparable to those of the War Department.

Mr. AYRES. All I may say is that we have pursued a harmonious course as to a uniform rate of reduction in consequence of the projected furlough law.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the only reduction in the amount of the pay of the employees of the Naval Establishment has been allowing them a 5-day week.

Mr. AYRES. Commonly called the furlough, amounting to about $8\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what extent does this 81/3 per cent reduction apply to the officer personnel or civilian employees of the Naval Establishment?

Mr. AYRES. It is applicable to all receiving a salary at the rate of more than $1,000 and under $10,000 per annum.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not apply to the employees at least. They are excepted. They are not subject to the cut of 81/3 per cent.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, I would say that all officers of the Navy are subject to the 8½ per cent cut and all employees are subject to it under the provisions of the economy act.

Mr. AYRES. Those receiving over $1,000 and less than $10,000.

Mr. TABER. Of course, if they get $10,000, there is a larger cut.

Mr. STAFFORD. Otherwise there is a uniform reduction of $8\frac{1}{3}$ per cent?

Mr. TABER. That is the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee declined to follow a further recommendation of the budgetary officer to have the wages of these men paid comparable to the wages of the employees in civil employment.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will rise to make a statement on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield so that the gentleman may make a statement.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement about this question. I want to say for myself and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French], that the Budget submitted an estimate from which $13,000,000 had been deducted on account of a projected reduction in navy-yard employees by reason of a proposed reconvening of the wage board.

It was stated that the Budget estimated that the wages of employees outside of the yards have gone down this much. We had before us the responsible officers of the Navy Department and representatives of employees. They all stated to us that they did not believe that a definite determination could be made as to how much, if any, reduction there was in the wages of workmen outside the navy yards who were performing comparable functions, without the convening of a wage board.

This wage board has been prohibited from reconvening over the past year by the provisions of the economy act. Over the years beginning with 1929 and ending with 1932, they were prevented from reconvening by an order of the President. The President having submitted a Budget proposing this cut, frankly, my own position was, and is, that the House should permit the wage board to reconvene and should establish what the wage ought to be in accordance with the laws of 1862 providing for the wage board. This position, I am authorized to say, is concurred in by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I concurred also in that position, but this should be said, that the bill which seeks to make ineffective the action of the wage board in 1934 has not yet passed.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And it may be that it will not pass; if so, then the wage board could be reconvened just as it has been convened in prior years, and any action taken by such board would be effective.

Mr. TABER. That is correct, and if it were, and they determined in accordance with the law that the wages outside had dropped, there would be a saving in this bill, because wages could only be paid in accordance with the law.

There was a question as to whether or not the amounts recommended by the Budget should be submitted or an amount carrying a wage on the basis of what it is now should be carried. The full committee decided that the amount should be carried on the basis of what wages are now without the intervention of a wage board, and this is the way the bill was presented to the House.

I wanted to make this statement in order to make my own position clear.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the economy provisions of the legislative act of last year a specific item was carried forbidding the operation of the wage board and, as I understand it, this same prohibition is carried again this year in the amendment which we adopted the other day.

Mr. FRENCH. The amendment to the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. TABER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the fact is that so far as this body is concerned, we have gone on record as providing for the reestablishment of the wage board.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYRES. I want to state that there is nothing in the economy-act provision that prohibits the wage board from being convened. There is no reason why it can not be convened in an advisory capacity. The language of the economy act simply provides that wages shall not be disturbed by reason of the action of any wage board; that is, there shall not be any reduction beyond that provided by the furlough arrangement by reason of any recommendation of the wage board, but the board may be convened in an advisory capacity.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even though it can be convened, what would be the purpose of its convening when its vitals and its functions have been eliminated?

Mr. TABER. I will tell the gentleman what would be the purpose of convening the board. It would be to demonstrate to the public just what the situation is and what the Government's real, bona fide obligation, regardless of the situation, is to these men.

Mr. STAFFORD. And what the effect would be in case comparable wages were extended to the employees of the Naval Establishment.

Mr. TABER. Yes; it would give us a picture of just what is the true situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who comprise the wage board?

Mr. AYRES. Two officers of the Navy Department and one representative of labor.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE

ORDNANCE AND ORDNANCE STORES, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE

For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material, for the armament of ships; for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances; for the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance; for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and proving grounds; for technical books; plant appliances as now defined by the "Navy Classification of Accounts"; for machinery and machine tools; for accident prevention; for experimental work in connection with the development of ordnance material for the Navy; for maintenance of proving grounds, powder factory, torpedo stations, gun factory, ammunition depots, and naval ordnance plants, and for target practice; not to exceed $15,000 for minor improvements to buildings, grounds, and appurtenances of a character which can be performed by regular station labor; for payment of part time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed; for the maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight and passenger carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval ammunition depots, naval proving grounds, naval ordnance plants, and naval torpedo stations; for the pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, naval ordnance plants, and naval ammunition depots, and for care and operation of schools at ordnance stations at Indianhead, Md., Dahlgren, Va., and South Charleston, W. Va., $10,849,750: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,262,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman as to the status of the armament plant at South Charleston, W. Va.

Mr. AYRES. That is closed down.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has nearly passed out of my mind; but I thought we passed a bill, voted by the Committee on Naval Affairs, disposing of that plant.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdrew his objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not the last objector; I did it originally because I thought it was no time to dispose of any Government plant. I believe it had the active opposition of labor. I was looking at it from a business standpoint, on the ground that it would be almost impossible to find a purchaser in these times of depression. If the gentleman from Georgia is a business man, he will agree with me; if he is not a business man, I would like to hear from him.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It would have given the Secretary of the Navy the discretion to dispose of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When that question last came up I was mute as a mouse, and I did not apply the dry torpedo to it under any circumstances.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of naval personnel: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders (not to exceed 908 officers of the Medical Corps, 186 officers of the Dental Corps, 556 officers of the Supply Corps, 83 officers of the Chaplain Corps, 233 officers of the Construction Corps, 109 officers of the Civil Engineer Corps, and 1,461 warrant and commissioned warrant officers: Provided, That if the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers and officers in any staff corps holding commission on July 1, 1933, is in excess of the number herein stipulated, such excess officers may be retained in the Navy until the number is reduced to the limitations imposed by this act), pay—$27,786,490, including not to exceed $1,121,070 (none of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers or observers except eight officers above the grade of lieutenant commander, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy) for increased pay for making aerial flights, and under the provisions of section 20 of the act approved June 10, 1922, as amended (U. S. C., title 37, sec. 29), no additional compensation shall be allowable or paid to any person in consequence of such statute at a rate in excess of $1,420 per annum; rental allowance, $5,501,197; subsistence allowance, $3,288,744; in all, $36,576,431; officers on the retired list, $5,583,000; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on the retired list, $5,501,162; interest on deposits by men, $3,000; pay of petty officer (not to exceed an average of 6,760 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 5,910), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men d extra pay for men for diving, and cash prizes (not to exceed $71,500) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, and engineering competitions, $65,900,806, and, in addition, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, to make transfers during the fiscal year 1934 from the clothing and small stores fund to this appropriation of sums aggregating not to exceed $1,750,000; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct or undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water or air borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $678,921; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court-martial, $128,800, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors and assistant directors—pay $581,120, rental allowance $30,240, subsistence allowance $16,702; pay retired list $42,200; in all, $670,262; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $10,871,819; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 34, secs. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 983), $5,000; payment of six months' death gratuity, $150,000; in all $126,072,201, and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of four on the retired list, except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards, as authorized by law, and except one retired officer of the line of the grade of rear admiral, who may be paid the

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the entire paragraph.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a point of order to the language on page 22, commencing at line 7 and running down through line 11, including the words "per annum."

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to make the point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. I concede the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GOSS. I have another point of order, Mr. Chairman, on page 24, lines 12 to 25.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We can not consider but one point of order at a time. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. I am willing to concede the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I have another point of order. On page 24, line 9, after the last figures, which reads as follows:

And no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of four on the retired list, except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards, as authorized by law, and except one retired officer of the line of the grade of rear admiral, who may be paid the full pay and allowances of such grade.

I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill. I will reserve it, however, if the chairman of the subcommittee wishes.

Mr. AYRES. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia if he is making the point of order to the entire paragraph or only to the language in lines 14 and 15, beginning with the words "except that the grade of rear admiral," and so forth?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. Is he making it especially to the language in lines 14 and 15?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The point of order is to the whole section, for the time being, but the language I specifically referred to is that beginning with the words in line 14 "except one retired officer of the line of the grade of rear admiral," and so forth. That is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There is no question about that. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman direct his point of order to that language beginning in line 14?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I direct my point of order for the time being to the language from line 9 down to and including the word "grade" in line 16.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia includes language that is not subject to the point of order, would that preclude us from making the point of order to language clearly out of order in line 14? The other is a limitation.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If any portion is out of order, the whole paragraph is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to rule on the point of order as outlined by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; I reserve the point of

Mr. AYRES. I want to explain why this paragraph is here. As to the point of order, I do not care to discuss it. This provision included in line 14 reading "and except one retired officer of the line of the grade of rear admiral" was for the sole purpose of making it possible for the retiring Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Pratt, to be continued on active duty in an advisory capacity during the fiscal year 1934 in his permanent grade of rear admiral.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman realizes that he is attempting to do here what the committee attempted to do for General Pershing, who commanded the United States Army in the greatest war of history.

Mr. AYRES. No, Mr. Chairman; there is no similarity in the two cases at all, in my judgment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let him retire like every other officer, the same as we retired Dewey and every other officer.

Mr. AYRES. Admiral Pratt, so far as I know, and I think so far as the committee knows-and I say this in justice to him-was not aware of the fact that this action was being taken until after this committee put this provision in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I so understand.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I entertain for Admiral Pratt the same high esteem that the gentleman has, but I do think that it is a bad precedent at this time, and by making the point of order I do not wish it to be construed as casting any reflection on the distinguished services of Admiral Pratt. I think it will affect the morale of the whole organization adversely if favoritism of this kind is shown.

Mr. GOSS. I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] to the words:

And no part of such sum shall be available to pay active duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of four on the retired list.

Contained in lines 9, 10, and 11, on page 24. desirable to keep that much of it, I would say that that is not subject to the point of order, while the rest is.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think the only part that should go out is in line 14.

Mr. GOSS. What about "except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty "?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am willing to limit my point of order, commencing in line 14, after the word "law" and extending down to line 16, to the proviso.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is the opinion of the Chair that the point of order is well taken and he sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on lines 12 to 14, page 24, to the word "except" for the purpose of finding out about this exception.

Mr. AYRES. Let me read from the law to the gentleman:

Boards for selection of staff officers for recommendation for advancement to the rank of rear admiral shall be composed of not less than three nor more than nine officers of the rank of admiral or commodore on the active or retired list of the staff corps concerned.

Mr. GOSS. I do not exactly understand what that means. What is the purpose of the exception?

Mr. AYRES. The purpose is to permit of the temporary employment of retired officers on active duty, as authorized by law, over and above the four in the text just preceding the language to which the gentleman addresses his inquiry.

Mr. GOSS. Therefore, no retired officer, if this language were omitted from the bill, could serve on these boards as the law contemplates.

Mr. AYRES. That is correct.

Mr. GOSS. And you are excepting them.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman has failed to read all of the paragraph and for that reason has drawn an erroneous conclusion. This is intended to carry out the law which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to select officers, on the active or the retired list, for temporary duty. That provision has been regularly carried for a number of years.

Mr. GOSS. But then you except.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Officers not in excess of four on the retired list.

Mr. GOSS. Now, is that the same as is carried in the Army bill? Do you exempt four in the War Department bill?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I do not understand there is any provision similar to this on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GOSS. Why should you make an exception of four officers here?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There is a selection board provided for by law for the selection of naval officers in certain grades. As I understand, there is no board of that kind with reference to Army officers provided for by law.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. This is to select high-ranking naval officers. They want to get the most distinguished admirals in the Navy living.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. This law was passed years ago. There are some who feel it might be helpful if made applicable to the Army.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In other words, these men who have retired and who no longer have any concern personally with reference to any promotion or place of preferment are better qualified to serve on this board than some officers who are still in the active service?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is one reason, and another reason was there was an insufficient number of active staff officers in the higher grades for this important detail.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of these statements, I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Further reserving the point of order, do I understand that the so-called Pratt amendment is out? Mr. AYRES. That has been eliminated, I am sorry to Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the "dog robber" provision still in the bill—this last proviso?

Mr. AYRES. Which is that?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The last proviso. We call it "dog robbers" or "strikers" in the Army.

Mr. AYRES. That remains in.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Now will the gentleman accept an amendment, after the words "enlisted man," to insert "or civil employee," in line 22, so that it will read "allowances or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee, performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer," and so forth?

Mr. AYRES. Yes; I am perfectly willing to accept that. Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think that should go in.

Mr. AYRES. I am willing to accept that amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his point of order?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The point of order is withdrawn, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order to the entire paragraph.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. Ayres: Page 22, line 2, strike out "$1,121,070" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,289,770."

Mr. AYRES. I will state to the committee that that is made necessary on account of the point of order that was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in view of what has occurred, that on line 25, page 24, the period be stricken out and a semicolon inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LaGuardia: On page 24, line 22, after the word "man" insert "or civil employee."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee having accepted the amendment, I will not take time to discuss it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

I have in my pocket an amendment that I had intended to offer, but it would not have been germane to this section, because it would have referred to other appropriation acts. I am going to serve notice that in the next Congress, on every appropriation bill I am going to try to get some kind of proviso that will keep civil-service employees working for the Government from taking outside work when they complete their days work. I understand now when they leave for the day some of them take positions as waiters, stenographers, elevator conductors, and what not. I say that in these times when we can not provide work for 12,000,000 people it is time that everybody should be satisfied with one job. I know of over 125,000 people in St. Louis who would be satisfied with any kind of work. This only applies to enlisted men and civilians working for officers. Until there is employment for all, we should try and keep the Government employees from working for the Government in the day and accepting outside employment at night. Of course, there are only a small percentage who do this, but we should stop it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that that custom does prevail in the Army, I understand, in reference to the enlisted personnel.

Mr. GOSS. What custom?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The custom of employing enlisted men on free time to perform duties such as we are here prohibiting being performed by either enlisted men or by civilians when sought to be paid out of appropriations.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. JAMES. According to the language carried in the present bill, it would not prevent a naval officer from using a man to fix up his grass. I do not think an enlisted man, even if he is paid $4 or $5 a month by an Army officer, should be permitted to do this work.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I have no definite knowledge whether this custom or practice obtains in the Navy but I simply want to call attention to the fact that what the gentleman from Missouri complained of is practiced in the Army, I am informed.

Mr. JAMES. It is not allowed by the language carried here.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not care about the enlisted men of the Army and Navy. They receive a very small salary. What I am talking about is the civil-service employee here in the District of Columbia and around the country who quits work at half past 4 and starts to run an elevator in some apartment house at 5 o'clock, or take some other kind of work. I know this condition exists, and I do not approve of it. Many Government auditors audit accounts for private firms after their day with the Government ends.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that I did not rise to discuss the merits of the proposal. I understood his objection was aimed not only at civilian employees on the civil-service list but also at the enlisted men in the Navy and Army services. I agree with the gentleman that the enlisted man who wants to do a little extra work around an Army post when off duty should probably not be prohibited from doing so if no form of compulsion is exerted.

Mr. JAMES. I do not agree with the gentleman. I think that even if an enlisted man in the Army does make $5 or $10 a month doing extra work mowing lawns, and so forth, he should be prohibited from doing it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. As I say, that is now done in the Army.

Mr. JAMES. Under the proposed language it would be allowed in one service and not in the other.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Both services should be treated alike. It is not right to apply restrictions to one service and not to the other. That is why I rose to state that it was being practiced in one service. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to aim his objection at the naval service. So, far as I know, the practice followed in the Army does not now obtain in the Navy.

Mr. JAMES. Both services should be treated alike. For the first time you are prohibiting the buying of dishes for the Navy. We do not furnish any dishes to generals of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of making a state-

During the progress of the general debate I made a statement in reference to the inequalities in naval officers' pay growing out of constructive service and I referred to the amendment which I offered, and which was adopted by the House, on the Army appropriation bill, but which was stricken out in the Senate and is now in conference. I am not going to offer a similar amendment at this time at this place in the bill, because I hope the conferees on the Army bill may be able to work out something that will take care of the situation for all services. If they do not, I may say that I have the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that they will go into this situation thoroughly, hold full hearings on it, and try to bring in a bill which will correct the inequalities.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I wish to corroborate the statement just made by the gentleman from New York with reference to the attitude of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the attitude of the committee itself with reference to the amendment he offered, and which was adopted, on the military bill.

It is the desire of the Committee on Naval Affairs to go into this question very thoroughly at the next session of Congress.

May I also take this opportunity to state that it is also our desire to take up again with the Committee on Military Affairs the matter of flight pay for aviators and also the general question of naval and Army pay. These are matters that should be dealt with; hearings should be held. I know the committee is, indeed, grateful to the gentleman from New York for permitting this matter, in which he is vitally concerned, to take the course he has suggested.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am still in hopes the Army bill conferees will work out a solution of this problem, because I believe there is a decided abuse there. Every committee that has gone into the matter has found this to be the case. I hope we shall be able to correct it and protect the Government.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman from New York will cooperate with the Committee on Naval Affairs along these lines during the next session, I am satisfied we can make substantial progress.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Of course, if the conferees on the War Department bill should work out some solution such as the gentleman has in mind, the same provision ought to go in the naval bill, of course.

Mr. TABER. It is an item which would have to come back to the House in any event, because of the disagreement of the Senate. I have been in hopes they would work out language that might apply to the whole picture. If they do not, I hope the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs will work it out at the next session after appropriate hearings; but the consideration should not be so protracted as to not be able to get legislative results, because I think it is a growing need.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am sure the Committee on Military Affairs will go into the matter and will endeavor to work it out. That committee will welcome all possible help from the gentleman from New York.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Kvale: Page 22, line 2, after the figures "$1,121,070," strike out the language included within the parentheses up to and including the word "Navy," in line 6.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to strike out the matter referred to for the reason that it affects directly the flight surgeons and their pay. An effort was made to persuade the committee that the restriction surrounding flight pay for flight surgeons should be eliminated in this current measure. We were unsuccessful. If this amendment is adopted and this language is stricken out, it will help remedy, to some extent, this situation, and will leave with the Secretary discretionary power.

May I respectfully refer the chairman of the subcommittee to the question he asked Admiral Moffett, as recorded on page 448 of the hearings. Mr. Ayres then said:

What is your view as to the restriction in the current appro priation act that none of the money should be used for increased pay for making aerial flights to nonflying officers or observers except eight officers above the grade of lieutenant commander, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy?

To which Admiral Moffett replied:

I recommended last year that the proviso be left out. The law permitted 1 per cent of the total commissioned personnel to have flight orders, which allowed the Navy about 92 nonaviator flight orders. I will try to answer your question as directly as I can, but perhaps I had better give you a little background.

At the end of which he said:

I think the law as it stood was not being abused, and I think it was being used with discretion. I am in favor of some flight surgeons; I think they add to the safety of flying, and I think the aeriologists add to the safety and efficiency of flying; but we have managed this last year without aeriologists and flight surgeons and some specialists getting flight pay. They fly to some extent, and are still doing it. But I think, on the whole, that the restriction limits the Secretary to such an extent that it does interfere with efficiency.

In view of that, Mr. Chairman, can not the committee be persuaded to accept this amendment and strike this item out, and also in view of the fact that this entire question is going to be given a further overhauling in the next Congress?

Mr. AYRES. I can not agree to that, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Kyale]. The committee's position with respect to this matter is indicated on pages 11 and 12 of the report.

Mr. KVALE. I have read it, but I can not subscribe to it. Mr. AYRES. The committee would not be in favor of acceding to the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota. The report says:

The committee has continued the restriction in the current appropriation act upon nonflying officers or observers that might be given flying orders. This has operated to remove from flying pay status some 26 medical officers. There are three medical officers in the service at the present time who are qualified aviators and the restriction does not run against them, and they may be given flight orders at the discretion of the department; in or had flight orders on the 1st instant.

The committee is not in sympathy with giving flight orders to medical officers who are not qualified aviators. They should be so qualified, in the judgment of the committee, properly to study the effect of flying upon the human system. As a general proposition there should be no need for medical officers to have flight orders except for such study. An occasional flight on a medical errand would not justify continuous flight orders.

These views, the hearings will disclose, accord with the views of Admiral Moffett, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, and Captain Dennis, who appeared on behalf of the Medical Corps, that the only proper way to provide medical officers properly qualified to perform the service that the gentleman has in mind is to make aviators out of themtrain them as pilots.

Mr. KVALE. I got quite the other impression—that they did not believe a flyer could be a doctor any more than a doctor should be a flyer.

Mr. AYRES. That is not the impression I got. Personally, I feel very strongly that a few of them should be qualified as pilots. Those who are not, as a general proposition, I should say, should not have flight orders.

Mr. KVALE. The testimony that appears on page 701 and subsequent pages does not, to my mind, bear out the gentleman's statement; and even though it did not persuade the committee, I still feel that is very persuasive testimony.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes. Mr. TABER. It appears also in the hearings that there were at least three medical officers who were qualified aviators, and to whom this restriction does not apply; and while in the bill last year those who did not fly were limited to eight, only seven were being employed, and the department felt that if they needed medical officers they could have put in one more medical officer.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I still respectfully insist on my amendment, and I hope it may be supported. I hope this language can be stricken from the bill, and I refer again to the statement of Admiral Moffet that he tried to have that language stricken out last year. He sees no reason for it, and he thinks it handicaps the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It is impossible to read merely parts of the hearings and understand what the full information before the committee on the subject in question was.

Admiral Moffett expressly stated, on page 451 of the hearings, that he did not require more than 12; and then, again, this question was asked by me of Captain Dennis when he was before the committee, "My attention has been called to the fact that Admiral Moffett in his statement felt there should be only 14, 6 of whom would be flight surgeons."

The committee gave what they felt was a very liberal allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KVALE) there were—ayes 10, nays 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee how it happens that in the Navy, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation seems to control the Bureau of Aeronautics. As I read the hearings it appears that, apparently, there is not any independence in this bureau at all. It is a separate bureau, but it has to go to the Bureau of Navigation; and, as I understand it, there is no requirement that the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation should be a flier, and there is no such independence in the air service of the Navy, apparently, as there is in the Army; is this correct?

Mr. AYRES. No; I will say to the gentleman the Bureau of Navigation is simply a personnel bureau and does not have charge except as to matters of personnel and assignment

Mr. BRIGGS. As I understood the hearings, the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, Admiral Moffett, testified that whatever they want they have to present through the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and if he does not choose to carry forward the recommendations, the only recourse they have is the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. AYRES. That is only with respect to personnel matters, I will again say to the gentleman.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does it have to do at all with pay and allowances and things of that kind?

Mr. AYRES. Not at all.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I rise merely for the purpose of saying that I am sure the services will appreciate the action taken by the gentleman from New York in not pressing for his particular amendment at this time.

I do want to say to the House that when the gentleman first proposed the amendment to the War Department appropriation bill he referred to a "racket" and, to-day, he refers to a matter of "abuse." I know that there has been no racket and that there is no abuse by the services.

When Congress passed the pay bill in 1922, unfortunately, it had to bring about an adjustment of the pay schedule of the various services. There were five services for which this so-called omnibus pay bill was provided, and they had to adjust and veer and haul; and this was a compromise, undoubtedly, when it was passed, and I am sure that when a hearing is held upon this matter the question can be adjusted to everyone's satisfaction. The last joint committee of Congress on this question said in 1931:

Piecemeal legislation and divided jurisdiction are largely responsible for many of the situations * * needing adjustment.

They also said:

The problem of distribution in grade and promotion is basic to any satisfactory pay scheme.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I was very much delighted just now to see that our distinguished friend from New York had dropped his child out of the Army appropriation bill.

This leads me to speak about another amendment in that bill that is more outrageous than this child that the gentleman has abandoned to-day. I refer to an amendment as to which I can not conceive the temper of the House in passing such a measure, limiting the pay of all retired officers to $3,000 a year.

I can speak disinterestedly on this subject because you, in your wisdom, had the honor of taking all my retired pay away from me a year ago.

This latter amendment was a direct slap at four of the most distinguished officers we have, and I have asked for this time to speak for one of these officers, the distinguished gentleman, than whom I do not think there is a more typical American in our country, Gen. James G. Harbord. This great soldier's career is one that should be held up for emulation to every young man in this country. Instead of this, time after time on this floor, although he has no connection with this House, his name has been brought forward here in criticism and contempt.

Let us analyze some of the charges that are made against General Harbord. I had the honor of serving in the War Department when he was Chief of Staff and was serving there when he retired from the Army. He did not want to retire, but the Radio Corporation wanted to get a man to assemble the radio patents, and Mr. Young, a distinguished Democrat, went to Mr. Baker and asked him what he thought about Harbord. He said, "Harbord is just the man you want," and so Young engaged Baker, ex-Secretary of War and the ex-chief of Harbord, to go to him in his office by appointment and plead with him to accept this appointment on the ground that in the assembling of these radio patents giving us control of radio he was performing a greater service for the country than he could possibly render as Chief of Staff in times of peace.

The whole career of Harbord is one of distinguished public service.

A poor boy, the son of a small contractor, he had to work his way through college. He enlisted in the Regular Army, worked his way up to a commission, and from the start his services were always in demand.

He was in the Philippines 12 years, chief of staff of the constabulary, and when the Great War came on his standing was such that of all the officers in the Army General Pershing turned to him to make him Chief of Staff of the American Expeditionary Forces. He had a remarkable career in France as Chief of Staff, as commander of the Marine Division, as Chief of the Service of Supply.

Now, to belittle and demean the standing of such a great man on this floor, I think, is the very worst thing we can do.

Members come in here and get him connected up with the Morgans, and say that he is appointed at a salary of seventy-five thousand or a hundred thousand dollars a year.

As a matter of fact, the Morgans had nothing whatever to do with his appointment. The Radio Corporation position was taken at the solicitation of Mr. Young, at the instigation of ex-Secretary of War Baker.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is this Democrat, Mr. Young, whom the gentleman so eloquently referred to, the same Democrat Young who testified as an expert witness in defense of the loan to the Dawes bank by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Young is Owen D. Young; but if the gentleman expects me to blackmail any of these outstanding men, whether Democrats or Republicans, he is sadly mistaken. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

MAINTENANCE, BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

For equipage, supplies, and services under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, including stationery for commanding, executive, communication, and navigating officers of ships, boards and courts on ships, and chaplains; commissions, interest, and exchange; ferriage and bridge tolls, including street-car fares; rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards except for use of naval attachés and recruiting officer; accident prevention; services of civilian employees under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; freight, express, and parcel-post charges, including transportation of funds and cost of insurance on shipments of money when necessary, and ice for cooling drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals and shops at industrial navy yards), pertaining to the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, $8,982,683: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of the supply or replacement of table linen, dishes, glassware, silverware, and/or kitchen utensils for use in the residences or quarters of officers on shore: Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or incident to the transportation of privately owned automobiles except on account of the return to the United States of such privately owned automobiles as may have been transported to points outside of the continental limits of the United States at public expense prior to July 1, 1932: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $4,925,000: Provided further, That, without deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States and withdrawal on money requisitions, receipts of public moneys from sales or other sources by officers of the Navy and Marine Corps on disbursing duty and charged in their official accounts may be used by them as required for current expenditures, and accounts to be made in the settlement of their disbursing accounts.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be permitted to correct the spelling of the word "privately" in line 20, page 29.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what character of services are involved in the proviso at the top of page 30?

Mr. AYRES. Those are employees in the supply and accounting departments at navy yards, naval stations, and supply depots.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it costs $5,000,000 for services of that limited department and its activities. While I am on my feet, I note in reading the report that the committee has withdrawn large sums of money from various sources. To what extent has the committee resorted to surplus supplies in order to tide over the emergency this year?

Mr. AYRES. We have not done anything in that respect. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's committee did not follow the policy of the War Department subcommittee in drawing on the reserve stocks to be made available for present use.

Mr. AYRES. There are certain stores that they are free to use—stores of many kinds that are carried in what is termed "appropriation purchases account."

Mr. STAFFORD. The war appropriation subcommittee

Mr. STAFFORD. The war appropriation subcommittee made a draft on stores that the War Department had set aside for equipment of two armies. The naval subcommittee made no provision for that character of withdrawal and did not invade the stores for reserves?

Mr. AYRES. The War Department subcommittee, I am informed, did shape the War Department appropriation bill, as to articles of the uniform, upon the idea that there might be a greater utilization of stocks on hand; but the Navy does not have large stores of clothing as they have in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman states that the committee has not adopted the policy of invading necessary supplies, as an emergency measure, so as to make a showing of reduction in the appropriations.

Mr. AYRES. We have not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the gentleman to the last proviso, on page 28, and ask the gentleman whether he does not think that requiring service aboard a vessel in full commission for nine months might not work an injustice It might happen that some of these enlisted men who desire to go to the Naval Academy by standing a competitive examination have not had the opportunity of serving nine months on a ship in full commission. It occurs to me that the provision ought to be simply serving nine months aboard a ship.

Mr. AYRES. The department has made no objection to that provision, and it seems to be working all right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That may be true, but would it not be a hardship on some one who desires to take advantage of the law and stand a competitive examination, to require him to serve nine months on a vessel in full commission? The point is that there are a great many ships that are not in full commission, and a boy may serve on a ship not in full commission and therefore he could not go to the academy.

Mr. AYRES. I assume it is working satisfactorily. We have had no complaint.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not the purpose of that provision to do away with the malpractice of the Navy Department in appointing persons to the Naval Academy who had not seen any real service in the Navy, in order to give the man who had seen service an opportunity to enter the Naval Academy?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But the gentleman loses sight of the fact that under this provision he has to serve on a ship that has been in full commission for nine months, and if it has not been in full commission for nine months he could not go to the academy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, he should be compelled to serve on a ship so that he would know something about a ship before he endeavors to train himself for sea service.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to complete or continue the construction, by contract or otherwise, of the public works and public-utilities projects for which appropriations were made in the naval appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1932 and 1933 and within the limits of cost applicable to such projects, $1,946,950, of which not to exceed $85,000 shall be available for the employment of classified personal services in the Bureau of Yards and Docks and in the field service to be engaged upon such work and to be in addition to employees otherwise provided for.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the purpose of these public-utility projects? Is the Government going into the power business? I refer to the words in line 10, page 36.

Mr. AYRES. They are telephone lines, steam and power lines, and things of that kind in navy yards.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. They have all those things in the navy yard. They have their central heating plant and their electric light plant and all the utilities of a city.

Mr. GOSS. It could not possibly be construed to permit of going ahead with the operation of Muscle Shoals, could it?

Mr. AYRES. Hardly.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman from Connecticut is on the Committee on Military Affairs. It is the same proposition that we carry for our Army posts.

Mr. GOSS. There are no such things in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Oh, yes; we provide transmission lines and that sort of thing on these new posts, and you have to maintain them in the old posts.

Mr. GOSS. That comes under the engineers.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes. All of the Army posts have their own utilities.

Mr. GOSS. This is under the title "Public Works, Bureau of Yards and Docks."

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That is the same thing as the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. GOSS. Can the gentleman tell us what some of that construction is that is going on at the present time?

Mr. AYRES. If the gentleman will turn to page 612 of the hearings he will find a complete enumeration of work under way and projects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course I am quite certain that the War Department appropriation bill does not contain any item whatsoever designated as public-utility projects.

Mr. GOSS. I never saw any such item.

Mr. AYRES. They may use different terminology. We have provided for such projects at Army posts.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1933, $971,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $12,682,659, including $138,500 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $100,000 for the procurement of helium, and such sum shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1933, and the bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containess; for continuing experiments and development weeks. containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or in-termittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $2,188,800; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $6,115,000, of which amount not to spare parts and accessories, $6,115,000, of which amount not to exceed $5,715,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization carried in the Navy appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933; in all, $21,957,459; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,221,575: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1935, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and prior to July 1, 1935, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $8,100,000: Provided further. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to transfer not to exceed $24,000 from this appropriation to the appropriation "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy" to cover authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to assigned station or ship, including travel to contractor's works and return of personnel to station of duty, and the amount so transferred shall be in addition to any limitations contained in the appropriation "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy": Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coast of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes. construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 37, line 8, after the figures "1933," insert "In addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1934 the unexpended balance of funds transferred to it for such operation in the fiscal year 1933" ation in the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. GOSS. On that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will give serious consideration to agreeing to this amendment, as I believe the facts will disclose that it will be better and more economical for the Government if it is agreed to. There are certain necessary costs in the production of helium. The Budget estimated $185,000. The committee has cut that to $100,000. After they produce a certain amount of helium, then the net return from the sale of gas, after the helium is extracted, more than pays the additional cost of the helium. This net sum is practically all returned to the Treasury of the United States. After these fixed costs which must be paid in any event, the additional helium that this amount would allow would cost only about $1.50 per thousand additional, while the return from the additional gas that is used in that helium production would be $2.70. So that there would be a net income to the Government on the helium that would be made above a definite amount.

Then there is this further difficulty in this unusual reduction. The Government has contracts for the sale of the gas for commercial use after the helium is extracted. It will be necessary, with the amount of appropriation made here, to run just part time. That makes it difficult to maintain the sale of these gases. They must be continuous in their operation to be able to sell them. The officials of the Bureau of Mines inform me it would be less cost to the Government to have this small increase for operative ex-

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Do we operate a helium plant now?

Mr. JONES. We operate a helium plant now.

Mr. GOSS. What does it mean then "not to exceed $100,000 for the procurement of helium "?

Mr. JONES. The plant is operated by the Bureau of Mines, and the helium is then sold to the Navy and the There is very little used by the Army.

Mr. GOSS. I know it is mostly all used by the Navy

Mr. JONES. This is simply to make this available so that the plant may have continuous operation, as nearly as possible. Even so, it will be $42,000 below the Budget recommendation, and will necessitate making certain furloughs. However, they can then operate, in a way, and . maintain their contracts for the disposal of the residue gas. The net return from this extra amount will more than cover the amount that is expended, and will thus be an economy. I hope the committee will see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield. Mr. COYLE. With reference to that operation, if they are forced to discontinue the helium extraction, it is necessary to let the gas containing the helium still go into commercial use?

Mr. JONES. If they maintain these contracts; yes. In fact, it is necessary with part of them, for the maintenance of the lease contracts. Otherwise their lease contracts on several thousand acres might be forfeited. They would have to let the gas go on and the helium would be wasted through the burning of the gas.

Mr. COYLE. The helium can be conserved for the future, after it has once been extracted and stored?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. It can be conserved indefinitely.

Mr. COYLE. In view of the scarcity of the helium and the fact that we can never reclaim it after it has gone away from the plant in the gas, it would be exceedingly advisable to work the full output of that operation for the extraction of the helium.

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct. The Government has a large investment in this plant and in land and leases. It is the largest reserve supply of helium known in the world. We have in these reserves values beyond measure, and a monopoly on an element that other nations would give much

The plant is extracting helium at the lowest cost in history. It has a fine working force that is loyal to the Government and tremendously interested in the further perfecting of the processes. It seems unthinkable to jeopardize the operations and handicap the efficiency of a plant that has such a fine record of service. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I have not yet been convinced that I should not make the point of order. Therefore I make the point of order on the ground that it is not germane to the bill and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order until I can make a short statement?

Mr. GOSS. Yes. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is a most important amendment, and I trust the members of the committee will give very serious consideration to it. Those who have served for some time in this body are aware of the fact that I have been interested in the helium project and have kept pace with its progress from its very inception. No helium is now produced in the district I represent, and certainly no selfish motive can be ascribed to me in favoring this amendment.

Our country is providentially favored in the possession of helium. Other nations have expended great sums of money in searching for it throughout their domains, and they have searched in vain, except for very small quantities which have been commercially and practically unprofitable. This appropriation bill provides $100,000 for the operation of the helium plant. The Army appropriation bill provides $17,000, making a total of $117,000. The very least sum for which that plant can be operated without very serious injury to this entire project is $142,000. The appropriation for this purpose last year was $184,000. It is estimated that of that amount, by reason of the sale of residue gas at the plant, perhaps $25,000 will remain unexpended. The purpose of this amendment is simply to add that $25,000 which was saved last year to the $117,000 provided in these two bills in order to make the minimum amount upon which this plant can properly operate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The difficulty I have is one of relevancy. The War Department appropriation bill carries a provision for the maintenance and operation of the plant. This bill makes no provision for the operation of the plant, but it only makes provision for the purchase of helium.

Mr. LANHAM. No. The procurement of helium. Procurement is production of helium.

Mr. STAFFORD. You are seeking to change an item in the War Department appropriation bill, which you claim is inadequate for the purpose needed.

Mr. LANHAM. No, no. We are not. Of course, the Navy is the principal user of helium gas, because these lighter-than-air dirigibles are more effective as Navy instruments than they are for military forces.

All we are seeking to do here is to let the unexpended balance of last year's appropriation be added to the amount now available in order that we may have the minimum amount upon which this plant may operate.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. How much is that?

Mr. LANHAM. One hundred and forty-two thousand dollars; $25,000 comes over from last year.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman know how much of this gas is needed?

Mr. LANHAM. I can not tell exactly except that the Bureau of Mines says it is very much needed.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. AYRES. The Bureau of Mines never appeared before our committee and said it was very much needed, nor did the Navy representatives bring us any such message. As a matter of fact, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, it is not needed, and I shall be very glad to give him the figures.

Mr. GOSS. What are the figures?

Mr. LANHAM. On inquiry of the Bureau of Mines, I was advised, and advised very definitely and in detail, that $142,000 a year is the least upon which they can operate. Now, they have some leased fields. They must operate these leases, and they can not do it unless their plant is in operation. In addition to that, if you do not provide for full-year operation of this plant, they will be unable to distribute the surplus gas. After the helium is extracted from the gas, the gas is commercially more profitable than it was before. Having no use for the gas from which the helium has been extracted, the Government places it at the disposal of commercial industry in that section and sells it. After you get beyond this point of $142,000, the minimum amount required for the operation of the plant, the sale of that residue gas brings in more than it costs to produce the helium.

So, certainly, our country having taken the lead, our country having been providentially favored, other nations having looked in vain and having spent large sums in an effort to get this most valuable asset, surely we are not going to be penny wise and pound foolish by crippling this project to which we may point with pride and which is a wonderful agency for our national security, both in time of peace and in time of war.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that at the time of the hearings there were 12,000,000 cubic feet of helium in storage. In the Akron we have 6,500,000 cubic feet. That makes a total of 18,500,000 cubic feet. We are buying helium at the rate of 1,400,000 cubic feet per month. For the four months ending next June 30, we will have purchased 5,600,000 cubic feet, making a total of 24,100,000 cubic feet. Out of this total there will be needed for the Macon, 6,500,000 cubic feet, leaving 17,600,000 cubic feet; and wastage is estimated at 12,000,000 cubic feet, leaving a balance, or rather an amount in storage, of 5,600,000 cubic feet at the end of the next fiscal year, exclusive of any that may be purchased during such fiscal year. It would seem obvious, therefore, that the appropriation we are proposing is more than sufficient to supply next year's helium requirements. At no time was any member of the Bureau of Mines before our committee.

Mr. LANHAM. I presume the Bureau of Mines supposed the amount recommended by the Budget would be granted, because they operated on that last year.

Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the 16,000,000 cubic feet which he anticipates will be produced can not be produced unless the plant can be kept in operation; and it is for this reason we are favoring this amendment.

Mr. AYRES. The appropriation we are proposing is adequate, in my judgment.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that a reserve of 5,000,000 cubic feet is not very much. Besides, the surplus helium is not lost. It is highly important that the plant be maintained, because if it is not maintained our whole project stops. We are giving what is relatively a pittance in the way of appropriations, when we give them the $142,000 actually needed to keep the plant in operation.

Let me remind the gentleman that when the United States started out on this project it cost $1,500 a cubic foot to extract helium, but now we extract it for about a cent and a half a cubic foot. It is peculiarly an American accomplishment. We seem to have been providentially blessed with this resource for our protection in time of war and for commercial pursuits in time of peace. It seems to me we would indeed be penurious did we fail to provide the small amount of funds needed.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does the gentleman contend that if the amendment is not adopted it would retard or hamper the current production of helium gas?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, I certainly do. I think there is absolutely no doubt of it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It becomes very important if that be so. I do not know.

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment, there is no doubt about it. We have got to operate these leased fields. If we do not get sufficient funds, then in order to operate the plant we have got to sell some of this gas containing helium without taking the helium from it, and the very purpose of the whole project is not only to supply current demands but to have a reserve for time of emergency.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is there any loss of the gas when held in storage? The gentleman says we have a reserve. Is there constant leakage from the reserve?

Mr. LANHAM. There is not; no.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, no.

Mr. LANHAM. The leakage of the gas, of course, is only in the operation of the ships, and this leakage has been reduced very considerably through the progress they have made in the fabrics, but any additional amount that we may have on hand, we may still use. It is not lost, and the operation of this plant must be carried on or this most important industry to this country is imperiled. And think, gentlemen, what a small sum we are appropriating, even by giving this $25,000 that is left over from last year, in proportion to the large sums that nations abroad have spent in a vain effort to duplicate our fortunate situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] insist on his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; that it is not germane. The bill provides "$100,000 for the procurement of helium, and such Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1933."

Surely, this ought to have been brought up in connection with the War Department or the Bureau of Mines when that service was before the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say that I suppose the Bureau of Mines, naturally, anticipated that their appropriation would not be cut. If they had been notified of the fact that the $185,000 for which they asked would not be granted, they would certainly have been present and even by passing this amendment, we are still leaving them more than $40,000 short of what was recommended by the Budget.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason in the world why this amendment is not in order. The helium act of 1927 authorized the establishment and maintenance not only of a helium plant and the operation of the plant, but authorized plants, if necessary. Also under the economy act, as I understand, there is further provision for transfers. The amendment simply makes available what has already been appropriated heretofore for the carrying out of a project which is authorized under existing law. I do not have the act before me, but that is as clear as can be, because the main item itself could not be here except for such a provision.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Doxey). The Chair is ready to

In the opinion of the Chair, the act of March 3, 1927, authorizes the appropriation. The amendment offered to this particular portion of the bill simply recommends a reappropriation of money and therefore in the opinion of the Chair the amendment is germane and is in order.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Ayres) there were—ayes 25, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kansas. On page 39, line 1, we find a proviso, and I take it the chairman of the committee will concede that this is legislation on this bill.

Mr. AYRES. Certainly.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Has it been carried in prior appropriation bills?

Mr. AYRES. It has been carried for several years.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Can the gentleman tell us how much was paid out under a similar provision in last year's appropriation bill?

Mr. AYRES. No; I will say to the gentleman that I can not, but my understanding is that the amounts annually spent are very insignificant.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman that I can see very good reason for this provision being in the bill. However, I think a bill embodying the purposes of the provision ought to be introduced and acted on by the legislative committee, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] is chairman, and that bill passed and enacted into substantive law.

Mr. AYRES. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Suppose we let it stay in this bill now and

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I have not made any motion to strike it out. I could have made a point of order on the

Mr. AYRES. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Realizing there is good reason for the provision I did not make a point of order against it. However, let me suggest to the gentleman that several years ago there were a number of provisions such as this carried in the War Department appropriation bill, all of them being sum shall be transferred to and made available to the | legislation on an appropriation bill and all of them being subject to a point of order. The War Department went through the War Department appropriation bill, put these different provisions into bills, had these bills sent up here, and they were introduced, sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, and enacted into law, removing any possibility of any such provision in an appropriation bill being stricken out on a point of order. This is really the orderly way, the way prescribed by the rules of the House, and the way it ought to be done.

Mr. AYRES. We are perfectly willing to have that done, although I may say to the gentleman that a similar provision is carried in the War Department appropriation bill with a $250 limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

If my good friend from Alabama had followed the Private Calendar one-hundredth as closely as I have in my 20 years of service, he would not in anywise criticize the policy of delegating to the department the determination of the amount of damages that should be paid arising out of injury to land and the like by reason of aircraft mishaps.

I am not only in favor of delegating to the departments the authority to settle claims up to the amount of $500; I am in favor of going to $3,000, and I predicate this statement on the legislative policy adopted with respect to claims for damages arising in the District of Columbia, where we have authorized the District Commissioners to settle claims arising out of tort actions to the extent of $5,000, and this authority has not been abused.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I want to say that I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman says, but my complaint is not so much against the granting of authority to the Secretary of the Navy as in carrying the provision in an appropriation bill instead of having it come from the regular legislative committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the legislative committee has been laggard in its duty, it is not a proper criticism to lodge against the Appropriations Committee. I claim that the legislative committee has been laggard in its work, because there should be some general legislation authorizing the department to settle claims that accrue from time to time by reason of airplanes alighting on the land, causing more or less damage to property.

Why should Congress be concerned with these little petty claims? Look at the Private Calendar. I was going over some 25 bills to-day, and there are claims amounting to $25, many less than a hundred dollars. Why should we be concerned with these measly little claims when they should be settled by the department? We want to be relieved of this distasteful and most disagreeable work. [Applause.]

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COYLE. Does the gentleman feel that the legislative Naval Committee has been particularly derelict in this

Mr. STAFFORD. All of the committees, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department, especially, because it is under their jurisdiction, and they come here and report little measly claims instead of bringing in an omnibus legislative bill that would relieve Congress of their consideration.

I have made many suggestions for remedial relief. I remember the late James R. Mann, that great parliamentary leader, to whom I referred this morning, saying to me once in private conversation that he was sometime going to rewrite the rules of the House of Representatives-that perhaps he was the only one that could rewrite them.

I regret his untimely passing, as he knew more parliamentary procedure than any that I have known. He knew the philosophy of the rules. I, together with every other friend, was sorry that he stayed in this climate against the advice of his physician, and was stricken down because he remained at his public post rather than go to a climate where the climate was more equable and would not be so hard on his system. He stayed here until he died of pleuro-

Now, I will come back to the real question.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman alluded to the delegating of power to the post office. I want to say that they delegated authority to settle claims there up to $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct as far as the Post Office Department is concerned. We should be relieved of this drudgery, because you will find that when a man has a demand of a thousand or two thousand dollars, if the department had the authority they could settle, but when he comes to Congress he comes in and demands $5,000, and these easy-worked committees report the bill giving him $5,000.

Now. I want to get back to the consideration of the question before the House; that is, the amount of money that we are voting for aircraft. For a long time I have been of the opinion that if there is one activity of the War and Navy Departments that could be merged, this activity relating to aircraft is that one. We have duplicating services, one in the Navy, one in the Army, another in the Marine Corps, and still others in other agencies. I read the report on this bill and learned the Navy Department is spending more than a million dollars for experimental purposes along the line of advance in aircraft. Am I correct?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are spending a large sum of money at McCook Field in Dayton, Ohio, for similar activity. That is duplication. We are voting to the Smithsonian Institution for similar work, $800,000, last year $1,000,000. I tried to cut it down last year, but was met with no support upon the part of the committee. Why? Because the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge said, "Stand back of the committee"; and the House, under the bellwether leadership of the chairmen of the subcommittees. stand back of the committee no matter what the merits of the proposal may be. I ask the gentleman from Kansas whether in his opinion, after his study of this subject, there could not be a real saving by merging these activities under one head, particularly the experimental part?

Mr. AYRES. I rather think there could be.

Mr. STAFFORD. About 15 years ago I had the privilege of serving on the War Department Appropriations Committee. On my return here four years ago the triumvirate leaders who were controlling the Republican organization of this House, threw me into the discard on the important legislative committee known as the Committee on Military Affairs.

I have enjoyed my service upon that committee, particularly the fellowship which has been of rare order. At that time I was of opinion, from my close study of war activities, that if there was one scientific activity that could be merged it was that of aircraft. Why should the Navy have its large force in south Philadelphia and the Army have its force at McCook Field, and the Smithsonian over here, and the Marine Corps down at Quantico, all pursuing similar investigational work? If there is any activity that I expect my good friend and former House leader, Mr. Swagar Sherley, former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has been delegated by the President elect to determine the policy of merging, it is right here in this aircraft matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the amendment to the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill the other day, giving the President certain powers, can he not do that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I just referred to the fact that the President elect has selected Mr. Sherley, former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from January 1, 1918, when the gentleman's distinguished predecessor Mr. Fitzgerald retired, until the close of the Wilson administration, to look into that very matter. Mr. Sherley has been deputed for the service I refer to.

(Mr. Stafford's time at this point having expired, he was granted two minutes more by unanimous consent.)

Mr. STAFFORD. I have another inquiry. What is the purpose of limiting the appropriation for the maintenance of six heavier-than-air stations on the coast of Continental United States? Where are they located? I suppose they are now in existence.

Mr. AYRES. They are in existence at this time, 1 at Boston, 1 at New York, 1 at Norfolk, 1 at Pensacola, 1 at Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. Again we have an instance cited where there could be a saving, because the Army is maintaining airports at virtually these same places, and here again we have duplication, duplication, duplication, between these two services. Because I knew there was duplication is the justification for my vote in the last Congress in support of the proposal of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for the merger of these two departments. I knew it would result in a saving of millions and millions of dollars to the taxpayers.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. In the interest of harmony I make the point of order against the entire paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield for that purpose. There is no merit in the point of order at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that it is out of order to make a point of order immediately after the gentleman from Wisconsin has spoken?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been debate on the paragraph and the point of order comes too late.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and ask the attention of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], because I am very much interested in what he has had to say. I think he might be interested in some information that I have in my possession which relates to the subject of overlapping and duplicating activities. I voted against the merger of the Army and the Navy Departments last year because I felt that it might be dangerous to national defense to create one department, upon the theory that if the head of the merged departments should happen to be a Navy man, naturally he would be influenced by his training and background, and it might have some adverse effect on our Army policy.

Likewise, if a man was an Army man, with an Army training and Army background, he would be more or less the product of his environment and influenced thereby, the same as we all are. However, I felt the committee was entirely warranted in trying to prevent overlapping and duplications. After the action of last year I followed that question very closely. I took it up with the departments to see whether or not within the departments they could do something to try to eliminate overlapping and duplications.

I have received information quite recently that the Army and Navy and Marine Corps are engaged in a study of overlapping and duplicating activities in all matters not affecting the fighting efficiency of the service, with the idea of discovering any additional economies which can be effected through further cooperation and coordination. It is expected that material savings to the Government will result from these investigations, made voluntarily by the three services, without interfering in any way with the individual combat missions of the services concerned. I also understand that subcommittees of the House Committee on Naval Affairs and the House Committee on Military Affairs have been appointed to consider this same question, in cooperation with committees formed in the three services we are discussing. I also understand that there have been 27 subcommittees of the three services, the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, appointed to study this question and to see wherein the three departments can bring about the elimination of overlapping and duplicating activities. I feel that such information will interest the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] the same as it interested me.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. What are the results of their investiga-tions and studies? After the war we had in use by the Army a large proving ground that was established during the war, down at Aberdeen, 30 miles of shore front, established at an expense of millions and millions of dollars. The Navy, in order to vie with the Army, established another large proving ground on the Potomac, spending millions of dollars without any regard to the taxpayers of the

Mr. McCORMACK. I fully agree with the gentleman with reference to eliminating overlapping or unnecessary activities. In view of what the gentleman so well said, I wanted to incorporate in the RECORD the fact that there is an intensive study going on by the three departments, in conjunction with House committees. I see the chairman of the legislative Committee on Naval Affairs present, and I ask him whether my information is correct?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct. We are making an investigation with subcommittees from both the Naval and Military Affairs Committees to see if we can prevent overlapping and duplication of service.

Mr. McCORMACK. Which will mean the saving of a substantial amount of money.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I can not say about that until the committees have reported.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I think if the gentleman will leave out the word "substantial," he will probably be correct in his statement. The savings is simply going to be chicken feed, because the naval aviator has a different training from the Army aviator. Each service is distinct and separate. There is an auxiliary force for each service, and they can not be combined.

Mr. McCORMACK. The information I have received is that they are determined to make a real investigation for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and if they do, they can make real savings. I am a big-navy and a big-army man, but there is no necessity of duplication and overlapping. I do not stand for that and neither should anyone else. They can save a substantial sum of money without impairing the efficiency of the service, if they wanted to. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, now that the subject has come up, I fear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] places too much faith and confidence in any study of coordination which might be undertaken by either the naval or military authorities. It just will not be done that way. It will not be done as long as the matter is left in their hands. The only way we can bring about elimination of duplication and overlapping and waste in expenditures in the military and naval forces is for the Congress to establish a department of national defense combining all water and land forces. Unless Congress does act, Congress will be waiting for the next 40 or 50 years for reports from committees of the Army and the Navy. I do not mean committees of the House. I mean military and naval committees. It simply will not be done.

Now, we started on a united Air Service immediately after the World War. All we ever got out of it was the courtmartial of a gallant officer of the United States Army. That is all we got out of it. The Navy was not fair about it, and the Army was not fair. The Congress never got all of the facts. All we got out of it was the 5-year building program costing millions of dollars; we never did get our money's worth. I do not care what anybody says, there is no reason why we can not have a united Air Service, thereby increasing the efficiency in the Air Service by about 50 per cent and decreased appropriations of at least 20 per cent.

The gentleman from Connecticut says, "Who will be the commander?" I do not care whether he is an admiral or a general in the Army, as long as he knows how to fly and is a real commander. The preliminary training is exactly alike. The Navy has amphibian planes; the Army has amphibian planes. The Army has seaplanes and the Navy has landplanes. The motors are exactly alike. Construction is alike. The art of flying is exactly the same. It makes no difference whether one flies over land or over water, whether one lands on a field or on the deck of a carrier.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. HORR. May I inquire, just as a matter of information, is the training of the Army and the Navy aviator similar?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The preliminary training is similar. Mr. HORR. But is all of the training similar?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The preliminary training is exactly alike. It can not be different. Of course, tactical training is different, but what difference does that make?

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will study the voluminous hearings of the Committee on Expenditures as to the proposed consolidation of the Army and the Navy, he will change his views with reference to the aviation service of the Army and the Navy's being the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman can not find an honestto-goodness, bona fide, sincere aviator who is competent, whether he be in the Army or the Navy, who will not confidentially state that it would be to the best interests of the country to unite the two services. But they dare not officially say so. I know. I have lived with these boys. I know them. I know every one of the pioneers in aviation, from Foulois down and from Moffatt down, are for a united Air Service.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I agree with the gentleman's statement absolutely; but the reason they want a unified Air Service is because they think the next war will be fought with airplanes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I do, too. Does not the gentleman from Oregon believe that?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. So far as learning the rudiments of flying is concerned, it is the same in both services; but the uses to which the two services put airplanes are entirely different.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman from Oregon believe that the most effective combat arm in the next war will be the air forces?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. There is no question but what it will be a most important auxiliary arm, but I object to the statement that it will determine the issue of a war. Such a statement is ridiculous. It will not.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Well, that is a detail. The gentleman will admit, of course, that the art of warfare has entirely changed in the last 25 years by reason of the development

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Yes; but the principles of warfare never change. The various arms change in relative importance.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman believe that the efficiency of the air forces would be increased by a combination of the two services?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Absolutely.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from New York that a unified air service would be to the best interest of the country. I am one of those who voted to combine the Army and the Navy when the question came up here a year ago. I remember that at that time some Member of Congress said that during the World War Germany was the only country which had a united army and navy, and she lost the war. Another gentleman—I think the gentleman from New York—remarked: "Yes, and it took the whole world to lick her." I think that is the story.

We have at other times heard what the distinguished gentleman from Oregon says, that the Army and Navy did not want the air forces consolidated. Of course they do not. The generals and the fliers of the Army are afraid of their promotions or they are afraid of their pay; and the same thing applies to the aviators of the Navy; they are afraid some admiral will lose his promotion.

The question of national defense rises above all these things and in its consideration these matters should be brushed aside.

· I believe there should be in the Cabinet a secretary of the air forces, a man who would be able to sit down with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War and discuss strategy and discuss what they are going to do about war, so we will not have this pulling here and hauling there.

We all heard the story as to the famous races that were held between the Army and the Navy. It was brought out on the floor of the House that during those races one year the Army would agree that the Navy would win and the next year the Navy would agree that the Army would win, so you would not know which had the fastest planes. Is that national defense? Is that trying to build up the air forces? No; that is just "You pat my back and I'll pat your back." We do not want that in national defense. We want the best air force in the world.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. HORR. I can not understand why, if the gentleman believes in a consolidation of the Army and the Navy, he also believes in the creation of another instrumentality, a department of aviation.

Mr. CONNERY. If they will consolidate the Army and the Navy, then let them consolidate all three branches of defense and put them under the control of one department.

Mr. HORR. If the Army and the Navy were to be consolidated, the thing to do would be to include the air service and put them all under one department.

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I would like to see done. I would like to see Congress put them all under one head. But if we can not get through Congress the proposition of consolidating the Army and the Navy, then I say the thing to do is to create a department of air forces with a secretary at its head in the Cabinet.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that an Englishman down at Daytona yesterday attained a greater speed with an automobile by 50 per cent, I will say 60 per cent, than the Navy planes attain.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the statement of the gen-

Mr. GOSS. I can not but wonder, in view of the service of the gentleman from Massachusetts in the Army, how he would feel if an admiral were chosen to be the head of such a consolidated department.

Mr. CONNERY. I will serve under any admiral in the world if he knows what he is talking about, and there is not the situation where they say: "You do this and I'll do that." The gentleman is aware of the controversies that take place between generals; and he knows where the doughboy fitted into the picture.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Different functions are performed by the two air forces.

Mr. CONNERY. They could be performed much more effectively by being consolidated into one department. With these fires smoldering over there in the Far East we have got to have the best air service in the world. That is what I want.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. With this great air force that the gentleman is talking about, why did they not clean up Shanghai?

Mr. SCHAFER. Why does not the gentleman convert his pacifist chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations for the Army?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. He is not a pacifist.

Mr. SCHAFER. How are you going to have the kind of air service that the gentleman wants?

Mr. CONNERY. The chairman of the subcommittee on War Department appropriations is not a pacifist.

I am for real national defense and for a real air force for the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY

Pay, Naval Academy: Pay for professors and others, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $253,192: Provided, That not more than $33,300 shall be paid for masters and instructors in swordsmanship and physical training: Provided further, That the number of civilian and officer instructors at the Naval Academy shall not be increased during the fiscal year 1934, and any vacancy occurring in the number of civilian instructors in other than swordsmanship and physical training shall not be filled until the number of such instructors shall have been reduced below 49: Provided further, That no officer shall be detailed as an instructor of midshipmen without the approval of the academic board.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the last proviso on page 39, beginning in line 19, as legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso on page 39, lines 13 to 19, inclusive, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman that this is only a limitation.

Mr. GOSS. It does not show any saving, on the face of the language of the bill, under the Holman rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A limitation, I will say to the gentleman, does not necessarily have to show a saving.

Mr. GOSS. No; but we have limitations in the guise of legislation, I will say to my friend from Alabama; and I think this is legislation in the guise of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Kansas inform the Chair whether or not there will be any saving under this proviso?

Mr. AYRES. I can not point out any definite saving, Mr. Chairman, but the provision will prevent expansion of the present instruction force. It is a limitation, without which there could be expansion, although I am frank to say I am sure no expansion would occur.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman any information as to how many of those that this paragraph affects are performing service at the Naval Academy now? Are there more than 49?

Mr. AYRES. There are 62, excluding physical instructors. Mr. McCORMACK. It is provided in line 19 that they must be reduced below 49. Does this mean there are over 49 there now?

Mr. AYRES. There are 62 at the Naval Academy at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it is the intention to reduce the number to 49, gradually?

Mr. AYRES. Eventually to 49.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then this would indicate that there is going to be a reduction?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, if the Chair will indulge me-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I respectfully submit that the first part of the proviso, "that the number of civilian and officer instructors at the Naval Academy shall not be increased during the fiscal year 1934," is a proper limitation under the Holman rule. This provides, on its face, that the number shall not be increased. The very purpose of the language is to limit the amount of the appropriations based on the number of instructors that may be employed.

The CHAIRMAN. How can the gentleman point out that there is a definite showing of a decrease?

Mr. STAFFORD. The very language is that the number shall not be increased. What more definite language can be used than the language which says "shall not be increased"? This language is predicated upon the idea there is a certain number now employed and the language says that the number shall not be increased. The very purpose of the language is to make it so there will not be any further employment of more instructors which would be an expense on the Government, so far as that is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this language, in the opinion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, eliminate anything or does it save any money?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. I direct the attention of the Chair to the rule—of which the Chair, of course, is cognizant—

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This is provided for by not allowing an increase of the number, and the very opposite of an increase is that there will be a reduction when a vacancy occurs. The Chair must take into consideration that vacancies do occur by reason of death or resignation, as the hearings and the report show; therefore there will be no increase in the number.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not the rule say that the expenses shall be retrenched?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; shall retrench expenditures by reduction of the number. If the language of the bill provided for an increase, of course, there would not be any retrenchment; but where the language provides specifically there shall not be any more added, this must result necessarily, from the language itself, in a retrenchment of expenditures, because the Chair must take judicial cognizance of the fact that vacancies occur for one reason or another; and when such vacancies occur they shall not be filled or the number increased.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not entirely speculative as to whether or not there will be a retrenchment or a reduction or any vacancies?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it is not speculative. I can not consider it speculative or conjectural in placing a limitation on a bill that forbids an increase in the instructional force of the Academy. There is retrenchment when you place a limitation that the number shall not be increased in that it prevents an increase.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin, although I usually do on matters of parliamentary construction. It does not affirmatively appear that there is any retrenchment in this provision. The question seems to be whether or not, aside from the question of reduction of expenses, this language would be authorized by existing law. If this is legislation, I think the position of the gentleman from Connecticut is correct. I am not familiar with the substantive law on the question, but if the limitation is not authorized under existing law, then the proposition is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In the opinion of the Chair, it must show that the language comes within the rule, and that there is a definite retrenchment. The Chair thinks that the language does not so show, and therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 13, after the word "training," insert "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the paying of civilian instructors at the Naval Academy who were not so employed on June 30, 1933."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does that provide for the same restriction as the language that was stricken out?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut wish to press his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. I do not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MARINE CORPS

Pay of officers, active list: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for all officers on the active list—pay and allowances, $3,443,-816, including not to exceed $128,067 for increased pay for making aerial flights; subsistence allowance, $447,168; rental allowance, $619,254; in all, $4,510,238; and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers on the retired list.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 5, strike out the figures "$128,067" and insert "$141,306."

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, that simply puts back the flying pay of the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALTERATIONS TO NAVAL VESSELS

Toward the alterations and repairs required for the purpose of modernizing the U. S. S. New Mexico, Mississippi, and Idaho, authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels," approved February 28, 1931, $5,500,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under this head for the fiscal year 1934 for employees in the field service assigned to Group 4 (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $30,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. From my reading of the hearings, I recall the authorization made some years back providing for the rehabilitation of three battleships. Only on two of those has the work been under construction, as I understand it. Am I correct in my recollection?

Mr. AYRES. There are three undergoing modernization now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood there was one at Norfolk and one at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

Mr. AYRES. Two at Norfolk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whereas no work has been begun so far as the third battleship is concerned?

Mr. AYRES. Oh, yes. That is progressing a little more slowly than the others, but all three are under modernization

Mr. STAFFORD. Do the hearings disclose the views of the Navy Department on whether the expenditure of $10,000,000 on each of these outclassed and outworn battleships is a justifiable expenditure?

Mr. AYRES. We did not go into that question extensively this year. In the hearings on the appropriation bill for the current year we discussed this matter quite fully and as a result tried to reduce the authorized cost from $30,000,000 to $27,000,000. The bill that we reported reduced the limit of cost, but in the end became law with the original authorization unchanged.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original estimate was predicated on existing costs at the time, and at that time costs had not been reduced. Are they going ahead with a more extravagant modernization than was originally intended?

Mr. AYRES. The basis for the committee's action last year was the reduction in matériel costs. We took that action despite the fact that we were told there had been an increase in cost owing to moneys not having been provided as rapidly or as fully as needed, which resulted in an increase of overhead costs that would more than absorb savings accruing from lower commodity costs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House when these two that have been getting along pretty well will be in commission, and when the last one, upon which they have been going along in a fractional sort of undertaking, will be in commission?

Mr. AYRES. Two in the latter part of this calendar year, and the third one shortly after the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended on the part of the Navy to have this modernization apply to the other battleships that are just about going out of commission?

Mr. AYRES. Nothing of that kind has been authorized. The gentleman probably intends to address his inquiry to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope that under the leadership of the advanced gentleman from Georgia he will not bring into the House any bill providing for an expenditure of $30,000,-000 on old, discarded battleships, but will bring in a measure for modern vessels, to meet the demands of the times.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am in accord with the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman again qualifies as a progressive naval expert.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asked whether or not the $30,000,000 modernization program should have been undertaken and this large amount appropriated for the modernization of the three battleships. Personally, I was one of the Members of Congress who did not think the appropriation was justified. I opposed it at the time, and a year ago in the committee believed that the reductions that had occurred in cost of materials and labor were such that we ought not to carry the entire amount authorized originally into the appropriation bill. The gentleman has indicated the correct course when he said we ought not to have spent the $30,000,000 upon those battleships, but that we ought to have saved that money and have applied it at some future time on a modern Navy program.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the time when the Senate bill was under consideration authorizing the expenditure of $30,-000,000 for these old discarded battleships, that had been in commission for about 20 years, ready to be scrapped or for the second line of defense, there was introduced in the House a bill providing $76,000,000 for new construction. I believe I am not violating any secret when I say that the reason why the Naval Affairs Committee pressed the $30,-000,000 proposal was because they did not think that they could get the $76,000,000 bill through the Senate, and they took the other up in order to give employment in the navy

Mr. FRENCH. In my judgment the gentleman's understanding is correct. That was my understanding at the time. I was opposed to the program, and I believe the gentleman has stated the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $25,047,785, and, in addition, (1) the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to make transfers during the fiscal year 1934 from the naval supply account fund to this appropriation of sums aggregating not to exceed $5,000,000, and (2) $2,498,000, which is hereby reappropriated for the objects embraced by this paragraph of the appropriation "Public works, Navy, emergency construction, act July 21, 1932," contained in the act entitled "An act to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and ex-Corporation, and to create employment by providing for and expediting a public works program," approved July 31, 1932, and the total sums hereby made available shall remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under the head of "Construction and machinery" for the fiscal year 1934 for employees in the field service assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule Wages for Civil Service Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $800,000: Provided, That of the appropriations contained in this act under the head of "Increase of the Navy," there shall be available such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, including the purchase of plans, and the employment of personnel in the Navy Department and in the field, in addition to those otherwise provided for, owing to the construction of vessels heretofore authorized and herein or heretofore appropriated for in part.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Vinson of Georgia: Page 49, line 14, before the period, insert a colon and "Provided further, That the appro-priation limitation on expenditures including armor and armament for the aircraft carrier No. 4 is hereby fixed at $21,000,000."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the effect of this amendment. A few years ago Congress authorized the construction of what is known as the Ranger, an experimental type of aircraft carrier. The contract was let and was awarded to the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. It now is progressing very rapidly in the stages of completion. The Navy Department is desirous of making certain changes with reference to the type and character of that ship.

Extended hearings were held and testimony was heard by the committee from the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair, Chief of Bureau of Engineering, Chief of Bureau of Aeronautics, and the Assistant Chief of Bureau of Aeronautics. The department also presented models of the U.S.S. Ranger, which made it easier to visualize the proposed changes which will make her a far more efficient unit of the United States Fleet. The witnesses were unanimous in stating that the proposed changes are essential, not only to obtain increased military effectiveness but also for the protection of life and material. Also, they can be accomplished, if authorized now, more cheaply and satisfactorily than at any later time.

The U.S. S. Ranger was designed during the years 1927-1929 and a contract for her construction was entered into with the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. under date of November 1, 1930. The contract price for the hull and machinery of this vessel is $15,775,000, including changes authorized to date. Armor, armament, and ammunition costing $2,716,000, which are furnished by the Government, are included in the limit of cost but are not part of the contract price. The total of $18,491,000 leaves only $509,000 to cover Government-furnished equipage, trial items, past trial items, and essential military changes yet to be authorized. The contract date of completion is May 1, 1934.

The U.S.S. Ranger is the first aircraft carrier, designed as such from the beginning, to be constructed for the United States Navy, and is, therefore, to a very great extent an experimental ship. Her design was based largely on the limited experience gained with the Langley. Although the Saratoga and Lexington were commissioned on November 16, 1927, and December 14, 1927, respectively, it was not until the year 1929 that they took an active part in the fleet

A large number of important developments in naval aviation have resulted from the fleet maneuvers of 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932. Most of these developments have been incorporated in the Lexington and Saratoga but very few of them have been incorporated thus far in the Ranger, due to the limited funds available. In addition, experience not only in the United States Navy but also in foreign navies has indicated conclusively within the past two years the necessity for having elevated locations for controlling the movements of the vessel, the fire of the antiaircraft guns, and the operation of the ship's airplanes. The committee thus finds that, whereas it will be possible to complete the Ranger as originally designed, within the present limit of cost of $19,000,000, if this be done the ship when turned over to the Navy, will be some three or four years behind the Lexington and Saratoga as an aircraft carrier and will be seriously handicapped with regard to communications, equipment, and the operation of her planes and guns. Accordingly it is strongly recommended that the proposed increase of the limit of cost from $19,000,000 to $21,000,000 be authorized.

I am advised there is no objection on the part of the members of the subcommittee. They made an investigation and they are all in accord that this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the Consent Calendar on the last call there was a bill reported from the committee of which the gentleman has the honor to be the chairman providing for an increase of appropriation for this carrier of $2,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, it is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to carry that legislation into effect?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. With those proposed modifications, when will the Ranger be ready for commission?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The Ranger will be launched on the 25th. Mrs. Hoover will christen it. It will be about a year before the Ranger can go into commission if this legislation passes. This is an experimental type of aircraft carrier. It is the first one the Government has ever built. The Saratoga, the Lexington, and the Langley are converted ships

The distinguished gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French], as well as the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] and other members of the Committee on Appropriations, so I am advised, are thoroughly in accord with increasing the authorized cost of constructing this ship. It may not cost $21,000,000. The Bureau of Construction and Repair at the next Congress will come before the Congress and lay out a program as to what the cost will be. They are so close to-day within the total amount of the appropriation that it is necessary there be leeway given them.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. VINSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. TABER. I think that this aircraft carrier ought to be built in the best possible way, and as it is an experimental type of ship, something that we can follow with our permanent construction, we ought to go ahead with it just as fast as we can, and I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia should be adopted.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think that in the interest of economy in the construction of this particular craft, it would be desirable that the amendment be adopted. I am afraid greater expenses will result unless we so act.

I wish, now, to refer to a general statement that was made by the distinguished chairman of the Naval Committee [Mr. Vinson], a few weeks ago, that was given a great deal of currency in the press of the country, in which he seemed to take the administration severely to task because a more intensive naval-construction program has not been carried forward during the last several years.

I have the highest respect for my colleague [Mr. VINSON] and for the valuable services he is rendering as a Member of Congress, and it may be that he did not intend his criticism as a reflection upon the administration but as an expression of regret that a more extensive building program had not been followed. This really must be the case, for the gentleman is chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and the Democratic Party has been in control of the House for nearly two years and no authorization building program has passed this House during all that time.

Personally, I am in heartiest sympathy with the policy that the administration has followed in advising a moderate program in construction work. The very amendment that the gentleman proposes suggests to the Members of the House that if we are to have regard for economies we must not rush forward with untried building projects. Under the London treaty we may equip 25 per cent of our cruiser tonnage with flight decks. Here again is a departure in our construction program, and it should be entered upon with care.

As I said yesterday, I am in accord with a conservative program because of the effect that it will have upon the limitation conference that will convene in 1935. I hope that when two years shall have passed and that conference shall have assembled all nations will not find themselves built up to tonnage limits. Should nations be built to the limit of tonnage, we shall find that one of the greatest arguments that will be brought to bear against reduction of tonnage and those of officers and personnel and costs and all the other naval burdens will be because the nations will not want to destroy new craft. That was the argument at the Washington conference. It was the argument at the London conference. It will be the argument in any conference that may be held in the future.

Again, I have approved of the policy of moderation in naval building programs because I have hoped that through moderation the United States could be most helpful in bringing practical results out of the conference that has been in progress in Geneva looking to reduction of all military and naval burdens.

In my judgment, we have followed the right course in being moderate in naval construction, a course initiated by the President and concurred in by the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege to serve six years in this Congress on the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. During four years of that time the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] was the ranking minority member. For the last two years he has been the chairman of the committee.

In the six years during which I, a Republican, have served alongside of him there has never been a time in his actions on that committee, or in the transactions of that committee, when partisan politics in any sense has been allowed to interfere with his idea of the national defense. Whether he led the minority, or whether he presided over the entire committee as its chairman, the gentleman from Georgia has been first, last, and all the time a patriot in every approach to the question of national defense. [Applause.]

In this last Congress, close to his own heart was a building program that, in many ways, many of us would have liked to have seen reported to the Congress, a program on which we would like to have seen the country embark. From my own knowledge I know the gentleman from Georgia sunk his own personal desires for the time being in the interest of what he believed, and what I believed, to be the national good and the international comity.

The possibility of making any great advance in this Congress, had that bill been reported, would not have been at all considerable. In my own judgment, the gentleman from Georgia has refrained from reporting that bill and persuaded the members of the committee to think with him practically without dissent, he believing that it were better to hold it back because of a desire on his part not to put the national defense in any degree in conflict with the President of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of his country; and I feel exceedingly sorry to hear from my own party this afternoon an attack in some measure on his motives, on his responsibility, for not reporting that program.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had heard what I said, he would recognize that what I said was not in criticism of his course in the Congress, but approval. The gentleman to whom I referred seemed to criticize in his interviews the present administration for not carrying through a larger building program, whereas the Congress must share the program with the administration. For my part, I believe it is the course we should have followed.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, if in any way I have wronged or misquoted the gentleman from Idaho, it was not my intention so to do

I did feel that the question of partisan politics had been pinned on the chairman of our committee; and in this moment I desired to speak what was close to my own heart and what I know to be a fact, that in that committee under his leadership partisan politics has never been considered in relation to the national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. On the contrary, my remarks are prompted by the same thought, that in the interviews the gentleman has given out he has seemed to desire to criticize the present administration, when his committee and this Congress must share the responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations made in this act for the purchase or manufacture of equipment or material or of a particular class of equipment or material shall be available for the purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patent, licenses under letters patent, and applications for letters patent that pertain to such equipment or material for which the appropriations are made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I have not had time to ascertain whether this language has been carried in prior appropriation bills. It grants rather omnibus authority to the department to use any amount of appropriations for the purchase of letters patent or applications for patents.

Mr. AYRES. I may state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this provision, in exactly the same language, has been carried in naval appropriation acts for many years.

Mr. STAFFORD. To what extent has the department availed itself of this omnibus authority for the purchase of patents?

Mr. AYRES. I do not know. Frankly, I can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limit whatever on the amount of money they can expend in this way.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman is correct; but I can assure him there has been no abuse.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it would be prudent to place some limitation upon the amount of the appropriation that could be expended for the purpose?

Mr. AYRES. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman.
Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would keep this thought in mind in the consideration of the bill next year, because I think it is questionable practice to authorize a department to expend an unlimited amount for the purchase of patents.

Mr. AYRES. I assure the gentleman I shall be very glad to bear in mind his suggestion.

Mr. STAFFORD. I realize the Government is undertaking the building of a number of ships and there may be occasion for authority to purchase patent rights, but we do not extend this authority to the War Department. The language carried in this bill gives unlimited blanket authority. Millions could be used, and the Government would be helpless.

Mr. AYRES. I should not go that far, because the amounts that we appropriate are very definitely allocated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Ayres, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 533) entitled "Joint resolution providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Patterson, Mr. Oddie, and Mr. Hayden to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2148) entitled "An act for the relief of Clarence R. Killion."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on this bill (H. R. 14724).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I wish to address myself briefly to the information concerning the Marine Corps recently brought out in hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs and a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House.

It is becoming more and more evident that it is almost impossible for the House, with the multiplicity of matters before it for consideration, to consider thoroughly legislation that requires detailed study. Necessarily, therefore, reliance must be placed in the committees that hold extended hearings on such subjects. I have been very much impressed, in my service in the Congress, with the carefulness, earnestness, and study given by faithful and hardworking committees to the subjects that are referred to them.

In particular do I wish to pay my humble tribute to the Subcommittee on Appropriations which submitted through its chairman, Mr. Ayres, the bill making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934. As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have been particularly interested in its work. It is a pleasure to be able to praise the faithful and conscientious members of this committee for the efficient work that they did. The House evidently thought as I did, for little fault was found with its recommendations. This committee had a very delicate job to perform. On the one hand was the properly insistent demand for economy in Government expenditures, and on the other hand, was the imperative necessity for providing for an adequate national defense. This committee met the issue squarely and announced (p. 8 of the report):

We can ill afford, in the judgment of the committee, to accede to proposals advanced as measures of economy that would lessen the present degree of our military preparedness.

This view was responsible for the refusal of the committee to accept the Budget recommendations with reference to the Marine Corps—the Budget proposal being to reduce the corps' enlisted strength to 13,600.

In 1931 the appropriated enlisted strength was 18,000; in 1932, 17,500; in 1933, 15,343; and for the fiscal year 1934, as said above, the suggestion was to make the number 13,600. If such a reduction were to be made, in my opinion, and in the opinion of others far better qualified to judge than I am, its service would have been reduced below its minimum of effectiveness. Economy at the expense of effectiveness is not real economy.

The Navy, as a part of its policy, is expected to maintain a Marine Corps of such strength that it will be able adequately to furnish detachments to vessels of the fleet in full commission, to supply guards for shore stations, and garrisons for outlying positions, and to maintain them in readiness as expeditionary forces. The Marine Corps, therefore, is a highly specialized force trained for certain purposes. In war time its function is to provide an expeditionary force to assist the fleet in the capture and defense of naval bases. In peace, this expeditionary force is used to provide landing forces for the protection of American interests in regions where unsettled conditions make such interference necessary. It follows that its training and experience thus makes the personnel of this corps ready for service on land and sea. There is no other part of our Military Establishment that has this precise duty, and no other organization under naval command can fulfill the requirements. In undertaking overseas operations there must be an advanced base force that can seize and defend the fleet bases. Acting as it does with the fleet proper coordination requires that it be developed, trained, and maintained by the Navy. As the duties of such expeditionary forces are unique and require special training, the mobility of the fleet would be seriously affected without the proper force to do the work. A reduc-tion of the force below the number required by the fleet would seriously cripple the successful activities of the fleet itself. This has been recognized by our naval experts and the number required for the peace-time enlisted strength of the Marine Corps has been fixed at approximately onefifth of the actual enlisted strength of the Navy. Long experience has evolved this approximated strength.

I know that recently statements to the effect that naval men exaggerate the necessity of certain requirements for an adequate national defense have met with applause from those pacifistically inclined. As a matter of common sense, I believe our naval experts, trained for the purpose of protecting our country and its commerce, are the best sources of information of our needs for national security. I have never seen any lack of patriotism on their part nor any intention to aggrandize themselves at the expense of their country. If their judgment is unsound, where would we go to receive the proper determination of the force necessary to be employed in our Military Establishment for the protection of the country? Is it sound sense to follow the opinions of those who have never had any training or experience in naval activities?

The Commandant of the Marine Corps, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy dated September 8, 1932, says:

The reduction of the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps from 18,000 to 15,343 has made it impossible for the corps to carry out its primary mission of supporting the United States Fleet by maintaining a force in readiness to operate with the fleet. On the present strength only weakly skeletonized organizations of such arms that are essential to a modern military force can be maintained.

With the present enlisted strength the Marine Corps is not prepared to perform its allotted task in the event of a national emergency.

And before the subcommittee adds:

The further reduction to 13,600 will greatly intensify the situation and impair the national defense.

Such a statement by a conscientious officer must demand our consideration.

It is not necessary to quote the further testimony of our naval experts, for it is set out in the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations and the Subcommittee on Naval Affairs. The testimony of every witness, including the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations, the president of the General Board of the Navy, the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and the Chief Coordinator of the Government was to the effect that the United States has no other force that could be used as the Marine Corps is used, that there should be some such force specially trained for the duties required of the Marine Corps, that the present strength of the corps does not enable it to fully perform all the functions for which it is needed, and that a further reduction would be disadvantageous to the corps, seriously impairing its efficiency and thereby destroying its best service to the country and impairing the national defense.

Every Member of Congress realizes the necessity for economy at this time, and Congress has evidenced this by a very reasonable reduction in governmental expenditures, but by reason of the unsettled conditions which now exist throughout the world, the weakening of our Navy at this time would be most unwise. Unfortunately for the United States, there is only one fortified base outside the continental limits where the ships of the fleet could rendezvous for repair, fuel, food, ammunition, and rest, and from whence they could operate at will without being concerned with the defense of the base itself. It is, therefore, necessary that the fleet should be prepared to establish and hold bases in the event of any trouble.

Troops must accompany the fleet for shore operations for this purpose and for other essential shore operations in connection with fleet activities. These troops must be specially trained and always ready for emergency landing in disturbed areas, for it trouble should arise it would arise suddenly. The fleet, the first line of defense, must be ready to move, and the Marine Corps, in order to fulfill its primary mission, must also be ready. Such a trained force can not be hurriedly improvised, and it must be composed of men and officers who, after years of service with the Navy, have acquired the sea habit and are a part of the Navy. No other troops could operate with the Navy with equal economy and efficiency as the Marine Corps with its high morale and specialized training for this particular service.

This country has never fought a war of aggression, nor has it fought for the purpose of territorial acquisition. This has been our declaration to the world, but we must be prepared to defend our rights and the rights of our citizens and to maintain their liberty and freedom from oppression throughout the world. In order to do this the Navy must be maintained upon a standard that will give the country adequate security, and the first element in this maintenance is the proper care of the Marine Corps.

I am glad to have had the opportunity to congratulate the hard working and conscientious Committee on Appropriations, which realized the necessity of keeping the Marine Corps up to its proper standard.

TAXICAB RATES

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a table that I have compiled, showing the rate of taxicab fares in other cities similar in population to Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight to-night to file a minority report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 580) to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war from the United States under certain conditions, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR EVENING SESSION

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to preside as Speaker pro tempore for the evening session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, can the Speaker inform us what the program will be for to-morrow and Saturday?

The SPEAKER. It is the purpose of the Chair to-morrow to recognize the gentleman from Texas or some one on the report concerning the impeachment of a judge in California. It involves a constitutional question, and a number have asked for time.

After that is concluded, the Chair intends to recognize the gentleman from North Carolina concerning the Samoan bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will that take all day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know, but after that we will have to have a conference.

Mr. SNELL. Unless that is going to take a full day, it does not seem necessary to come in at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that we will have enough to do to-morrow.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 256. Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise, with respect to national banking associations, powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RECESS

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAINEY.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session this evening until 10.30 o'clock for the consideration of the Private Calendar. The Clerk will call the first bill.

B. J. SAMPLE

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2991) for the relief of B. J. Sample.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman state his objection to the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the claimant here obtained a contract from the Government for hauling the mail over a star route, under a competitive bid with others, over a route where there had been some complaint about the distance between the termini of the route. He accepted the contract, and now he comes in afterwards and seeks to have the Government pay him some money based on an admitted difference in mileage.

I do not know how it is in the gentleman's part of the country, but I venture to say that this claimant knew the distance of that route, just exactly the same as every other man who bid, and as did the previous holder of the contract. He must have known what the distance was. Under the circumstances it seems to me to be an unconscionable claim, and should not be entertained by the Post Office Department, and it is not approved by it. It is disapproved by that department.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, the advertisement for carrying the mail on this route—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARE. I am going to make this statement or there will not be any bills passed to-night.

Mr. BLANTON. And I want to ask the gentleman a question or there will not be any bills passed to-night. Are we trying this particular claim, or are we trying the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Eaton]? Does the gentleman from Colorado have to get up here and show all of his reasons for objecting to a bill before we can proceed? If he has, how many bills will we reach to-night?

Mr. HARE. I shall make this explanation or we will not reach any more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman ought not to make that statement. We have about 25 Members only present on the floor here to-night to consider a long calendar. The gentleman from Colorado is one of the men who has worked on this calendar, and I doubt if there are more than three or four others who have done that work. The rest of the men here to-night are Members who have private bills to pass. If the gentleman takes that attitude I doubt whether he will pass his own bill. The gentleman is usually in such a good humor that I think now he ought not to make that kind of a threat, because it will not get him anywhere.

Mr. HARE. It is not a threat, but I must insist on having time to present the facts to the House for the reason that I am familiar with the facts. This is not my bill. It is a Senate bill, but the claimant resides in my district. Here is an advertisement by the Post Office Department to carry the mail from Augusta, Ga., to Allendale, S. C. The Post Office Department says the distance is 104 miles. A dozen or more men submit bids. One man submits a bid of approximately $1,750. That is in June, 1927. He is advised shortly afterwards that his bid is accepted, but before actually going to work on July 1, 1927, he learns that the distance is 130 miles. He calls it to the attention of the Post Office Department, and then it developed that the Post Office Department had trouble in connection with the bid on this same star route four years before when the department advertised it was 104 miles. After the carrier began to carry the mail on that route he discovered that it was 1301/2 miles. He brought it to the attention of the Post Office Department and tried for four years to get them to correct the compensation for the mileage, but the Post Office Department refused to do so. The point I make is this:

When the Post Office Department in 1927 advertised this route, it knew that the mileage was 130.6 miles. It had this information in its files, according to the letter here addressed to the Hon. James F. Byrnes, a Senator from my State. The department admits that his statement of facts is correct. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Eaton] will notice the second paragraph, it will be seen that the department did know that the mileage was 130 miles. Yet it advertised 104 miles. This man, who had no way of measuring it, accepted it as true, and then discovered that the route was 25 miles longer than he anticipated.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Did not this man drive by automobile?

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would the gentleman have us believe that he did not have a speedometer and did not know what the distance was?

Mr. HARE. He had no reason to measure it before that. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman deny the fact that there was a statement in the bid instructions, that the bidders and the sureties " are urged to familiarize themselves with the service to be performed before assuming any liability as bidders or sureties"?

Mr. HARE. That is true.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman not know that this claimant here was a resident of the vicinity and lived there for a long time?

Mr. HARE. I do not, because it is contrary to the fact. This man lived in my town, a distance of 40 or 50 miles

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Forty miles is no distance with an automobile.

Mr. HARE. I know that, but he had a right to rely upon the representation made by the department. Now, if the Department had not had trouble before, and if it did not have in its records this same complaint, and if it did not know that this was 130 miles, I think the gentleman's position would be correct. But when the department knew from its records that it was 130 miles, because of the previous complaint referred to, and after the claimant had said to them, "I will relinquish my contract, because it is 130 miles," and they said, "Yes; we know it is 130 miles, but we can not release you and you will have to forfeit your bond if you do not perform your contract." He then proceeded to perform his contract. The department says the facts as stated by the Senator are correct, and I think the gentleman should allow this bill to pass. The department says that they had in their own files information that it was 130 miles, and that the advertisements on the part of the Post Office Department was a mistake or an error on its part and not on the part of the claimant.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if there were any equities on behalf of this claimant I would be glad to withdraw the reservation of objection, but there are no equities to this claim, and I therefore object.

JOHN J. FOLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2088, for the relief of John J. Foley.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. COYLE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. COYLE. I would like to make an explanation of the equities of this case. John J. Foley had been for some time asking me to introduce a bill, and it looked so bad on the face of it that I refrained from doing it until one day I went to the department and read the record of the courtmartial proceedings and made up my mind that John J. Foley had gotten a really raw deal. He appeared before the committee and convinced the committee of his own honesty. After having read the record there was not a statement which he made before that committee which was not in large measure substantiated by the testimony before that court-martial. This man had distinguished military service. He was wounded and sent to military police duty. While on military police duty a man was killed in a brawl in the evening, while he was on official duty, and there being new troops in the area, and he being a part of another detachment, he was tried by court-martial for murder. He was convicted of carelessness in the discharge of his firearms. He should have been promoted and restored to duty. Instead of that, he was given two years in prison and a dishonorable discharge. There are more equities in this case than any similar case that I have ever looked over.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that the record testimony in the court-martial proceedings, in addition to the testimony of the soldier himself, corroborates his statement as to how it happened?

Mr. COYLE. It does entirely corroborate it, and the department itself at the time recommended that this man's dishonorable discharge be set aside, and the recommendation miscarried between the office of the Secretary of War and the prison where he was confined.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill was based upon the fact that the interesting story which we have just heard recounted by the distinguished gentleman from the Committee on Military Affairs did not appear in the record. There is no report from the War Department. There is no report of the court-martial proceeding or any other facts from the War Department upon which a consideration of the report of the committee might be tested. The gentleman states he made the investigation himself; and on account of the distinguished war record of this claimant I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. At the time this claimant was before the gentleman's Subcommittee on Military Affairs, or whatever committee it was, testifying, was a War Department representative there to hear him?

Mr. MAY. Yes; they were.

Mr. BLANTON. Who was the representative of the War Department there?

Mr. MAY. There was a counsellor there. I do not remember who he was.

Mr. BLANTON. Was there any officer designated by the War Department there to hear his testimony and answer it? Mr. MAY. There was an attorney there.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about officers, officials in the

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is only practiced in the Committee on Naval Affairs; not in the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about proper practice that should prevail in the Military Affairs Committee when they let private claimants testify there. Any claimant on earth can come before a committee and exercise his personality before the committee and make a favorable impression and unless the department is there represented, in order to answer his testimony, probably the impression that he makes personally on the committee will carry the day for him. It is just like having a witness in court presenting one side of a case and not having the other side there to present its testimony.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman suffer an explanation from a member of the committee who heard the testimony and who was present and made the report on the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. I may say to my friend that there was a lawyer there representing the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell me who he was?
Mr. MAY. I do not remember his name, but he was a major and he cross-examined the witnesses.

Mr. BLANTON. Was he from the Judge Advocate General's office?

Mr. MAY. I believe he was.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. MAY. I do not know his name.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman has such an indefinite recollection about the gentleman who represented the War Department, he was not representing the War Department properly at the time or he would have made some impression on the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. He was an attorney.

Mr. BLANTON. The War Department has turned this case down several times.

Mr. COYLE. No; not under my guidance.

Mr. BLANTON. At first this case did not make a favorable impression on my friend, and there was such a time when he refused to introduce the bill because he was not impressed by it. Is not that so?

Mr. COYLE. As I then saw the case it was that of a man dishonorably discharged after a charge of murder.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman was not impressed with it.

Mr. COYLE. Would the gentleman from Texas be impressed with a record of that kind?

Mr. BLANTON. No.

Mr. COYLE. But if the gentleman from Texas had done as I have done he would be convinced, as I am, and would be standing in my shoes here to defend this young man. He certainly got a raw deal. He was not properly defended at the court-martial.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Colorado. Neither he nor I have any personal interest in this case at all. Our only interest is to see that the War Department is protected, that the men who enlist in the Army and who perform their duty and are not courtmartialed are given a square deal and have better rights than a man who violates the law and is court-martialed. We must protect the Government.

I agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Eaton] that there ought to be a report here from the War Department explaining this case; and it ought to be set forth in this committee report. We ought not to take up a case and pass it through the House without such a report.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we have spent 20 minutes on this calendar so far and have considered but two bills. At this rate we will only consider 20 bills this evening. I wish gentlemen having bills would get through with them more quickly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows how to make them do something. He could demand the regular order. That closes debate.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Let us get through. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ARTHUR I. NEVILLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2157, for the relief of Arthur I. Neville.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Arthur I. Neville, who was a member of Battery B, Three hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment, and Battery A,

Three hundred and twenty-third Regiment, United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 9th day of September, 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 11, page 1, and lines 1 and 2, page 2, strike out the words "pension or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the World War adjusted compensation act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN T. LYNCH, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5140, for the relief of the estate of John T. Lynch, deceased.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOPE. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. BARTON. This claim was allowed by the Court of Claims and has been recommended by the committee. I can see no reason for the objection. If the gentleman from Kansas will explain the grounds of his objection, perhaps I can help him to understand it.

Mr. HOPE. This bill is drawn, apparently, on the theory that the Court of Claims has made a favorable finding, but on looking at the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims it appears that they did not make any favorable finding. They did make some findings of fact, but they made no findings that would justify a claim of this kind against the Government of the United States.

The findings of the Court of Claims were that this horse was stolen, apparently, by a soldier who was in the United States military service during the Civil War; then it was found in his possession. It was claimed by the claimant in this case, and the Army officials to whom the complaint was made returned the horse to the claimant.

Later another hearing was held and the horse was returned to the man in whose possession it was found. Now, there is nothing in the findings of the Court of Claims that disclosed on what ground the horse was returned. Later, after the discharge of the party in whose possession the horse was found, the claimant in this case brought a suit in replevin, which action was later dismissed by lack of prosecution by the plaintiff.

Now, if the claimant in this case had any claim, it was not against the United States Government, it was against the party in whose possession the horse was found and who took the horse home with him after the war. The fact he filed that suit indicated that he thought the claim was against the party in whose possession the horse was found; and the fact that he did not prosecute the claim was, of course, laches on his own part if it was a good claim. Under this situation I must object.

Mr. BARTON. Let me explain. In the first place—

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not take much time. Here we are considering an old Civil War claim with only $150 involved.

Mr. BARTON. The Court of Claims did not render any judgment against the United States. It could not do that by virtue of its jurisdiction. The United States got the horse. That is the finding of the Court of Claims. The United States having got the horse the claimant could not recover on the replevin after the war was over.

This man is short a horse and the Court of Claims certified the amount was justly due and the committee has recommended it. The War Department does not object to it; in fact, the department says, in substance, that it is all right to pay the claim if it has not been paid. The Comp-have to say about it. I really think it is just.

Mr. BLANTON. During the Civil War there was a lot of cotton confiscated and used by the Government which has never yet paid any of the owners anything for it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is going to demand the regular order, I am going to object. We are not going to pass any bill 68 years old, Mr. Speaker, without discuss-

Mr. MILLER. I do not want to pass it, but I want to make this statement: I am advised that to-night will be the only Private Calendar night, and I am going to demand the regular order to dispatch as many bills as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Is the claimant who lost that horse still alive?

Mr. BARTON. He is not. I knew him well.

Mr. BLANTON. You say he is not alive? Mr. BARTON. He is not alive.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, we are not going to pass any 68year-old Civil War claims here to-night for dead people. There are too many with just claims still alive.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

FRED G. CLARK CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5361, for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIZZIE PITTMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11194, for the relief of Lizzie Pittman.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the sponsor of this bill if he would be willing to have an amendment inserted "in full settlement of all claims against the Government "?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill (S. 4327).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 4327

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized to pay to Lizzie Pittman, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250 for damages to her person by an airplane belonging to the Government.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment striking out "$250" and inserting "$350," which is the same amount as that carried in the committee amendment to the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Hnl of Alabama: In line 5, strike out "$250" and insert in lieu thereof "$350."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOLLISTER: In line 5, after "$350," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 11194) was laid on the table.

FRANCES O. SPERRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2045, for the relief of Frances O. Sperry.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I will be pleased to reserve the objection to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. CELLER. I realize there has been an unfavorable report by the bureau in question here, the Bureau of Mines, but I hope the gentleman will not be solely guided by the troller General says it has not been paid. That is all I report of the department. There are a number of eyewit-have to say about it. I really think it is just.

It would appear that the woman was in a taxicab going north on Thirteenth Street at the intersection of Florida Avenue, and a Bureau of Mines coal truck was going in a directly opposite direction, both the truck and the car reached the intersection at about the same time and the truck took a left turn to go into Florida Avenue, endeavoring to cross in front of the taxicab, the taxicab desiring to proceed directly on its way. There is an ordinance, and there was an ordinance at that time, operative to the effect that automobiles at any intersection when making right or lefthand turns must stop and give right of way to through

The disinterested eyewitness to this accident testified that the truck of the Bureau of Mines failed to abide by this ordinance, gave no signal whatever, and in addition, made a sharp left turn, endeavoring to cut off the taxi without warning; and furthermore in disregard of a stop signal which was also on the corner of Florida Avenue and Thirteenth Street. In addition, the taxi was about to make a hill, there being a very steep incline at this point and the taxi driver naturally had to do everything possible to go up this hill. The truck was coming down the hill so that common caution or common prudence would have dictated to the driver of the truck that he should be extra vigilant of the rights of others at this particular crossing.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but he has only stated what is in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York is a distinguished lawyer and knows that the woman riding in this Diamond taxicab has a primary cause of action against the taxicab company, because the taxicab company is responsible to the woman for safe transportation.

Mr. BACHMANN. In addition to that, they carry proper insurance to protect the people riding in their cabs.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; this company carries large insurance for the protection of its passengers and this woman ought to go into court and sue the company and get her

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to object?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I shall object if the regular order is demanded. I will be glad to listen to the gentleman if the regular order is not demanded, because I have not yet heard anything that clears this up.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Then I object.

Mr. CELLER. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman ought not to do that. He has been explaining his bill for five minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman allow me to explain

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve calling for the regular order for two minutes, to allow the gentleman to explain.

Mr. CELLER. If the gentleman will look at the record he will find that the Bureau of Mines truck was followed by a machine whose occupant testified before the corporation counsel to the effect that the truck made a sharp turn without warning, and he made a remark to the man sitting on the seat with him that he was surprised that there would be no accident if this man continued on the way as fast as

Mr. HOLLISTER. Did the truck run into the cab or the cab into the truck?

Mr. CELLER. The Bureau of Mines truck ran into the taxicab. The left front wheel of the Bureau of Mines truck struck the left wheel of the taxicab.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Texas, who is a good lawyer, he knows that if a person should bring suit against the taxicab company it can be defeated by proving that someone else was to blame for the accident. In a suit brought against the taxicab company, in light of the testimony, it would be useless, because of the negligence of the Bureau of Mines truck.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government was not responsible at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I object.

RUBY F. VOILES

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4154, for the relief of Ruby F. Voiles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object.

MRS. J. A. JOULLIAN

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4854, for the relief of Mrs. J. A. Joullian.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, there ought to be some explanation of this bill. If the author is not present, I object.

WITHYCOMBE POST, NO. 11, AMERICAN LEGION, CORVALLIS, OREG.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar. H. R. 5214, for the relief of Withycombe Post, No. 11, American Legion, Corvallis, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $957.78 to the Withycombe Post, No. 11, American Legion, of Corvallis, Oreg.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JACOB DURRENBERGER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6759) for the relief of Jacob Durrenberger.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. HOLLISTER. I object.

RELIEF OF JERSEY CITY, ETC.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7324) for the relief of the mayor and aldermen of Jersey City, Hudson County, N. J., a municipal corporation. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton] desires to make some remarks in respect to the bill, I shall reserve the objection for five minutes. Of course, we can not let this bill pass. It seeks to appropriate the huge sum of $62,340.65, but I think that the gentlewoman from New Jersey should be permitted to make an explanation of the bill; but when she has done that I shall object, for this $62,340.65 should not be taken out of the Treasury, as I am convinced that the claim is not just.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to hear the gentleman say that the bill can not pass, because it is a very just claim and should have been settled many years ago. Under date of February 20, 1908, the Erie Railroad Co. entered into an agreement with Jersey City for a water supply for a period of 25 years. The rate to be charged by the city and paid by the Erie Railroad Co. under said agreement was 60 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. Embodied

There was also a bystander on the corner who testified to in said agreement, and made part thereof, was the following article:

> If at any time during the term of this agreement the city shall furnish water to any person or corporation for use in the city of Jersey City on more favorable terms or at a lower rate than herein provided, the Erie Co. shall have the benefit of such terms or rate, provided that this clause shall not apply to rates on water furnished for city or county purposes or to charitable corporations.

> Under date of November 10, 1909, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. entered into an agreement for a water supply for a period of 25 years. The water furnished under this agreement was to be delivered to the railroad company pipe lines at Secaucus, N. J., and such water was to be used only by the railroad company at its Secaucus terminal in Secaucus, N. J., and its terminal in the city of Hoboken, N. J. The rate to be charged and paid by the railroad company was 45 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. And this claim is based upon the difference between 45 cents and 60 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

> I think I may say that the committee unanimously agreed that the claim is a proper one. The only question that seemed to arise in the mind of anybody was why we did not press this claim sooner.

> Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman vield?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. It seems that the claim was never presented under the act passed permitting those claims to be presented within a certain definite period under legislation already enacted. Why did not the city of Jersey City present its claim before it was barred by the act that was

Mrs. NORTON. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. It was impossible for the city to submit a bill for a sum certain on account of water supplied to the Erie Railroad Co. during the period of Federal control. Obviously the amount was not liquidated until the settlement between the city and the railroad company, which was made in the year 1928, six years after the time set for the presentation of all claims against the Railroad Administration. If the Erie Railroad Co. was right in the litigation that was started between itself and the city and had only to pay the 45-cent rate, then the United States of America would owe the city nothing for water furnished to the railroad company during the period of Federal control. On the other hand, if the city was right, and the higher rate prevailed, as indeed it did and should have prevailed, then the United States Government would owe the city and does owe the city the amount of money set forth, representing the difference between the 45-cent rate paid and the 60-cent rate as set out in the original contract, which should have been paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is it that in the contract which Jersey City entered into with the Erie Railroad it did not mention this claim. It mentions no claim whatever against the United States. Here is the complete contract in the report dated June 30, 1928. It provides for water rates but in no way mentions any claim against the Government.

Mrs. NORTON. The reason for that is that the claim had not been settled. It was a matter that was in litigation at the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly in a contract with each other on that date, June 30, 1928, if there had been any claim against the Government based on transactions in 1917 and 1918, it would have been mentioned in that contract.

Mrs. NORTON. In view of the pending litigation and until such litigation had been concluded, whether or not a claim against the United States of America or the railroad company actually existed, we could not possibly have put in a claim because of the pending litigation and until such litigation had been concluded, whether or not a claim against the United States or the Railroad Administration actually existed.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it ought to have been mentioned in this long contract that provided for all other matters, of date as late as June 30, 1928. I am compelled to object, as this bill would take the huge sum of $62,340.65 out of the Treasury.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does not the gentleman think that if there is any merit in this claim at all it ought to first go to the Comptroller General of the United States, to find out what is involved in it?

Mr. BLANTON. It was introduced at first for $96,629.45. It has been reduced to $62,340.65. In no report from any Government department is there any evidence of probative force and effect to establish this as a just claim against the Government.

Mr. BACHMANN. You can not tell from looking at this what is involved in the claim.

Mr. BLANTON. No. And I must object, Mr. Speaker. This bill must not be passed.

K. S. SZYMANSKI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8189, for the relief of K. S. Szymanski.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE, EL DORADO, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8215, for the relief of the National Bank of Commerce, El Dorado, Ark.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, if I had known that this postmaster was such a wholesale crook and that he had been perpetrating this practice on so many banks in the neighborhood where he had his post office, I would have objected to the first bill under consideration. Will the gentleman who is the author of the bill advise whether the two bills previously passed have been recommended by the Senate committee?

Mr. PARKS. I have just been told that the Senate committee had recommended both of them for passage. The very fact that he had done a wholesale business and the Government permitted it to go on for months and months, is the reason I thought the claim should be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. The argument that the gentleman advanced did not appeal to me, for this reason: From my personal experience with the operation of the Government in the inspection of these offices, it is usually a year sometimes before they are examined. I feel almost constrained to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PARKS. I hope the gentleman will not object. Permit me to say this to the gentleman, that I know he would not do anybody an injustice willfully. These bills I went into very carefully for a long time. It is the only private bill I have ever offered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that does not affect me at all.

Mr. PARKS. Oh, yes; I think it will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at all.

Mr. PARKS. I really believe the gentleman will agree that the equities are with these people, and they ought not be denied this relief.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only withdrew the objection on the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bachmann].

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman discuss it on the merits first? The objection of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] is on the merits.

Mr. STAFFORD. My fundamental objection is that the bank was put on notice that the issuance of these money orders was out, of course. They were drawn on a bank. That was not in the regular order of business. The bank might have known that they were not in regular course.

Mr. BACHMANN. You can not take a money order and tell on its face whether it has been regularly issued or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes. When a postmaster draws a money order on a bank, as these were drawn, it was a patent fraud. The reason I withdrew my objection in the other case was that the amount was small and the gentleman stated there were other money orders that were deposited payable to patrons in general, but when these amounts run into thousands of dollars, the bank must have known.

Mr. BACHMANN. Do not people all over the United States recognize a money order as being negotiable, and that the United States Government stands back of it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not when the money order is drawn on the bank itself. The bank should have known that the money order was for the purpose of deposit.

Mr. KVALE. Most people do not think of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, most people do not think of that, but banks should.

Mr. PARKS. There were millions and millions of dollars being handled at that time, because it was one of the greatest oil fields that had come in in the United States. These banks were handling millions of dollars, and they were undertaking to protect themselves against bad checks. This man was a little merchant who lived 20 miles from there and he issued these money orders to various people who were neighbors there. They thought that was a means of protecting themselves. There was not anything on earth irregular about it. This was not simply a neighborhood transaction.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdrew the objection before. I will enter a provisional objection now for the benefit of those who succeed me, that if these bills pass the Senate and are vetoed by the President, there will be someone here next Congress, I hope, to object to them.

I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,904.16 to the National Bank of Commerce, El Dorado, Ark., in full settlement against the Government, for money that was paid to Joe F. Tullis, who was postmaster at Upland, Union County, Ark., on post-office money orders deposited in said National Bank of Commerce at different times and for different amounts, aggregating $3,904.16, which money orders were cashed by said bank, and which had been fraudulently issued by the postmaster without the knowledge of said bank that they were fraudulent. All of said money orders were paid by the Government and the money was subsequently refunded by said bank.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, EL DORADO, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8217, for the relief of the First National Bank, El Dorado, Ark.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Parks] a question. This is the second bill we have had here to-night for the Government to make good forged money orders.

Mr. PARKS. Oh, no; not forged.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, fraudulent. Practically the same

Mr. PARKS. No. There is quite a difference.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, when a postmaster issues a money order without authority of law it is, in effect, a forgery on the Government.

Mr. PARKS. No; the gentleman is wrong on that. I looked into the legal status of that very carefully.

Mr. BLANTON. What I want to know is what has been done with this postmaster who has been stealing from the Government?

Mr. PARKS. There was only one, and they sent him to the penitentiary for a year. He only had a $1,000 bond, and they collected it.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government collected $1,000 in this

Mr. PARKS. The Government collected $1,000 on his bond for the whole thing. I do not know on which particular case it was. Both these cases grow out of the derelictions of the same postmaster.

Mr. BLANTON. The same thing.

Mr. PARKS. And he went to the penitentiary for a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Was he pardoned out?

Mr. PARKS. No; he served his time. This was a Federal offense which they do not pardon like they do State offenses.

Mr. BLANTON. The next one should be sentenced to 10 years.

Mr. PARKS. That is what should have been done with this one.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $720.13, to the First National Bank, El Dorado, Ark., in full settlement against the Government for money that was paid to Joe F. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Is this the last bill growing out of this matter?

Mr. PARKS. It is the last bill; and I think it is the last private bill I will ever introduce.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is the last of these postmasters' bills?

Mr. PARKS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not going out, is he?

Mr. PARKS. I do not know; I can not tell.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INGENIO PORVENIR C. POR A.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9339, authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Ingenio Porvenir C. por A., and to render judgment for just compensation.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OSCAR F. LACKEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9862, for the relief of the estate of Oscar F. Lackey.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there ought to be a supplemental report in this case. Mr. MILLER. Here is the supplementary report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Lackey Combs, of Riderwood, Md., as executrix of the estate of Oscar F. Lackey, deceased, the sum of $1,500, representing the amount appropriated for said Oscar F. Lackey as compensation by the act approved February 18, 1913 (37 Stat. 1372), for injuries received by him on November 11, 1905, while employed as assistant engineer in construction 21, 1905, while employed as assistant engineer in construction of the Panama Canal, which amount was not claimed by or paid to him during his lifetime. Such payment to said Mary Lackey Combs, as executrix, shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States of the estate of said Oscar F. Lackey for such injuries received by him.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, page 1, line 3, down to and including line 6, on page 2, and insert the following:

"That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the claim of Mary Lackey Combs, of Riderwood, Md., as executrix of the estate of Oscar F. Lackey, deceased, for $1,500 and to allow said claim under the appropriation made by the act of February 18, 1913 (37 Stat. 1372), for payment to the deceased for injuries received on November 21, 1905, while in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission as assistant engineer in the construction of the Panama Canal, he having died without receiving said amount: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact. collect. withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000." not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to this claim. It is of many years' standing, in fact, dating back to 1905. The Government is not protected against interest on this old claim for that length of time. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he knows whether or not interest could be collected if there is no further provision put in this bill preventing it.

Mr. BLANTON. There ought to be a provision stating that this amount is in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States. That would cut off everything.

Mr. BACHMANN. As I read the bill it is not in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States. Some of these days some one will introduce another bill to collect interest, we having recognized the claim.

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest the gentleman offer that amendment.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think it ought to be made in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is in there on page 2.

Mr. BACHMANN. I must confess I do not see it in the

Mr. MILLER. It is in the committee amendment.

Mr. BACHMANN. The committee amendment does not cure the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. The words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States" are not in there. I suggest that the gentleman offer that amendment.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bachmann to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 10, after "$1,500," insert the following: "Provided, That such payment to said Mary Lackey Combs, as executrix, shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States of the estate of said Oscar F. Lackey, for such injury received by him," and after the word "Provided," in line 16, insert the word "further."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, my attention was called to another bill when Calendar No. 778, which I reported upon, was called, and I did not hear it. I ask unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Government report in that case was that the driver of the truck was not in fault in any way.

Mr. BRUMM. I admit that.

Mr. BLANTON. He was not driving the truck over 15 miles an hour. A woman with little children started across the street, and he swung out to keep from hitting them. This man stepped off the sidewalk, made several false starts, and finally got struck and his leg was injured. This bill seeks to pay him $5,000, which is the full amount we pay for death claims.

Mr. BRUMM. I am not talking about the amount. The gentleman has made a complete case which would stand in any court in Christendom.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it.

Mr. BRUMM. I do not agree with the gentleman. It is an old, well-established principle of the common law that where two parties are negligent and a third party is injured, the one who commits the tort is, constructively, negligent. This man should recover in any court in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. In the case of the Texas & Pacific Railway Co. against Harris, which went to the Supreme Court of Texas, and lots of decisions from other States, they held that where a man deliberately walked into danger and got struck, the corporation is not responsible.

Mr. BRUMM. But that is not this case. I think it clearly just the opposite.

Mr. BLANTON. The man stepped off the sidewalk when this truck was turning to the right of this woman and child to avoid killing them.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman let me state the facts? Mr. BLANTON. I am stating the Government facts to the gentleman. The department says that the Government was in no way to blame.

Mr. BRUMM. I am giving the gentleman the facts as I have learned them.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to going back, Mr. Speaker. If my friend wants to make a statement, that is perfectly all right, but I am going to object.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to get the statement on the record. Here was a mail truck driving down the street, in the middle of the street, and a man was about to leave the curb. He was in perfect safety if the truck had continued on its course, but at that minute a woman with a baby appeared in the middle of the street in front of the truck and to save the life of the baby and the woman he turned deliberately into the course of this man who was in his proper place at a crossing. This is constructive negligence and there can be recovery, I maintain, in any court in Christendom, if such facts are made out.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is what the department says:

A clerk, W. C. Miller, of Carson Station, had been sent with the truck and was riding on the seat with Subcarrier Wolfe, and he witnessed the entire occurrence. He stated that the driver made every effort to avoid striking either the woman and child or the man.

Mr. BRUMM. He jammed on the brakes.

Mr. BLANTON. He did everything he could to avoid an accident.

Mr. BRUMM. Sure; but that is constructive negligence and the innocent party was hurt.

Mr. BLANTON. The man hurt had made three false starts, and it was his own indecision and bad judgment that caused him to be hurt.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman would have made two or three or a dozen if he thought a truck was going to run over him. What-has that to do with the proposition?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADELPHIA BANK & TRUST CO. OF PHILADELPHIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10169, authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Adelphia Bank & Trust Co. of Philadelphia.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Adelphia Bank & Trust Co. of Philadelphia for refund of a fee of 1 per cent collected by the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on $85,000, the face value of securities temporarily deposited by said company with the clerk pending the filing of an increased surety bond required by the court from the bank as depository of funds in bankruptcy estates, said fee having been covered into the general fund, Treasury of the United States, as a miscellaneous receipt, and to allow said claim in an amount not to exceed $850. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $850, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of this claim.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 9, on page 2, insert the following: "such sum to be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10406, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

Mr. EATON of Colorado and Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to have about two minutes, Mr. Speaker. This bill was introduced by my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Sullivan, who is unable to be here.

I have given the claims some attention, and I believe this bill and the two following are bills that are just claims. The Allegheny Forging Co., a reputable industrial enterprise, had the right to expect that the War Department would deal with it on an ethical and proper basis. I do not believe this was done.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not my friend furnish a report from the War Department?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am sorry, but I did not have anything to do with a report from the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to be understood that before private bills are passed here on this floor under unanimous consent there must be a report from the department, either allowing it or turning it down.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Brumm, I believe, made the report, and I am sure went into this claim very carefully.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice several reports here made by our friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Brumm] that do not contain reports from the department. We can pass on these matters much better if we have reports from the department involved.

Mr. BRUMM. In these cases, from the very nature of things, they can not be reported on by the department without acknowledging their own error.

Mr. BLANTON. But we want a report from the department, and as long as I am a Member of Congress these bills are not going to pass unless there is such a report.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of having a report from the department in these cases?

Mr. PITTENGER. I think my colleague is correct, and that there ought to be such a report.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. PITTENGER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this case. The gentleman told me he would not be here to-night.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I did not; and the gentleman knows I did not. I told the gentleman I was going to be here. The gentleman said he hoped I would not be here, but I told him he had another hope coming to him and that I would be here. I am always here every time we have a call of the Private Calendar, and all other calendars.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman is quite correct. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], a member of the committee, has a copy of the report that my colleague would like to know about.

Mr. BLANTON. And it turns the claim down, does it not? Does the report turn the claim down or approve it?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will tell him.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it turn it down?

Mr. MILLER. I have just got it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know anything more about it, then, than I do?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will yield, I think I can explain it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yielded for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a statement. If the gentleman is not going to be permitted to make a statement, I am going to object.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to make one statement only. I believe this committee ought to recognize the fact that the War Department and other departments of the Government should be compelled to follow the business practices that are followed by reputable business enterprises in the United States. They sent out an offer to the Allegheny Forging Co. to sell certain steel, and the Allegheny Forging Co. accepted the offer and sent a 10 per cent check.

It specified gross tons and the check was sent in on that basis. Then the department insisted that net tons were meant.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the departments of the Government were to approve all of the private bills introduced in Congress, you could not collect enough money in taxes from the people to pay them all.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is not the question here. What I have said applies to the two following bills.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. There is no report here from the department as to what the facts are.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. The clerk of the committee advises me that he has just received these reports from the War Department. The War Department does not recommend the passage of the bill. The War Department says that the steel was delivered at the stipulated price, and the War Department is not aware of any change that was made, and the department decides that the claim is not a valid one.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There are two references in the record where gross tons were specified.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

THE ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 10407, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And I object also for the same reason that I gave in the former bill.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 10408, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object.

AUGUSTA BURKETT

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 10621, for the relief of Augusta Burkett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. KLEBERG. I want to say that this does not cost the Government any money, it simply waives the limitation of the workmen's compensation act. All this poor woman had was her husband, and she was deprived of this good man by an accident while in the performance of his duty.

The fact is that, in the limited time which occurred between the accident and the passage of the compensation act on September 29, 1916, and the accident occurred September 7, 1915, a few days over a year from the passage of the act, she had no information concerning it. All in the world this bill asks is to permit a waiver of the limitation.

Mr. KLEBERG. I hope this will be the exception.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman can talk all night if he wants to, but there are men here who have not let a bill of this kind pass in this Congress. They have objected to two similar bills of mine, and they will not let a bill pass where an accident occurred prior to the date of the passage of the employees' compensation act. It is useless to try to make them do it.

Mr. KLEBERG. I hope this will be the exception.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. HOPE. I object.

AUGUSTUS THOMPSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10973) for the relief of Augustus Thompson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. This is the case of a former member of the Capitol police. He fell on the steps over here and was severely injured. There is medical testimony as to the extent of the injury and there is a report of the Capitol police as to the occurrence.

Mr. BACHMANN. In going over this bill I saw that he was a member of the police force, and I wanted to be sure whether there was any moral obligation on the part of the Government to pay this claimant $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, this is not a death claim. It ought to be cut down very materially, at least to $1,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. I had that in mind, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, and there is another thing connected with the claim. You can go all through this report, and you can not find any eyewitness to this accident. You can not find anybody who investigated it. There is nothing but the statement of the officer himself that he fell on the steps.

Mr. BLANTON. And one doctor happened to see him on one day when he went to the hospital.

Mr. BLACK. I think in view of the lack of overwhelming evidence in favor of this man the claim should be cut down. I am willing to cut the claim down.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman willing to agree to cut it down to $1,000?

Mr. BACHMANN. I still think that is too much without further evidence.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course if the man was hurt under the circumstances that he details, the Government ought to pay him about $1,000. If he was not hurt in that way, the Government does not owe him one cent.

Mr. BLACK. Here is the report from the Capitol police:

United States Capitol Police, Washington, D. C., April 14, 1932.

Hon. Loring Black, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In line with your request of this date, we are pleased to advise that the daily report sheet for the Capitol police department (House Office Building) for Thursday, February 27, 1930, carries the following statement:

"A. Thompson fell down steps leading from second floor to first Injured leg."

floor. Injured leg."
We trust the above information from the records will meet with We trust the analysis your approval.

Very respectfully yours,

P. H. Crook, Lieutenant in Charge.

Mr. BACHMANN. There it is, just an injured leg. It does not say that the leg was broken. It does not say what was wrong with the steps. Thousands of people go down those steps in the course of a year.

Mr. BLACK. The medical testimony schedules all of the injuries.

Mr. BACHMANN. The man had a hernia. That was not caused by his fall on those steps, at least there is nothing in the report to show that it was. He had nephritis, and that surely was not caused by the fall on the steps.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman can probably rightfully question items 2 and 3, but there is a fracture caused by a fall in the Capitol Building on February 27, 1930.

Mr. BLANTON. This man claims that he was taken to police headquarters. Surely he ought to produce some proof from some policeman about the transaction.

Mr. BACHMANN. There is no evidence here of anyone who picked him up, no evidence that a policeman was there. And you can not tell from this claim whether there was or not. You can not tell whether or not the Government has any responsibility or not. It may be that the Government is responsible. If it is, and somebody can prove that responsibility, I am willing to let the claim go through.

Mr. BLACK. I know how the gentleman feels about these things. One gentleman the other night said something about the fact that we did not have a cross-examination of a witness. We can not have a trial. We do the best that we can. For that reason I am willing to cut down this

Mr. BLANTON. There ought to be a cross-examination. Mr. BACHMANN. If the hospital report would show that he was confined in the hospital for seven months on account of a broken leg, I might take a different view of the case; but this man has other disabilities, permanent disabilities. How can we tell? Unless there is an agreement for an amendment reducing this to $1,500 I would be compelled to object.

Mr. BLACK. I will agree to the $1,500.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the House to Augustus Thompson, a former member of the House Office Building police force, the sum of $5,000 in full payment on account of personal injuries sustained by said Augustus Thompson in the House Office Building on February 27, 1930, while in the discharge of duty.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6 on page 1, strike out the word "payment" and insert in lieu thereof "settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States": in line 9, after the word "duty," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman offers the amendment, I have just received a report that this man served for 30 years on the metropolitan police force, and he was retired on account of disability, and retired pay of one-half his salary is now being paid. That report has just been sent

Mr. BACHMANN. That is prior to this trouble?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; he was retired for disability before the accident.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then if he is retired he is receiving a pension to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. So that amendment should be not over $1,000 at most.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On line 5, after the word "of," strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Amendment by Mr. Bachmann: On page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Heretofore when agreements like this have been made they have generally been kept. It may be that between the time of the agreement and the action on the bill additional information may come to either side. Heretofore I have kept all agreements as far as the committee was concerned. I am rather hoping the gentleman from West Virginia will see fit to keep the arrangement that was

Mr. BACHMANN. Let us be fair as to what happened. I had intended to offer an amendment reducing the amount to $1,500, but when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] called attention to the fact that this man is now receiving pay as a retired member of the Washington police force, and with no substantial evidence here, if I had not entered into the agreement, I would have objected to the passage of

Mr. BLANTON. This man served 30 years on the Metropolitan police force and was retired on half pay on account of disability before the accident.

Mr. BACHMANN. I am willing to offer an amendment making it $1,000. If the gentleman does not want that, let us let the House vote on it.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, I make no point of it.

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not want to have it said that I am not keeping any agreements here. The gentleman from Texas produced additional evidence which, if I had had it before, I would not have permitted the bill to pass at all.

Mr. BLACK. I am not charging that, but I do hope that hereafter we will not produce additional evidence on either

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANKLIN SURETY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11095, for the relief of the Franklin Surety Co.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have considerable doubt about this bill. I do not think this bill ought to pass unless some Member can make some explanation of it. The amount of this claim is $11,725, and it is too large to pass here on the Private Calendar, without more evidence than is contained in this committee report.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman ought to object

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I will be glad to reserve the objection. Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing more about this matter than is included in the report offered by the gentleman from Indiana, who is not present this evening, but it seems to me when a report is submitted to Congress by the Comptroller General of the United States, as complete in its nature as this report is, with the information it contains, it is very persuasive, and I do not see what additional facts are to be offered aside from what he states regarding the additional work that was done by this contractor who steps in after defalcation. In the fourth paragraph of the original report it is stated:

Of the net amount of $20,861.23 thus claimed by the Franklin Surety Co. there was allowed by settlement of this office, dated February 12, 1931, the sum of $675.45 as the net value of items involving changes in the specifications and extra work duly ordered by the contracting officer.

Then he states in next to the last paragraph:

The amounts claimed for the other items and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury do not appear to be in excess of the reasonable value to the Government of the extra work involved, and, accordingly, it is recommended that an appropriation be made for payment of the claim for $20,861.23 as reduced by the amount of the two items mentioned, aggregating $8,460.07, and by the amount of $675.45 allowed by settlement of February 12, 1931, or in the net amount of $11,725.71.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman tell the House how much of the liquidated damages this company owed the Government, amounting to $24,600, they paid to the Government of the United States?

Mr. KVALE. I know nothing, except I understand the insurance company has already taken a rap for $50,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. If they have taken a rap for $100,000, they collected a premium from these people when they went security for them. They owe the Government $24,600 in liquidated damages. There is no place in this report showing that they paid that amount of money, if they owed $24,600, and now they come in and ask the Government to pay $11,600 more. That is $35,000 they are taking away from the Government of the United States.

Mr. KVALE. I do not question his sincerity, but it seems to me in view of the statements made in the report of the Comptroller General, which is complete—the gentleman will admit that.

Mr. BACHMANN. So far as the extras are concerned, yes; but I am talking about the justice of this claim. The gentleman must consider that the insurance company or the bonding company collects a premium when they go security for these contractors, and there is an amount of $24,600 called liquidated damages. If we are going to relieve the bonding company from paying $24,600, surely I am not going to vote to pay them $11,000 more.

Mr. KVALE. I yield to the gentleman who introduced the bill. I see he is on the floor. Perhaps he can satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. This bill came from the Speaker's office to myself as chairman of the committee. The bill was drawn by the Comptroller General; and as is the case with bills coming to the chairman of the committee through the Speaker, we generally accept it the way the department offers it. The Comptroller General has not disposed of that $24,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. I think it ought to be in the report.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the gentleman we ought to get a further report on it.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROBERT D. BALDWIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11902, for the relief of Robert D. Baldwin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Robert D. Baldwin, superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Haskell Institute, at Lawrence, Kans., for an expenditure of $1,359.26 made in October, 1931, and paid from the appropriation for Indian boarding schools, fiscal year 1932.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HARRIET C. HOLADAY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 287, to compensate Harriet C. Holaday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALICE M. A. DAMM

The Clerk call the next bill, S. 631, for the relief of Alice M. A. Damm.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NICK WAGNER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3440, for the relief of Nick Wagner.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I withhold it.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman state the ground of his objections? I think I may be able to answer them.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This was the case of a man who claims injury from tripping over a mat on the front steps of a post office. There are no eyewitnesses. For a long time there was no statement to the postmaster in connection with the accident. It was two weeks or more after the accident occurred before it was brought to anyone's attention. I fail to see where there is a shadow of a claim against the Government in this case.

Mr. LEAVITT. The situation is that the mat, of course, is always on the top step. In some way it had been pushed out over the edge and this man, who was in Miles City, is a citizen of a smaller town further east in the State, was in Miles City for treatment of a goiter. Going up the step he mistook the edge of the mat which had been kicked out from the top of the step and it gave way, with the result that he fell and struck his shoulder, resulting in the complete loss of the use of his arm.

The facts, I think, are very definitely established in the evidence. I notice in the report that was made by the Senate committee, affidavits from people with whom I am well acquainted as to these facts, and I think there is no doubt but what that was the situation. This man testifies that he is completely disabled so far as his arm is concerned.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There are two things I would like the gentleman to answer. In the first place, I realize the gentleman probably knows the individuals who made these affidavits, but there is no evidence of any eyewitness of the accident whatsoever, and the affidavits are with respect to what the party injured told the various affiants after the accident had occurred to him.

Mr. LEAVITT. They go to the injury; and the evidence, of course, is of those who saw him immediately after the accident. I do not know that anybody saw him fall.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Is there any evidence as to how long this mat had remained in this dangerous condition?

Mr. LEAVITT. No; of course not. It was in that position when he stepped on it. That is what the evidence shows.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The mat was misplaced at the time he was injured, and must have been. If this were the case of a private corporation or individual, would there be liability on the private individual unless the dangerous condition had existed long enough to put them on notice or to give constructive notice of the dangerous condition?

Mr. LEAVITT. In this case the responsibility is upon the Government to have it safe at all times, this being a public place. I realize, of course, there is nobody personally responsible in the Government for not having it pushed back into place.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If it were against a private individual, do you think this evidence would be sufficient to hold him liable?

Mr. LEAVITT. I think so.

Mr. HOLLISTER. In the absence of any evidence as to how long this dangerous situation had existed?

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, I can not tell anything about that at all, except we do know that it was in this dangerous condition long enough to injure this man permanently.

Mr. HOLLISTER. In view of the matters set forth in the report and under the circumstances of the case, I am very much afraid I shall have to object.

Mr. LEAVITT. I am very sorry. I think this is a meri-

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILL

The Clerk called the next bill. H. R. 12124, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GASQUE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. GASQUE. I want to say to the gentleman that this is the omnibus pension bill that was vetoed by the President of the United States last year on account of objection to certain items in the bill. I took this matter up with the President himself and he suggested that he would like to have the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs pass on these bills. I then took the matter up with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and had him send the Director of Pensions, Mr. Morgan, down to my office to go over each of these items separately with a subcommittee of the Committee on Pensions, and every item in the bill now has been agreed to by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

I want to say also that I have a letter from him to this effect, after asking him for his opinion on the bill, which I would like to read, as it is very short:

My Dear Mr. Gasque: This will supplement my letter of October 31, 1932, in reply to your letter of October 17, 1932, requesting a report on omnibus bill (H. R. 12124), which bill is now on the House Calendar, showing the items contained therein which has met with the approval of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. As you know, a representative of the Veterans' Administration appeared before the Committee on Pensions to go over the items in H. R. 12124, and he has informed me that the objectionable items of the bill were eliminated; therefore no objection will he in H. R. 12124, and he has informed me that the objectionable items of the bill were eliminated; therefore, no objection will be interposed by the Veterans' Administration to favorable action on this proposed legislation. You are advised that I have received a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, dated December 5, 1932, in which he states that in so far as the financial program of the President is concerned, there is no objection to my submitting a favorable report upon the bill, H. R. 12124.

A copy of this letter is enclosed for your use.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have a number of bills under consideration and I just pick out at random one of the private bills as incorporated in this omnibus bill, and what are the facts:

H. R. 590. Zenobia Blanche Sniffen * * *. The widow is 64 years of age and was married to the general on June 26, 1909. She owns property valued at approximately $25,000 and has an income of $1,200 per year and a pension of $30

It is proposed to increase her pension to $50 a month. I could go through this bill and cite other instances in this way, and yet the gentleman is asking me in these times, when we are trying to keep down expenses, to grant to these persons the bounty of the Government when they already have ample funds.

I object.

Mr. GASQUE. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman let me finish putting this letter in the RECORD? The gentleman has not stated all the facts in this case. While she owns property valued at $25,000, this property is obligated for a debt of that amount or more.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can put the letter in

Mr. GASQUE. And I would be glad to explain that particular bill to the gentleman if I had the opportunity.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are a number of others of the same kind

Mr. BACHMANN. How much is involved in this bill?

Mr. GASQUE. Sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. PATTERSON. And it is the usual omnibus pension bill that is passed year after year.

Mr. GASQUE. The bill carries $65,000, and takes care of 380 items which represent bills introduced by 197 Members of Congress.

Mr. BACHMANN. How does the bill get on the Private Calendar?

Mr. GASQUE. That is the only calendar that it can be placed on. There is not a bill here that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs has not approved and which we believe the President is not in favor of.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GASQUE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I have bills in this omnibus pension bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have, too. Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there is no chance for this bill to become a law. I have two or more bills in this omnibus bill. I have no objection to the committee reporting meritorious bills granting a small pension where due to some slight technicality the bureau could not recognize the claimant. However, I have concluded that we should no longer follow the policy of increasing pensions by special act as we have in the past. To give relief to a few who happen to learn that an appeal to a Congressman might secure an increase is not fair to the others. I hope that in the next Congress we will prohibit increases being granted by special act.

I know how careful my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. Gasque] has been with this work, and he has only followed an established policy of many years' standing. It is a bad policy, however, to grant increases by special act, and I hope it will be discontinued.

Mr. GASQUE. If that is the opinion of the gentleman of Missouri, he should not have introduced that kind of

There are very few increases of pensions. Most of the bills are original pensions, and they are all bills that have been approved by the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Veterans' Administration has approved a number of claims, and the Military Affairs Committee has called them to account for approving claims paying out the money of the Government in unjustifiable instances.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GASQUE. The President himself has said that this is the course that should be followed, and I will let the gentleman take the responsibility and let the responsibility rest on his shoulders.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will take the full responsibility.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GASQUE. Then let the gentleman from Wisconsin take the responsibility of withholding benefits from these widows and orphans and veterans, the benefits which have been given to other widows, orphans, and soldiers for the past hundred or more years.

FRANK J. BOUDINGT

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6393, for the relief of Frank J. Boudinot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I reserve the right to object. Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think I should say, in view of the favorable report of the committee, that this claimant is a member of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, born and reared in the Indian Territory among the Cherokees.

He has devoted his entire life to the services of the Cherokee Indians. Now, he has been here practically all of his life and is perhaps 65 years of age or more, and the gentleman from Colorado will remember that for years they had no Representatives in Congress.

It was a part of the Indian Territory. This man F. J. Boudinot represents the Cherokee Tribe and has kept alive for years and pressed these claims against the Government.

In 1924 a jurisdictional bill was passed allowing suit to be brought in the Court of Claims, and the Cherokees would be permitted to pay attorneys from that time on for their services.

I will say that from my own personal knowledge this man for 20 years or more prior to that time has been attending Congress in an effort to get some proper jurisdictional bill passed so that these claims of the Cherokee Tribe might be presented.

The Indians themselves whom he represents have met and passed resolutions and forwarded these resolutions to me urging this additional compensation, and based on that and with that authority and at their request I introduced this bill.

They have some claims pending, but how much they will recover or what, if any, judgment they will get, I do not know. But they feel, in justice to F. J. Boudinot, who has spent his entire life keeping these claims alive and in an effort to get a jurisdictional act passed to refer them to the Court of Claims, that he ought to receive some compensation for his services in this representation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. How much does the gentleman say is involved here?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know how much is involved; they have claims in the Court of Claims, and it is problematical as to the amount they may recover; but inasmuch as this man has given 30 or 40 years of his life and finally succeeded in getting a jurisdictional bill enacted, they think that he ought to have some additional compensation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. How much money is involved? Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know how much. These claims involve an accounting with the Government.

Mr. LEAVITT. If the gentleman will yield, this case was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I recall it well, for it has been before us some time. It was considered by the committee to be one of the most just cases of the kind ever brought before us.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that if he will read these books that I have here, the United States Reports, and if he will look at the litigation where they claim $700,000, provided for in the last five lines, he would not vote for this bill. If gentlemen will go into the Court of Claims and go over the files of the department, they would not vote for this claim.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not need to speak in defense of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Hastings].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado is mistaken.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am not mistaken. I examined the files myself. Nobody in connection with the Indian Affairs Committee or at any other place would tell me how much was involved; and when I found out that the amount provided for is 5 per cent of over $4,000,000, then I began to look about some.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, that claim was the eastern Cherokee claim that was adjudicated in 1905. This claim for services has nothing whatever to do with it. This bill has nothing whatever to do with any of the suits referred to in those books before the gentleman. I am thoroughly familiar with all of the suits the gentleman has before him, but let me say to him that this bill would not give Boudinot a single penny because of any of those old judgments.

The Cherokees have filed under the jurisdictional act of March 19, 1924, which Boudinot, by his efforts in going back and forth for 10 or 15 years, finally succeeded in getting passed by Congress, when they had no Member of Congress to represent them, when they had no Senator, when they were political orphans, when they were a tribe which was a part of the Indian Territory. This man has kept these claims alive, and he has come backward and forward to Washington for a lifetime. Now he is around 65 years of age, and these Indians whom he serves have passed resolutions asking that he be given this additional compensation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. These reports show how he has tried to collect these funds from the Indians and has been denied, how he has tried to collect them from the United States, and has been denied. Away back in 1910—

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, if the gentleman is going to make that sort of argument, well and good. This bill is to give him compensation since then and before March 19, 1924. I am a member of that tribe myself, I have lived among them always, I am one of the beneficiaries, I know more about the affairs of the Cherokee Tribe certainly than does the gentleman from Colorado. If the gentleman wants to object, let him do so on his own responsibility, but I repeat that he is mistaken about it. Not a dollar would be charged to the Treasury but would be deducted from any judgment that may be rendered the Indians who ask for this legislation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. On my own responsibility and by the facts set out in the United States Supreme Court reports, I object.

ROBERT WHITLEY MILLER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3801) for the relief of Robert Whitley Miller.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Certainly.

Mr. KVALE. While the author of the bill is not present, and while the gracious lady who made the report is not present, yet I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which heard this testimony. The committee conducted a rather complete hearing. I can subscribe to every recommendation that the report contains. I feel very keenly that here is a fine young man who has been penalized by circumstances over which he had no control. The report sets forth the information completely.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The report shows that he was retired.

Mr. KVALE. Right.

Mr. GRISWOLD. That thereafter a special act of Congress was passed, and that he was brought before a retiring board and again retired.

Mr. KVALE. Oh, the gentleman himself is a veteran; he has had dealings with veterans; he has conducted affairs of veterans before governmental departments; and he knows that in conditions of this kind, in physical and mental complications of this sort, these conditions do not arise for years, and it is not possible to correctly diagnose them for long periods of time.

The subsequent events clearly show that this man in 1925, at the time he originally separated himself from the service, if he had had full control of himself mentally, would have protected his own rights, and he would have been in a position to secure medical treatment and to have continued in the service and take his place again on the active rolls as others have done.

Mr. GRISWOLD. But the gentleman does not take into consideration the fact that after being retired a special act was passed that brought him before a retiring board again, and he was again retired. Now he comes to Congress a second time to have Congress do the same thing over. It is an everlasting proposition of coming before the Congress with a bill to take him before a retiring board to have him retired.

Mr. KVALE. The second retirement examination shows a discrepancy, and it is on the basis of the injustice shown by those two conflicting reports that we ask now that justice be done this man. He has already been penalized. If this bill passes, justice will not be done him.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If the statement of Mr. Carter in the record—the only statement I see—be true in regard to the man's condition, then he should not be retired at all. He should be restored to active duty.

Mr KVALE. He is not yet in full possession of his health. He needs a long period of treatment yet.

Mr. GRISWOLD. All of those facts were before the second retirement board.

Mr. KVALE. I feel this bill has merit. The lady who wrote this report has set it forth in clear language, and the Committee on Military Affairs feels that this officer should not have been subject to the chain of circumstances which conspired to penalize him for a condition over which | he had no control and to penalize him further for the act of separating himself from the service at a time when he did not know exactly what was involved. I hope the gentleman can withdraw his objection to this bill and permit it to be written into law.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I regret as much as the gentleman does the unfortunate affliction of this man, but he has had ample opportunity, and it is just a continuation of passing bills on his behalf, and I must object.

CARL L. BERNAU

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4045, for the relief of Carl L. Bernau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOPE and Mr. BLANTON objected.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentlemen withhold their objec-

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve my objection, but first I want to put something of the Government's side in this RECORD. Mr. Dwight F. Davis, the Secretary of War, says in this report:

The War Department is consistently opposed to the enactment of special legislation of a preferred nature for the benefit of individuals. Accordingly, I recommend that this bill be not favorably considered by your committee and be not enacted into law.

And he gives his adverse reasons in the report. I am following the Secretary of War in these matters.

Mr. KVALE. But, Mr. Speaker, the Military Affairs Committee had before it the report of the Secretary of War. They also conducted hearings upon this measure. They went into the facts rather thoroughly, and they decided upon the basis of the facts not to follow the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. I notice in the letter of the Secretary of War he states if it was desired, a representative of the Judge Advocate General's Department would appear before the committee. I should like to ask the gentleman if such official appeared, representing the War Department, when this claim was under consideration.

Mr. KVALE. I can not trust my memory sufficiently to answer the gentleman, because these hearings were held about a year ago, but the hearings were before my subcommittee, as in the case of the last measure. I know something about the facts involved in this matter.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I was not present at the last hearing before the gentleman's subcommittee, but I was a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs at the previous hearing at the previous Congress, at which time a representative from the War Department did appear, and he was thoroughly quizzed by the members of the committee, and in turn he quizzed this Captain Bernau for whose relief this bill is before us.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is what the War Department says:

It appears from the records that former Captain Bernau was found guilty by general court-martial and sentenced to dismissal from the service for making a false statement to Capt. John C. Hutcheson, Quartermaster Corps, as to the amount of Government beef for which he, Bernau, was responsible, and for proposing to the said Captain Hutcheson to make up a shortage in subsistence stores for which he (Bernau) was responsible, by the unauthorized and unlawful sale of exceptional articles at more than the invoice price to the Government, the surplus funds therefrom to be diverted to cover the shortage in subsistence stores herein referred to.

That involves moral turpitude.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?

Mr. BLANTON. I say that involves moral turpitude.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman has inserted certain material in the RECORD. Let me answer it by reading another section of the report. I will read from page 2 of the report, from a statement by Mrs. KAHN, who submitted the report:

Almost simultaneously with the taking of this inventory, Capt. John C. Hutcheson arrived at Fort Mills to relieve Bernau, who had been ordered back to the States. Being apprised of the discrepancy in the beef account, Captain Hutcheson refused to receipt for the beef until he had taken his own inventory. Using ceipt for the beef until he had taken his own inventory. Osing the itemized sheets of the inventory already taken, he made his own extensions, and, by reason of erroneous calculations, determined that the shortage was 55,000 pounds instead of 78,000 pounds. He thereupon receipted for the beef upon the basis of a 55,000-pound shortage. A third inventory taken shortly thereafter determined the correct paper shortage to be 78,000 pounds, and Captain Hutcheson thus became responsible for a shortage of 23,000 pounds.

Then there was a conference and the evidence was incorrect, and it did not agree, and upon that basis a courtmartial, to which the gentleman refers, was held. It was simply a routine affair, later corrected.

Mr. BLANTON. For being short 78,000 pounds of beef he was dismissed from the service.

Mr. KVALE. Oh, it was a paper shortage.

Mr. BLANTON. Whereas some boys who steal a turkey gobbler go to the penitentiary.

Mr. KVALE. But the point I want to make is-Regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill can not pass. I object.

CASSIE E. HOWARD

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1044.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to Cassie E. Howard, as transferee of Frank Bastlen, patent for the lands covered by homestead entry numbered Great Falls 054646, upon payment by such Cassie E. Howard, within sixty days from the date of the approval of this act, of the balance due upon such lands.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MARGARET M'CREANOR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1040, authorizing the issuance to Margaret McCreanor of a patent for certain lands.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EARL V. LARKIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 785, to reimburse Earl V. Larkin for injuries sustained by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of a soldier in the United States Army.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions about this bill, or perhaps he wishes to make a statement.

Mr. PITTENGER. I simply want to say that the committee went into the facts carefully and we have a copy of the report of the department here. The facts are that a boy 16 years of age went down to a tunnel where United States soldiers were. He went there with the intention of enlisting. While he was down there with these soldiers one of them discharged a revolver.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. What was he doing there? Was he doing anything to the tunnel?

Mr. PITTENGER. He says in his letter to the Congressman that he had gone into the tunnel with these soldiers during the nighttime to look for somebody, report having come from men on the train that some strange character was in there.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Was he helping the soldiers?

Mr. PITTENGER. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He was not trespassing?

Mr. PITTENGER. He was not a trespasser.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The soldiers were not trying to put him out?

Mr. PITTENGER. Not at all.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He was not interfering with them in any way?

Mr. PITTENGER. He was not. And I may say to my colleague, I think this bill is very reasonable. He submitted an itemized statement. He is only claiming reimbursement of hospital bills and doctors' bills. He is not asking anything for the injury. The itemized bill was submitted to the committee. I did not include it in the report.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman consent to an amendment providing that this is in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States?

Mr. PITTENGER. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to offer which does not detract from the merits of the bill.

Mr. PITTENGER. I have no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Earl V. Larkin the sum of $1,213.25, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being for hospital care and medical services rendered Earl V. Larkin, a civilian, who was injured by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a private in the United States Army.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in or receive connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary not-withstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "in full compensation for all expenses attendant on and for an injury suffered by him arising from."

And then after the word "Army" insert the words "on or about June 12, 1917, at Pittsburgh, Pa."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHARLES EDWARD BAILEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4328, for the relief of Charles Edward Bailey.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARTIN-WALSH (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5774, for the relief of Martin-Walsh (Inc.).

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I withhold the objection.

Mr. BLACK. The committee gave a great deal of attention to this bill. Mr. Walsh, one of the members of this former firm appeared before the committee. Martin-Walsh (Inc.), paid a duty they should not have paid on an importation of paper. It seems there was a general mistake as to the duties payable on this line of paper. Other firms also paid excess duty, but they were properly advised by their customers' brokers and got a refund.

This is the only firm that did not get a refund. This is the only case of its kind. No other cases will arise.

I know the situation of Walsh. I have gone into this thing very carefully myself. He has been to see me time and time again. He is a very excellent citizen. He was in the Army and he can not understand why he has been done what he considers an inequity.

The committee heard this man. We seldom do that. He appeared before us and made a very satisfactory explanation of the entire situation, so satisfactory was it that the committee unanimously reported the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Secretary of the Treasury called attention to the fact that if we pass this bill it will be the basis of many similar bills against the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Not of this kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is a refund of duties in this case, it will be extending to the importer a special privilege not enjoyed by all. Therefore he is constrained to report against the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. The committee's idea of the facts is different from that report, because we understand that this is the only possible case that could arise under those particular duties as to those goods.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to these special goods?

Mr. BLACK. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there are many instances where the broker fails to perform his duty, as in this case, to protect the interests of his client. He fails to make his claim in time, as the broker did in this case; and if we are going to open up the doors to every case where a broker has been negligent, there will be thousands upon thousands of such Cases.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, the gentleman understands this trouble occurred through the original mistake on the part of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the part of the brokers.

Mr. BLACK. No; on the part of the Government.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. PITTENGER. The facts are, and, mark you, the members of the committee went into this carefully and personally, the Government appraiser suggested and insisted on this higher valuation.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman does not know enough about the importing business to insist on that point. Mr. BLACK. That point was decided by the court.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The importer has the right to determine whether he is going to take his imports upon a certain appraisement and the customs broker or the importer can make his protest at the time, and if he does not do it he is in exactly the same position as this man now finds himself, who very naïvely says, and this is the claimant's own statement, "When these entries in question were made, there was an atmosphere of confusion and uncertainty as to the proper basis of valuation."

This is no fault of the Government, this is no fault of the appraiser, this is no fault of the customs broker. Then he says, "The decisions of the Customs Court of October 24, 1924, in supporting the importers, confirms that impression. And that subsequent to the rendering of this decision every other importer of similar merchandise in the port of New York received refunds because their interests had been properly protected by their brokers."

Mr. BLACK. Let me say to the gentleman that there is an indication that this excessive duty was put on not because of any confusion, but because of the urgings of competitors who were domestic producers. There is every indication of that in this evidence.

Mr. PITTENGER. If my colleague will yield further, there is evidence here that domestic producers in some way wanted to complicate matters. The facts are that these particular brokers were inexperienced. They followed the suggestions of the appraisers with respect to this higher valuation, although they originally wanted the lower valuation, which was the correct one. There was a mistake in not following the legal technicalities. The committee did not feel that American citizens should be prejudiced in this way, by reason of an error into which the brokers were led following the appraisers who represented the Government and whose duty it was to advise these people and to help them protect their interests in the matter.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from New York almost persuade me that these people have a cause of action against their broker. I therefore object, Mr. Speaker.

H. D. HENION, ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7205, for the relief of H. D. Henion, Harry Wolfe, and R. W. McSorley.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOPE. I withhold it.

Mr. PITTENGER. It is certainly the dark of the moon to-night. Look at the facts in this case.

Mr. HOPE. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Were these men who were injured employees of the United States Government?

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not believe they were.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing in the report to show that they were?

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not recall.

Mr. HOPE. Then why extend to them the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act?

Mr. PITTENGER. Has the gentleman read the report of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; but there is nothing in that report to indicate these men were Government employees.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The report of the department shows that one of them certainly was not in the employ of the Government.

Mr. HOPE. Does it show positively that any of them were?

Mr. STAFFORD. And the report of the forest supervisor would indicate that we should be careful that they do not fall into the hands of the ambulance chasers who would seek to get control of their claims.

Mr. PITTENGER. We do not handle any claims of ambulance chasers.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you provide benefits that go to ambulance chasers.

Mr. PITTENGER. No; we do not. Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HAROLD W. MERRIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11459, for the relief of Harold W. Merrin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill (S. 4287).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 4287), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harold W. Merrin the sum of $124.35 as reimbursement for amounts disallowed and charged to him in connection with travel expenses to and from Alaska under official orders and reimbursed by him to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 11459) was laid on the table.

DONNA M. DAVIS

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 11460, to authorize credit in the disbursing account of Donna M. Davis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER asked that the bill S. 4286 be substituted. There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 4286

An act to authorize credit in the disbursing account of Donna M. Davis

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the account of Donna M. Davis, special disbursing agent, field service, General Land Office, Anchorage, Alaska, for payment of $35.90 made to Harold W. Merrin as reimbursement for travel expense, which amount now stands as a disallowance on the books of the General Accounting Office.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS UPON CERTAIN CONDITIONS TO LAND AND ACCRETIONS WITHIN THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, S. 1624, providing for the issuance of patents upon certain conditions to lands and accretions thereto determined to be within the State of New Mexico in accordance with the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States entered April 9, 1928.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, the situation is this, that there was litigation pending between Texas and New Mexico relative to the boundary line between those States on account of the change of the Rio Grande. The line was not what it had been. So a survey was ordered, and by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the line was established. But that line left land which formerly belonged to Texas in New Mexico and land which formerly belonged to New Mexico in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The land commissioner says:

Until a report under the resolution of Congress has been submitted, or until the public surveys have been closed upon the boundary line and the pending application disposed of or the present occupants of the land afforded an opportunity to put their claims of record under existing public land laws, further legislation by Congress at this time is not thought to be necessary.

Mr. THOMASON. That is not quite correct. You may search the records in the office, and if you expect to find an adverse report you are mistaken. I do not know how many things have been done, but no sales have been made. This bill has passed the Senate unanimously and passed the Public Lands Committee unanimously.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It has not passed the Public Lands Committee unanimously, for I am a member of that committee.

Mr. THOMASON. Well, anyway, there is not a citizen of that valley on either side of the water who owns land there that his land is not under a cloud of title. He can not borrow even from the Federal land bank.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Why not wait until a decision of the Land Office is obtained. If you have a letter in your pocket showing that the land is clear I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I will say this, every man in Texas who had a patent goes under the assumption that it was not a public-land State.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am not going to take the time to state the difficulties in these claims of New Mexico and Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. There is no protest from the Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I can not read the report in any other way except that the commissioner does not approve. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has read the final report in the memorandum of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

It does not show any detriment to the right of any person, but it shows that some of the details in getting these land titles clear listed for the people as well as for the department have not been accomplished.

Mr. THOMASON. In New Mexico they derive their titles from the United States Government. So far as Texas is concerned, I am not sure that the act has passed the legislature, but I am sure it will pass an enabling act down there that will clear up the situation. The Senators and the Representatives from both States, as well as the landowners in the entire valley, are in absolute accord.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I regret very much as a member of this committee to say that people from both of these States have sent people to me that I know, and they have laid some of the facts before me. I say to the gentleman that what they ought to do, and I have said it to them, is to continue laying the facts before the Commissioner of the Land Office, and not to Congress, until they get the situation straightened out. No one wants to interfere with their getting their land titles cleared.

Mr. THOMASON. Has the gentleman had a report from the people along that line recently?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Not within six months.

Mr. THOMASON. May I say as one of the attorneys involved in that case, that I am familiar with the matter and I do say that now those people have settled all of their differences, and I say on my own responsibility, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] I am sure will say the same, but there is not a single objection to this.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman will get such a statement from the Commissioner of the Land Office, I shall do everything I can in the next few days to see this legislation passed.

Mr. THOMASON. They can not borrow any money, they can not get good title to their lands, they can not trade or sell as long as this cloud is on the title.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Not only that, but these very people who are involved are the ones who are asking us to push this legislation. There is no disagreement at all. The bill was originally introduced in the Senate.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, much as I repret to do so, I object.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 466) for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment to strike out the figures in line 9, "$914.55," and insert "$2,689.97."

The Speaker pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If the bill passes, it must be as it is now and not in any larger amount.

Mr. BRUMM. Why?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because the report shows that they are entitled to $914.55.

Mr. BLANTON. And only that, the Comptroller General says.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the bill has not yet been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object unless the bill passes in the form it is now with this stated amount.

Mr. BRUMM. The bill has passed the Senate and was reported to the committee, and we are now offering an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Objection to what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the bill is kept in the sum of $914.55, the amount the Comptroller General recognizes, I shall not object; otherwise I shall.

Mr. BRUMM. Just a moment. The reason is that we followed the advice the gentleman suggested. We got a report from the Comptroller General; and the evidence, by the correspondence that I had and read every word of, absolutely was ignored by the Comptroller General in his report, which showed a new contract accepting a certain amount of steel ingots, which was entirely ignored by and apparently unknown to the Senate.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is an understanding that the bill is not going to be passed for more than $914.55 we will let it go, and it is to be in full settlement.

Mr. BACHMANN. If it is in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Allegheny Forging Co. for steel ingots and steel billets shipped to Balboa, Canal Zone, under Panama Canal contract entered into in October, 1919, and to allow in full and final settlement thereof the sum of not to exceed $914.55. There is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $914.55, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer to amend on page 2, in line 2, after the word "claim," by striking out the period, inserting a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the above shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In line 8, on page 1, it says "in full and final settlement thereof."

Mr. BLANTON. But it does not say against the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Blanton: On page 2, after line 2, insert a colon and the following proviso: "In full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, based on the above transaction."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Hancock of New York: At the end of the amendment just adopted, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JENNIE BRUCE GALLAHAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8119, for the relief of Jennie Bruce Gallahan.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this being a matter that would set a new precedent, I intend to object. This is a deceased fireman in the District of Columbia. His widow is entitled to benefits under the firemen's retirement act. She is now drawing a pension of $70 per month. No such claim as this ought ever be passed by the Congress, giving her an additional $5,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. The wife is getting $70 a month out of the firemen's fund of the District.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and we should watch for such bills as this and stop them.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BACHMANN. I will reserve it. Mr. GAMBRILL. This bill has twice passed the Senate, once in the Seventy-first Congress and again in the Seventysecond Congress. It has been favorably reported several times, and for that reason I thought the bill was a very meritorious one.

Mr. BACHMANN. As far as the facts are concerned, there should be some compensation coming to this widow, but she is getting $70 a month now. Now the gentleman's bill asks for $5,000 in addition.

Mr. GAMBRILL. That is true. Mr. BACHMANN. It is a precedent that you are establishing, where one department or bureau of the Government is compensating a claimant who is coming in now seeking double compensation, growing out of the same death.

Mr. GAMBRILL. The gentleman will bear in mind that no part of the compensation she is receiving comes from the Federal Government. It is paid by the firemen themselves. Mr. BACHMANN. That is just the point. The Federal Government is not the guardian angel to pay everybody who loses his life or suffers injury. The fact of the matter is this claimant should have sued the owner of the Cadillac car. He was directly responsible for the fireman's death. The Government of the United States is not responsible for everybody who is injured.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the Government is the "big daddy" for every person wanting to take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

HARRY GORDON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1041, for the relief of Harry Gordon.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is another case of where a man repeatedly violated the regulations of the War Department during the period of the war, and some other boy had to take his place in the line, and he should not receive an honorable discharge, and therefore I object.

MATHIE BELSVIG

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2259, for the relief of Mathie Belsvig.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue to Mathie Belsvig, of Ossette, Mont., a patent to 80 acres of land upon which said Mathie Belsvig made homestead entry in 1917, and submitted final proof in 1921 (homestead entry No. Great Falls 054858, containing 319²⁰/100 acres): Provided, That within 60 days from approval of that act said Mathie Belsvig shall specify the 80 acres in the entry for which patent is desired and shall make complete payment for the balance due thereon.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YAKUTAT & SOUTHERN RAILWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6484, to grant lands in Alaska to the Yakutat & Southern Railway, a Washington corporation, authorized to carry on its business in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I assume the Delegate from Alaska will not have any objection to reserving all mineral and oil deposits?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No. There is no object to that at all. I want to offer a short amendment at the proper time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is owing to the membership to have the gentleman acquaint the House with the amendment before the bill passes the objection state.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. After the word "of," in line 5 on page 1, insert the words "a portion of," and then strike out the word "sixty," in line 6 on page 1 and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-six and sixteen one-hundredths."

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized upon the relinquishment by the Yakutat & Southern Railway, a Washington corporation, of its grant for terminal grounds on Monti Bay, Alaska, containing approximately 60 acres, to issue a patent in fee to the Yakutat & Southern Railway for that certain tract of land containing approximately 69.02 acres, particularly described as follows: Beginning at true point for corner No. 1, near the east shore of Monti Bay, an arm of Yakutat Bay, from which U. With the following committee amendments:

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, in line 8, strike out "sixty-nine and two one-hundredths" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-five and twenty-one one-hundredths," and in line 1, on page 2, after the word "acres," insert "subject to existing valid claims."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford to the committee amendment: Page 2, in line 1, after the word "claims," insert "and also reserving all mineral and oil rights to the Government."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to. With the further committee amendment:

Page 2, line 14, after the figure "3," strike out down to and Page 2, line 14, after the figure "3," strike out down to and including line 9, on page 3, and the words "and two one-hundredths acres" on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "thence north 25.22 chains to corner No. 4; thence north 89° 46' west 22.82 chains to corner No. 5; thence south 2.84 chains to witness corner to corner No. 6 M. The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wickersham: Page 1, line 5, after the word "of" insert the words "a portion of," and in line 6, after the word "approximately" insert "36.16."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LETTIE LEVERETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6449, for the relief of Lettie Leverett.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BACHMANN. Gladly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman this is a bill for the relief of a widow and three minor children because of the death of a civilian who was ordered to fight a fire by Army officers.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman does not mean there are three minor children. As I understand, one child is 20, one is 19, and the other is 15. The gentleman does not consider them minor children, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The report says minor children.

Mr. BACHMANN. One is 20, one is 19, and the third is 15. Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The child 15 years old is certainly a minor child.

Mr. BACHMANN. But I would not consider the others as

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I started to say, the bill is for the relief of a widow because of the death of a civilian caused absolutely by the negligence of the officers. He was cutting hay on a military reservation. He was ordered to fight a fire, and he did fight the fire. He was not killed while fighting the fire. He was ordered onto a truck driven by a soldier. He got on that truck and through no fault of his own he was killed. It seems to me the Government is responsible.

Mr. BACHMANN. As I understand the facts from the report, this man agreed when he went onto this reservation that he would not hold the Government responsible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. BACHMANN. I call the gentleman's attention to what the report states:

Mr. McCormack testified at the hearings of the board investigating the death of Mr. Leverett that when he hired Mr. Leverett he showed him the permit; that he, Mr. Leverett, understood that he was going on the reservation at his own risk from fire, shooting, etc., and was expected to aid in fire protection, if necessary.

I will call the gentleman's attention to one further statement from the report. I am sympathetic. I am sorry the man lost his life, but let me read this statement from page 3 of the report:

Under the circumstances as disclosed by the evidence of record the War Department is of the opinion that the occurrence of this accident, regrettable though it is, casts no legal or moral respon-sibility therefor on the Government for the reason that Mr. Leverett was not employed by the Army; that he was advised that in coming on the reservation as an invitee for his own benefit, or that of his employer, he did so at his own risk; that his death was a result of an unavoidable accident to which no agency, or instrumentality of the Government contributed. which no agent,

How is there any moral obligation on the Government or any equitable reason why the Government should pay this woman any money?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This man was ordered on this truck. He did not lose his life while fighting a fire. When he fought the fire he had done what he had agreed to do, and he never agreed to get on a Government truck driven by a soldier, and through no fault of his own he was killed.

Mr. BACHMANN. The Army officer called on him to assist in fighting the fire, and he got on the truck. He did not stay on the truck with the rest of them, and he got lost and was killed.

I am compelled to object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7409, for the relief of Chambliss L. Tidwell.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, if the author of the bill will accept the form that is used for claims against the Employees' Compensation Committee, I shall not object.

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Can the gentleman tell me the date of the injury referred to?

Mr. STAFFORD. The report shows the accident occurred after the compensation act was passed.

Mr. KLEBERG. No; there was a development of tuber-

Mr. STAFFORD. It developed after the compensation act was passed.

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am taking the date shown here when he had pleurisy, which is August 15, 1925.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 15, 17, 18, and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Chambliss L. Tidwell, a civilian employee of the Mississippi River Commission, who contracted pulmonary tuberculosis in such service, and his case is hereby authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of such act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Eaton of Colorado: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the employees' compensation act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of Chambliss L. Tidwell, of Memphis, Tenn., on account of injuries alleged to have been received on or about August 15, 1925, while employed in the service of the United States as civilian employee of the Mississippi River Commission: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act." the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. CHAMBLISS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8210, for the relief of William H. Chambliss.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOE SETTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10800, for the relief of Joe Setton.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joe Setton, of New York City, the sum of $500. Such sum represents the amount of a bond forfeited to the United States by the said Joe Setton, such bond being conditioned upon the voluntary departure of his mother, Sabout Setton, from the United States at the expiration of one year after her admission to the United States as the expiration of one year after her admission to the United States as a non-immigrant alien. Due to illness, she was unable to depart, but the said Joe Setton made no application within the prescribed period for an extension of time of her temporary visit, having no knowledge that such extension was necessary.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after "$500," insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; page 2, line 6, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

It causes maiadjustment of individual commodity prices, thereby throwing supply and demand out of balance; it causes business uncertainty which imperils enterprise; it distorts all credit and industrial contracts and renders unreliable all official and unofficial statistics written in terms of money. Debtors, employees, merchants, and producers are wronged by every decline of the commodity price level; and creditors, wage earners, people on fixed incomes, and consumers, as such, by every price level decline. Every depression greatly injures not only all producers of raw materials, dealers in merchandise, and owners of real estate but directly and indirectly all classes of our population. Bloating of the dollar's buying power by price-level depression causes a more general business disturbance and greater economic distress than does the lessening of its buying power by a general price advance. Though both are evils, inflation of the dollar is a greater evil than is a corresponding inflation of prices. If proof of this were needed, it could readily be found in the appalling number of bank, business, and farm failures since 1920, as compared with the few that occured during the price inflation 1915 to 1920. If proof of the equally serious, though less obvious, effects of a more prolonged and general price slump were needed, it could readily be found in the economic and political history of the two decades prior to 1897 as compared with the two decades following. Our vast war debt and a large part of the existing State, municipal, and private debts were incurred on a price level far higher than the present. The burden of those debts, therefore, was increased by the price slump of 1921 and further increased by the present depression which started to July 1939, and which started in July 1929; and

REPORTS ON DEPARTMENTAL FUNCTIONS-FORMS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in order that there may be uniformity in the reports required to be submitted by the heads of the various departments and establishments pursuant to Senate Resolution 351 and that the desired information may be reported in the detail believed to be necessary, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, so that they may be available to all to whom the resolution applies, three pro forma statements which have been designed to compile the information requested, in brief and understandable style. Before sending the statements to you, Mr. President, I should like, for the information of the Senate, to describe briefly their text and purpose.

In the first statement provision is made for a report on the cost of general departmental supervision analyzed into five major classifications or more if the reporting agency so desires. Following the report on general supervision, space is provided for reporting in total on the bureaus or other major classifications. As to each of the classifications reported. columns have been provided to show the number of employees, the annual expenditures, and the statutory authority. Subcolumns are provided under annual expenditures to show the amount spent for salaries and wages, other expenses, the amount spent from appropriated funds and from other funds such as trust funds, cooperative funds, socalled quasi public funds, and/or private funds.

In the second statement space is provided, first, for a general classification of expenses for the bureau or major division. The second part of this statement provides for a report on all functions, projects, activities, or any specialized line of work. This section constitutes an important feature of the whole report; and in order that it may be clearly understood that what is desired is a complete list of all lines of work conducted, I have deemed it worth while to include in the section an illustration.

The third statement calls merely for a complete list of all employees receiving $5,000 or more per annum.

I believe that a response to Senate Resolution 351 in the form of these statements will provide the Senate and the President with the kind of information that is absolutely essential to and indispensable for an intelligent consideration of the problems of reorganization and economy in the business of the Government. An analysis of the statements for the several departments and establishments will afford a cross-sectional view of activities through which overlapping, duplication, and misplaced or unrelated functioning will be brought to light so that they can be dealt with intelligently. A comparison of cost for similar operations will afford the basis for fixing standards of economy and efficiency.

The nature of the data called for is such as should be of inestimable value not only to the Senate and the President in this hour of need for a searching and intelligent analysis of the purposes for which our Government is spending more than $3,000,000,000 annually but also to the administrative heads of all departments and establishments, as it will afford to such officials the basis for a close scrutiny of the activities | as I have said, be available to all to whom Senate Resoluunder their respective jurisdictions.

With these brief remarks, I now send the statements to you, Mr. President, reiterating my request for unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD that they may, the RECORD, as follows:

HOOVER DAM CONDITIONS DEMAND INVESTIGATION

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the day following my presentation of the Boulder Canyon project and Hoover Dam problems on the floor of the Senate on February 15, 1933. I received the welcome news that the Federal district court in and for the State of Nevada denied the injunctions and dismissed the complaints in the pending tax suits brought by the Six Companies (Inc.) and the Secretary of the Interior against the State of Nevada and Clark County. The Federal court has upheld the position I have taken from the start in Following my presentation in the Senate on February 15, 1933, of the serious conditions prevailing at Hoover Dam which demand investigation, I received a letter from Attorney General Mitchell dated February 16, to which I replied on February 20. I now submit these letters for insertion in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 16, 1933.

Hon. Tasker L. Oddie,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Noticing your comments in the Congressional Record of February 15 as to my action in authorizing the United States attorney in Nevada to file a brief as amicus curiæ in the case pending in the State of Nevada brought by Six Companies (Inc.), against A. J. Stinson, of Nevada, State mine inspector, I call your attention to the provisions of section 309, title 5, United States Code (R. S. sec. 359), which provides:

"The Attorney General may, whenever he deems it for the interest of the United States either in person conduct and argue any case in any court of the United States in which the United States is interested, or may direct the Solicitor General or any officer of the Department of Justice to do so."

And to the provisions of section 316, title 5, United States Code (R. S. sec. 367), which is as follows:

"The Solicitor General or any officer of the Department of Justice may be sent by the Attorney General to any State or district tice may be sent by the Attorney General to any State or district in the United States to attend to the interests of the United States in any suit pending in any of the courts of the United States, or in the courts of any State, or to attend to any other interest of the United States."

while the suit brought by the Six Companies is a private suit, it involves a question as to the operation of the laws of the State of Nevada within the Hoover Dam reservation and involves directly the question as to the extent of Federal jurisdiction over that area and the extent to which the State laws may operate within that area upon contractors performing work for the Federal Government. This is certainly a question which the United States has a direct interest in, and it is clearly the duty of the Attorney General to see to it that, through a brief as amicus curize or otherwise, every legitimate argument supporting the jurisdiction of the United States be presented to the court in order that the court may overlook nothing and have before it all information necessary to a just and sound conclusion. Have you any doubt that it is the duty of the Attorney General to take such action in such a case? action in such a case?

Your statement that Federal counsel has been provided at the expense of the American taxpayer and without cost to the conexpense of the American taxpayer and without cost to the contractor to sustain the efforts of a private corporation to undermine and destroy the sovereignty of the State of Nevada was hardly a fair statement of the situation. We have no interest in the contractor's affairs except in so far as they affect the interests of the Federal Government. But obviously any burdens cast by a State law upon contractors engaged in this governmental work may have a tendency to increase the cost of the work to the Federal Government or interfere with its operations. If the courts hold that the United States has exclusive sovereignty over this area, it will free the operations of the Federal Government from burdens of any State laws and place the Congress of the United States in a position to enact such regulations for this area as it sees fit.

William D. Mitchell,

WILLIAM D. MITCHELL, Attorney General.

Hon. WILLIAM D. MITCHELL,

Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Attorney General: This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 16 with reference to the remarks made by me in the Senate on February 15, in which I questioned the action of the Attorney General in filing an amicus curiæ brief to support the Six Companies (Inc.), a private contractor, in suits in equity instituted by it with the object of evading the mine safety and tax laws of the State of Nevada.

One of the principal premises cited and relied upon by the plaintiff, the Six Companies (Inc.), the contractor, in these suits is the action of the Secretary of the Interior in attempting without adequate constitutional and statutory authority to create the so-called Boulder Canyon project Federal reservation of exclusive Federal jurisdiction. In my statements on the floor of the Senate on February 15, 1933, pages 4223 to 4235 of the Congressional Record, ample evidence was presented to confirm the inadequacy of constitutional and statutory authority upon which the Secretary of the Interior based his action in this matter.

Further to substantiate the soundness of my charges that the Secretary of the Interior and the Six Companies (Inc.) were proceeding without precedent and without adequate constitutional and statutory authority, the Federal district court in and for the State of Nevada did on February 15, 1933, deny the injunctions and dismiss the complaints in these pending tax suits so that the contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.) is liable for the payment of taxes to the county of Clark and the State of Nevada.

From your letter to me of February 16, 1933, I quote the last sentence, as follows:

From your letter to me of February 16, 1933, I quote the last sentence, as follows:

"If the courts hold that the United States has exclusive sovereignty over this area, it will free the operations of the Federal Government from burdens of any State laws and place the Congress of the United States in a position to enact such regulations for this area as it sees fit."

Since you have anticipated so strongly that the courts would decide that the Secretary of the Interior had adequate constitutional and statutory authority to create a reservation of exclusive Federal jurisdiction whereby the Six Companies (Inc.) could evade the tax and other laws of the State of Nevada, it must come as a severe shock to you that the Federal district court has handed down decisions denying these tax injunctions and dismissing the complaints.

In my statement on the floor of the Senate on February 15, 1933, I did not question your legal authority to file an amicus curiæ brief in support of the private contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.). However, I did very seriously question your discretion and wisdom in filing such a brief without apparently having examined the constitutional and legal premises upon which the Secretary of the Interior was acting when he attempted to create the so-called Boulder Canyon project Federal reservation of exclusive Federal jurisdiction. As the properly constituted and authorized legal spokesman of the United States Government, it would seem to me that the paramount duty and responsibility of the Attorney General would have necessitated an examination of the constitutional and statutory premises upon which the Secretary of the Interior was acting in this matter. Have you any doubt that it is the duty of the Attorney General to make such an examination of the premises in cases where he is requested to render legal assistance to a private company? render legal assistance to a private company?

With the ascertainment that the premises upon which the Secretary of the Interior was acting in this case were constitutionally and statutorily superficial, would it not then have been your paramount duty to have so advised the Secretary of the Interior and to have notified him that you could not assist the private contractor in this case. tractor in this case? Have you any doubt that it would be the duty of the Attorney General so to act?

It should be emphasized that the Six Companies (Inc.) accepted this work for the Government at a definite figure and that any savings through relief from the payment of taxes or from using cheap but extraordinarily hazardous methods of construction would have benefited the company alone. None of these reducwould have benefited the company alone. None of these reductions of cost would have benefited the Government. You cite as a reason for your participation in these cases that you were acting to prevent increased costs to the Government. On this basis, therefore, you were not justified in your support of the private contractor, the Six Companies (Inc.), as the Government could not benefit by your action.

In the light of these facts and the action of the Federal district court in dismissing the complaints, I find that the criticisms I made on the floor of the Senate on February 15 of the action of the Attorney General were not only not unfair but on the contrary too mild,

From the study which I have made of the matter since receiving From the study which I have made of the matter since receiving your letter I feel justified in saying that the Attorney General not only should not have aided the private company, the Six Companies (Inc.), in its attempt to evade the mine safety and tax laws of the State of Nevada but the Attorney General should have advised the Secretary of the Interior of the inadequacy of the constitutional and statutory premises upon which he was acting and to have declined to file an amicus curiæ brief.

Very sincerely yours,

Takker I. Onne.

TASKER L. ODDIE.

PLAN FOR THE CALLING OF CONVENTIONS IN THE STATES

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I request that a letter from the Liberal Civic League of Boston, containing a memorandum suggesting a plan for calling the conventions in the several States under authority of congressional action to act upon the question of ratifying the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution, be printed in the RECORD, treated as a petition, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the letter and memorandum were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Liberal Civic League (Inc.), Boston, Mass., February 21, 1933.

Hon. David I. Walsh,

The Carlton Hotel, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: In view of the highly conflicting opinion expressed by eminent constitutional authority as to the manner in which the procedure for the holding of conventions in the several States, to deal with the proposed twenty-first amendment of the Faderal Constitution, should be set up, whether ment of the Federal Constitution, should be set up, whether under the guidance of congressional action or upon initiative of the several States. I believe it to be of the utmost importance to our cause and to the welfare of the Nation that Congress should suggest an outline of procedure for the guidance of the several

If this is not done endless confusion and very much in the way of dilatory litigation will undoubtedly result, which might very seriously effect the ultimate success of ratification in the necessary 36 States.

Further, at this juncture when there is such a universal demand for economy in government, is it not highly essential that in dealing with the action of the States on the proposed twenty-first amendment, that any and all expense, other than what may be absolutely necessary to the occasion, should be eliminated.

The nature and form of the proposed amendment have been fixed by the Congress and can not be altered or amended by any State convention.

Consequently, the deliberative element is very greatly minimized. There can be no occasion for extended debate, nor is there any excuse for the assembling in any State of large and unwieldy convention bodies.

unwieldy convention bodies.

The suggestion already made in many States that these State conventions should be patterned in the matter of size upon existing legislative bodies, points to a possible aggregate expense of many hundreds of thousands of dollars if actually followed out in the setting up of these State conventions.

To meet the practical exigency of this situation I am sending you inclosed a skeleton draft of a plan that might be proposed by the Congress in the interests of legal clarity and basic economy. You will note that this outline takes for its guide the machinery of the Electoral College, than which there is no better precedent.

of the Electoral College, than which there is no better precedent in the premises.

in the premises.

If such a plan can be forthwith launched in and by the Congress, there is no good reason why effective representative conventions may not be held within the next six months in every State in the Union, at a minimum of expense and with a maximum degree of efficiency.

I shall appreciate knowing what your reaction is to this proposal at your earliest convenience and hope that I may have some word from you prior to the hearing here next Friday morning before the Committee on Constitutional Law.

Sincerely yours,

C. W. CROOKER.

[Memorandum]

A SUGGESTED PLAN FOR THE CALLING OF CONVENTIONS IN THE SEVERAL STATES UNDER AUTHORITY OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTION, TO ACT UPON THE QUESTION OF RATIFYING THE PROPOSED TWENTY-FIRST AMEND-MENT OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

In the interest of economy, uniformity, and expedition, and, in the event that the amendment shall prevail, the forwarding of the day when the Government and the people shall again receive the benefit of the vast revenue concerned and so greatly needed to relieve taxation, the Congress outline the following plan for the holding of conventions in the several States.

The Congress herewith transmits the contemplated twenty-first amendment to conventions of the people of the several States, to be called and determined not later than November 4, 1933, and the result reported to Congress not later than December 1, 1933.

The Congress determines that uniform rule for these conventions shall be as follows:

The governor of each State shall forthwith nominate delegates equal to the number of that State's representation in the Electoral College, who are in favor of the adoption of the amendment toral College, who are in favor of the adoption of the amendment and a like number of delegates who are opposed to its adoption. These delegates shall agree to serve without pay and without expenses and shall further agree to meet at the statehouse on a date to be set by the governor within 15 days after the voting for delegates shall have occurred, for the purpose of forwarding the Congress the result of the convention.

the Congress the result of the convention.

After the required number of delegates have agreed to run under the designations requested, their names shall be entered in their separate groups and clearly designated as for or against the twenty-first amendment, in the same manner as the names and designations of electoral delegates are placed upon the ballot. The voters, on or before November 4, at a general or special election to be called by the governor, shall place a cross against the group of delegates whose designation meets with their approval and the votes of the majority group shall be considered the decision of the convention of the people of that State within the meaning of the Constitution.

EXCLUSION OF TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES FROM ECONOMY ACT

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have a communication from a Member of the House of Representatives with reference to House Joint Resolution 547, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, before which the resolution referred to is pending. The joint resolution merely provides that the so-called economy provisions of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933 shall not apply to the additional employees employed in removing snow in the District of Columbia and to additional employees in the Post Office Department who were engaged in the handling of Christmas mail. I hope the committee will take prompt and favorable action.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., February 20, 1933.

Washington, D. C., February 20, 1933.

Hon. David I. Walsh,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: I am inclosing copy of my bill, House Joint Resolution 547, with Report No. 1989, which was passed unanimously by the House to-day, February 20. Last Christmas, when thousands of men were employed for 2, 3, or 4 days—or longer—taking care of the extra volume of mail in the Post Office Department, 8½ per cent of their wages was deducted. This was due to the ruling of the Comptroller General on the theory that if they had worked for the entire year on the same basis of pay they would have received in wages in excess of $1,000.

Of course, Congress never intended that any reduction should

Of course, Congress never intended that any reduction should apply to these men when the economy bill was passed in the last session. The same thing applies to the several hundred men who were employed in the District of Columbia in removing snow from the streets here a few months ago.

The inclosed bill is for the purpose of reimbursing these people for the money taken from their wages.

I will appreciate it if you will look into the matter and try to have action taken by the Senate on this meritorious bill before adjournment.

With kindest personal regards, I am, sincerely yours, J. W. McCormack.

PAYMENTS OF TUITION FOR INDIAN PUPILS IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5684) to authorize the Comptroller General to allow claim of district No. 13, Choctaw County, Okla., for payment of tuition for Indian pupils.

The bill provides an authorization for the Comptroller General to approve a contract for the payment of the tuition of a hundred or more orphan Indian children who are now taken care of in a little orphans' home in Oklahoma. The money has already been appropriated and this is simply a sort of authorization. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is hereby authorized and directed to allow payment of claims of the public school district No. 13, Choctaw County, Okla., for tuition of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1931, in the sum not to exceed $3,435.61 from the appropriation entitled "Indian Schools, Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, 1931."

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. HASTINGS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. REED submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 370), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purpose of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic article and the foreign article, and to report at the earliest date practicable upon goat, kid, and cabretta leathers.

INVESTIGATION OF SHORT SELLING ON STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I request leave to submit a resolution designed to continue the stock-market investigation by the Committee on Banking and Currency and ask that it lie over under the rule.

In connection with the resolution, I request that there be printed in the Record, to accompany the resolution, an editorial from to-day's New York Times, entitled "Back to Conservative Banking."

The resolution (S. Res. 371) was read and ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution No. 84, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to March 4, 1932, and continued in force by Senate Resolution No. 239, Seventy-second Congress, agreed to June 21, 1932, is hereby further continued in full force and effect until the expiration of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

The editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of Friday, February 24, 1933]
BACK TO CONSERVATIVE BANKING

In the course of his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. Aldrich, of the Chase Bank, touched upon the place and functions of the banks in helping the country out of the depression. They are to provide and safeguard credit. They are to do all within their power to maintain the standard of value and the soundness of the currency. In a word, they are to be the necessary and useful means of financing industry and commerce as revival comes. It is unnecessary to say that no banking authority would advocate a return to such activities of the banks as became too common in the flush years before the great crash of 1929. The sensational disclosures at Washington, not yet complete, show what happens when vast banking resources are made available for excesses of speculation. Through their subordinate companies, the so-called "affiliates," too many banks were infected by the mania of the time and became more like agencies for the flotation of securities than organizations for the regular supply of loans and discounts in ordinary business. But there is now reason to believe that the lesson of that folly has been learned and that at least for a long time to come the principles of conservative banking will be recognized and lived up to. The abuses of recent years, some of which the Glass banking bill would remove or correct, will certainly have fewer defenders after the wholesome publicity which has now set them in so vivid and startling a light.

SITE OF FEDERAL BUILDING IN BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there was reported to-day from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a joint resolution identical with a measure which I introduced in the Senate. The House joint resolution was unanimously reported by the committee in the House, unanimously passed by the House of Representatives, and also unanimously reported by the committee of the Senate. It simply proposes to change the location of a post-office site in the city of Binghamton, N. Y. Everybody there is in favor of it, including the chamber of commerce and all others interested. I know of no opposition at all to the measure, and I ask unanimous consent that it may now be considered and passed.

Mr. KING rose.

Mr. WAGNER. I might say, to allay the apprehension possibly of the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] that it provides for no additional appropriation; in fact, there is a restriction that no more money shall be used than has already been appropriated. That is expressly provided in the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. I want to ask just one question. It has been brought to my attention that a number of Senators—and the Senator from Massachusetts will corroborate what I am about to state—are protesting against the lavish expenditure by the Federal Government for post offices even in this period of depression. I was wondering if, in view of the extravagance which has characterized the Treasury Department during the past few years, it is building in Binghamton a structure which the people do not want or one which is greatly in excess of what is needed?

Mr. WAGNER. On the contrary, this appropriation was made some years ago, and it does not involve any of the questions in which the Senator from Utah and myself are very much interested.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I say that I am thoroughly familiar with the entire situation, because a Detroit contractor was involved at one point, and everything the Senator from New York has stated respecting the equities is true, and in simple justice the joint resolution should be passed immediately.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say that, as my colleague has stated, this measure does not involve a new appropriation or any additional appropriation. I took pains to submit the matter to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine], who is quite an authority on this subject, and I am sure there can be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have looked over the joint resolution and the report, and it is a little more involved than what has been stated by Senators. Perhaps it is not very material, but I think the joint resolution clearly expresses criticism of the lack of good judgment or of stupidity on the part of the Treasury Department or the department that has the power to select sites. There is that feature in reference to the measure.

Mr. WAGNER. As to the original location, I think that | session it appeared to be of the greatest importance to have is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 583) to provide for a change of site of the Federal building to be constructed at Binghamton, N. Y., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cause the new Federal building at Binghamton, N. Y. (authorized by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1587)), to be erected on the Government-owned site located on the north side of Henry Street and extending northwardly between Washington and State Streets, in lieu of on the site of the present post-office building. For such purpose the Secretary is authorized and directed to (a) cancel the existing contract or contracts for the erection of such new building and make a settlement with the contractor for damages susing and make a settlement with the contractor for damages sustained by him as the result of such cancellation, or (b) effect a modification of such contract or contracts to provide for construction of the new building on the Henry Street site, and allow rea-tion of the new building on the Henry Street site, and allow reasonable additional compensation for any damages or increased costs occasioned the contractor by the change to such new site.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to purchase additional land necessary to permit the construction of such new building on the Henry Street site.

SEC. 3. All obligations incurred and/or expenditures made in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution shall be limited to the amount made available and fixed by existing law for the demolition of the old building and construction of such new building, and shall not be in excess of such amount.

SEC. 4. After occupancy of the new building constructed pursuant to this joint resolution, no rented postal station shall be maintained within 2,000 feet of such building.

SEC. 5. The act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of the Government property acquired for a post-office site in Binghamton, N. Y.," approved May 13, 1930 (46 Stat. 273), is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer by the usual quitclaim deed to the city of Binghamton, N. Y., the southerly triangular portion (measuring approximately 59.84 feet on Washington Street and 159.75 feet on Henry Street), or such portion thereof as the Secretary may deem practicable, for the purpose of straightening out said Henry Street, of the Government property acquired for a post-office site in such city, fronting on the north side of Henry Street and extending northwardly between Washington and State Streets.'

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in the form of Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, on February 29, 1932, the President transmitted to the Congress a message recommending the strengthening of the procedure in the judiciary system, together with a report of the Attorney General on bankruptcy law and practices. On the same day I introduced a bill, prepared by the Department of Justice, which bill was a general revision of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, and the various amendments thereto.

On March 1, 1932, an identical bill was introduced in the House. Subcommittees were promptly appointed by the Judiciary Committees of the respective Houses of Congress and held joint hearings during the months of April and May.

In that bill there was a new chapter to the bankruptcy act, known as Chapter VIII, entitled "Provisions for the Relief of Debtor." It contained four sections: Section 73, entitled "Compositions and extensions"; section 74, entitled "Assignments for the benefit of creditors"; section 75, entitled "Amortization of debts"; and section 76, "Corporate reorganizations."

The bill introduced in February, amending the bankruptcy law, involving many questions of policy, became very controversial, and the subcommittees have up to the present time made no reports to their full committees.

During the month of June there was introduced in the Senate a new bill covering section 76, Corporate reorganizations, and the new section thus written included railroads of all kinds. The bankruptcy act, it will be remembered, the committee and the Congress pass upon two sections under this Chapter VIII. One, the compositions and extensions applying to individuals, and the other, corporate reorganizations, which, as I have stated, included railroads.

The House on January 30 passed H. R. 14359, including these two sections, but in preparing the bill had separated railroads engaged in interstate commerce from the corporate reorganization section and thus appeared three sections-one referring to the individual debtors, one to corporate reorganization, and the other to railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

The subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, taking this bill as a basis, made such changes in these sections as it deemed necessary. In the meantime, however, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] had given notice that he proposed to offer an additional section which should apply only to the farmer, and at his request the subcommittee considered this proposed amendment and incorporated it in its recommendations, thus making four sections under this new Chapter VIII.

On February 13, without having had as much opportunity to study the subject as was desirable, but remembering the importance of the legislation, the subcommittee laid the whole matter before the Judiciary Committee. That committee, realizing the impossibility of giving it full consideration in time to be considered by the present Congress, concluded to eliminate what were believed to be the most controversial sections, to wit, the corporate reorganization section and the sections dealing with railroads engaged in interstate commerce, and directed that a report be made to the Senate striking out the sections passed by the House and substituting in lieu thereof the sections relating to the individual debtor and the farmer. It is in that form that the bill comes before the Senate.

It must not be understood that the Judiciary Committee took any adverse action with respect to the corporation and railroad sections. It is important also to understand that the failure to act upon those two sections by the Judiciary Committee is no indication that the committee, or any member of it, fails to appreciate the importance of immediate legislation upon the two subjects covered by those sections. The committee faced, or at least believed that it faced, a situation which made it impossible for any legislation to be had upon this subject at the present session unless a portion of the bill was eliminated. There may have been differences of opinion among the members of the committee as to the relative importance of that which the committee passed upon and that which it failed to pass upon, but it was believed, at least, that that which was left out was the most controversial and therefore, from a practical point of view, was the most essential to eliminate.

I desire, in the first place, to take this opportunity to explain in some detail the purposes of the two sections that are left in the bill.

If it be true, as the committee has supposed, that these two sections are the least controversial of the four sections heretofore mentioned, and if it be true, as many of us believe, that it is important that the corporate and railroad sections be adopted. I express the hope that when we have finished with the two sections recommended by the committee the Senate will give consideration to amendments that may be offered touching the other two subjects in the order of their importance, and my own judgment is that the railroad section is the more important of the two.

Mr. President, I may say in this connection that I have prepared this morning and have sent to the desk, with the request that they be printed, two separate amendments which I propose later to offer to the bill as presented to the Senate by the committee, one referring to the railroads and the other referring to corporations.

I consulted some of the older Members of the Senate as to whether it was desirable, in view of the fact that I had made this report, that I myself should offer as amendments these two sections, and I was assured that it was perfectly does not include railroads. At the beginning of the present proper for me to do so. Accordingly, at the appropriate time I shall present them to the Senate. Having that in mind and with the hope that I may save time, I expect to discuss those two sections in some detail before I conclude this morning.

I desire to express the hope that the Senate will refuse to consider amendments affecting the old bankruptcy law which are not related to these two new sections. I make that suggestion for the reason that there are literally hundreds of proposals to amend the existing bankruptcy act; and, if the Senate should undertake to adopt the many proposals that have been suggested to the committee and to individual Senators, it would take many more days than is left in this Congress to consider them even casually. It would be very much like a proposal to change the tariff law upon one item. That subject, as we all know, when it is opened up means a general revision of the tariff act. The same thing would be true here with respect to the bankruptcy act; and, in view of the fact that that whole subject is now before the committee, it would seem to me unwise to adopt any rule of action other than that which I have suggested.

I desire to call attention to the fact that Chapter VIII is entitled "Provisions for the Relief of Debtors." My correspondence shows that this title has misled many people into believing that this proposed bankruptcy act was intended to do some miraculous thing for the people of the country.

At the invitation of the Washington Star I had the opportunity to make an address upon this subject, in which I endeavored to explain as best I could to the public just what was the object of this bill. I did not go into its details, but I hoped to explain it to the laymen and to the people generally over the country who were interested in bankruptcy legislation, because, on the one hand, they hope that it may bring them some relief, and, on the other hand, it has brought to them the fear that the bankruptcy law might destroy the security of the creditors of the country.

It may be wise—and I shall later consider whether it is—to reprint that speech in the Record. I do not want to repeat it; I think it is not necessary to do so for the benefit of the Senate for it would not be particularly helpful to the Senate, but I may conclude finally to ask the Senate to consent that the speech which I delivered over the radio may be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

As I said in the radio address to which I have referred. the creditor has no anxiety in these days to possess the physical property of the debtor. In many instances he is willing to give him additional time in which to pay. In many instances he knows that his debtor will not be able to pay, certainly not at the present time, and, unless some relief is granted to the debtor, he will not be able to pay at any time in the future. It is no benefit to the creditor, whether that creditor be an individual or a financial institution, to carry on his or its books obligations which the creditor knows can not be paid. On the other hand, the ambition, the energy, and the hope of many debtors have been ofttimes destroyed by a realization of the impossibility of meeting the obligations which they have made. The constant pressure which greets them every day for payment adds to their misery. It is no advantage to the creditor of such a debtor arbitrarily to refuse to cancel or reduce the obligation, depending upon the condition of the debtor. If. however, the creditor agrees to make such adjustments with his debtor as will inspire the debtor to new energy and new life, he has not only done a magnanimous thing for the debtor, but from a purely selfish point of view, he has increased the value of his own claim. I might illustrate the point I am endeavoring to make by a dozen examples that immediately come to my mind. But it seems to me that what I have said is a thing so well known that it must be admitted by thoughtful people everywhere.

One of the first lessons which the youth learns in the average American home of which we so proudly boast is that in order to be successful in life he must adopt one cardinal principle, and that is to pay his just debts. The average American who has had the advantages of such training as this looks with horror upon having to resort to the bankruptcy laws for relief. I have personally known of men who seriously considered ending their very existence rather than to be ever afterwards referred to as a person who escaped paying his debts by voluntary bankruptcy. I think this dread of adopting any such avenue of escape should be encouraged and the payment of debts associated always with honor and good conduct. I think also we should avoid as far as may be the use of the present economic conditions as a sufficient excuse. This principle must not, however, be carried so far as to sap the energy, ambition, and hope which has heretofore been the foundation of America's greatness.

Mr. President, in all the sections under this chapter it is contemplated that those seeking the relief shall never bear the stigma of "bankrupt," and in order to avoid it we have provided that they shall be referred to as "debtors." Indeed, these sections undertake to furnish relief for those who are not bankrupt, as that term has been defined under the old act. In all of these sections the person filing the application must allege one of two things, namely, that he is insolvent, which is the term used in the old law, but here is added another very important provision, "or unable to meet his debts as they mature." There are, therefore, two provisions. Insolvency means that he has not sufficient assets to pay his debts, while the other provision makes no such admission, but alleges that his financial condition is such that he can not meet his debts as they mature.

In the two sections referring to the individual and the farmer provision is made for the filing of a petition setting forth one or the other of these two financial conditions, and in the individual debtor section the court is immediately put in possession of the debtor's property through the appointment of a custodian or receiver, if that be found necessary, and immediately all proceedings against such debtor are stayed. Provision is made for the serving of notices upon his creditors, the filing of schedules, the examination of the debtor, the appointment of a trustee by the creditors, and so forth.

May I say at this point that the bill also provides—and all of these sections provide—that if there be an involuntary petition in bankruptcy filed by the creditors of any debtor, that debtor may, in his answer, seek this relief by setting up the claim that he can, if given proper time and under certain circumstances, rehabilitate himself under this section. If he sets that up when an involuntary petition has been filed against him, it is the duty of the court to examine it and find out whether or not he has brought himself within this section. If he has, then he is not declared a bankrupt but he proceeds as a debtor, and gets whatever relief this section of the bill can give him.

If the debtor's proposal be a composition, namely, a compromise with his creditors by which he is to pay in cash a sum less than the face value of their claims, or if his proposal be an extension of time for the payment of his debts, it becomes necessary for him to get a majority in number of all of his creditors, which number must also represent a majority in amount of all of his debts, to consent in writing to his proposal.

This is presented to the court; and then the bill provides that—

The court shall confirm the proposal if satisfied that (1) it includes an equitable and feasible method of liquidation for secured creditors whose claims are affected and of financial rehabilitation for the debtor; (2) it is for the best interests of all creditors; (3) that the debtor has not been guilty of any of the acts, or failed to perform any of the duties, which would be a ground for denying his discharge; and (4) the offer and its acceptance are in good faith, and have not been made or procured except as herein provided, or by any means, promises, or acts herein forbidden.

This section distinctly provides also that the terms of an extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either or both unsecured debts as well as secured debts, provided the security is in the actual or constructive possession of the debtor or of the custodian or the receiver. It can well be understood that the provision affecting secured creditors did not find its way into either the House bill or the Senate bill without a very serious discussion and the most careful consideration. I did not suppose, at the beginning of such discussion, that I could be persuaded to agree to write into any bankruptcy bill anything which would in any way affect a secured creditor; but I came to the conclusion that in these days of uncertainty and distress, with threats of physical violence to those in authority and with the duty resting upon them to uphold the law, it was wise to do something that would prevent an arbitrary and unreasonable secured creditor from foreclosing his lien and thus in many instances destroying the debtor as well as all of the claims of the unsecured creditor.

The committee had in mind in this connection the operation of the present law, which, under the decisions of the courts, gives to the bankruptcy court the authority to stay all proceedings against the debtor from the time he is adjudged a bankrupt until the estate has been administered. Using this as a basis and as a justification for dealing with the secured creditor, we have deliberately and purposely written into this bill the right of the court to extend the time for the payment of a secured debt as well as that of an unsecured debt. We think we have sufficiently safeguarded the position of the secured creditor in paragraph (i), page 45, by the language I am about to read.

I might say at this point that I have had many letters complaining about that section; and many lawyers and other persons interested and heads of large financial institutions have called upon me, complaining about that particular section. In most instances I have been able to satisfy the person who was there interested and disturbed, because he was representing some creditor, that this suggestion of extending the right of a creditor to compel the payment of his debt was not a very dangerous provision when all things were considered.

I have, however, reached the conclusion that the language as it appears in the bill might be improved somewhat, because it has been argued to me that this provision might also apply to the composition, and that if a majority in both number and amount of the creditors who were unsecured insisted upon settling their debts at so much on the dollar, they could thereby, notwithstanding this provision, compel the secured creditor to take less than the face value of his claim.

So, after conferring with the Solicitor General—with whom I have conferred upon all the provisions of this bill, and who has given to me a help which has made it possible for me to do the work that I have done with respect to it—we have said, if that be contended by anybody, that it is easily enough cured by writing into the bill some such language as this:

Provided, however, That such extension or composition shall not impair the lien or the amount due any secured creditor, but shall affect only the time and method of its liquidation.

I think I have some language that is a little better than that.

In the same connection, representatives of large corporations have come to me and asked what position the corporation was in which had made it a part of its business to guarantee the payment of mortgages that exist in the country—and there are millions and millions in number, and I suppose probably billions in amount, of that kind of mortgage.

There was submitted to me, just a few days ago, language which I think perhaps is as good as can be found to express what seems to be desirable in this connection, but which is not now in the bill. It has been suggested that at the end, or somewhere in this bill in this connection, we write in some such language as this:

Extensions or compositions made pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this act, and each and all of the terms of such extensions or compositions, shall inure to the benefit of mortgage companies and persons, firms, and corporations who, prior to the date of such extension or composition, shall hold or have guaranteed or insured the payment of such debt or debts, or any part thereof; and a copy of the order confirming such extension or composition, certified as required by the provisions of law with reference to judgments and proceedings in courts of the United States, shall be sufficient evidence that such extension or composition has been confirmed in any suit or proceeding brought against such mortgage companies, persons, firms, or corporations who shall hold or have guaranteed or insured the payment of such debts, or any part of them, whether secured on real estate or otherwise.

In other words, if some insurance company or some bonding company has guaranteed the payment of a $5,000 mortgage and the mortgagor takes advantage of this section of the bankruptcy act and succeeds in convincing the court that he is in financial difficulty and without relief the mortgage will be foreclosed, and the court finds that is equitable and not going to interfere with the payment of his debt ultimately, but is going to be merely a postponement of that debt-and I assume the court, in doing it, will not postpone it for a very long time, for fear that if they do postpone it for a very long time they may possibly prevent the mortgagee from collecting the whole of his debt-if the court takes that action, if the Congress adopts this provision which we have recommended, and writes it into this law, in an instance like that it would be manifestly unfair to permit that mortgagee to be able to go to the company that had guaranteed his mortgage and compel that company to pay perhaps the full face value of the mortgage as well as the interest, when in the meantime the court has stepped in and said to the mortgagee, "You can not collect your debt."

So, at the proper time, I shall offer that as an amendment. I think that helps the situation very much and relieves the anxiety of a great many of the concerns that are holding these mortgages.

In order for such secured creditor to be so affected it becomes necessary for the debtor to take into consideration the amount of such secured debt when he undertakes to get a majority in number and a majority in amount to consent to his proposal. That fact alone perhaps takes away from this bill a great benefit which a great many people believed was in it; and I think it is important that nobody should be deceived with respect to the effect of it.

What I have in mind in the language that I have used I will undertake to illustrate.

If there be a person who owes a $3,000 mortgage and $4,000 of unsecured debts, and that $4,000 is distributed among four people, as an illustration, the whole amount being $7,000, it would be necessary for him to get a majority in number and amount—namely, more than $3,500—before he could in any way affect this secured creditor. If he can get a majority in number and amount, and can convince the court that his proposal is not an inequitable thing for the mortgagee, under this bill the mortgagee may be compelled to withhold his foreclosure proceeding until the end of the time the court has specified.

On the other hand, suppose it be a debtor that has a $3,000 mortgage and $2,000 of unsecured debts. Then, before he can take advantage of this provision of this section in a way that will affect the secured creditor, he must get the secured creditor to agree, because, the secured creditor having three-fifths of the whole indebtedness, he can not under this act do anything without getting his consent.

So to that extent I take it that a lot of people who hope to get relief under this bill, if they have in mind holding back the foreclosure of the mortgage, will be greatly disappointed; but it seems to me we have gone just as far to relieve the debtor as it is possible to go without destroying the creditor.

In these days there is much talk and much effort being made to secure moratoriums on mortgages. The bill presented here makes no pretense of doing any such thing, and in that respect it may be disappointing to many persons. It is not expected that this bill will work any wonders. The chances are all of its provisions will not be applicable to more than a small percentage of the distressed debtors, but it is believed that it reaches a sufficient number to warrant the Senate giving immediate and careful consideration to it.

In this connection I desire to point out that in the House bill there was a provision for the extension of time of the payment of debts, both secured and unsecured, without the consent of any of the creditors of the debtor. It would be necessary, however, as stated in that measure, before the court could confirm any such proposal, that it should be made to appear that the debtor's plan was a feasible method of financial rehabilitation and that it was to the best interest of all of the creditors. It seemed to the committee that it ought to be as easy to convince a majority in number and amount of the creditors that the plan suggested by the debtor was for the best interest of all of the creditors and thus get their written consent as it would be to convince the court. But there are additional reasons for not approving any such plan. It would be unfair to impose any such responsibility upon referees or Federal judges, or any other human being, for that matter. Federal judges, as a rule, might, if they had time to investigate and thoroughly consider the matter, be relied upon to do justice between a debtor and his creditor, but in these distressing times, with debtors striving to hold on to their property until conditions improve, the job of deciding whether there was merit in the debtor's application would be too great for human endurance. The result would be utter confusion. The Federal courts would be flooded with applications and the bitter feeling of disappointed and incensed debtors greatly increased.

Paragraph (o) of the House bill sets up a new schedule of fees. It provides that the clerk shall receive $2, and if the total assets of the estate amount to no more than $10,000, the referee shall receive $10, and the filing fee in each case shall be $5, making a total fee of $17 in the case of a debtor having $10,000 of assets.

Bearing in mind such an estate might have several hearings and numerous creditors and thus involve a great amount of work, it is believed that to so limit the amount charged would greatly handicap the administration of this section. In the amendment proposed by the committee this section has been stricken from the House bill.

Somewhere, I think in paragraph (m) of that section, there is a provision written into the bill which would enable the court to fix the fees not exceeding those fixed by the old bankruptcy act, and we have reached the conclusion that with that proviso, which I had overlooked at the time I prepared these remarks, the bill will properly take care of the expenses, and that these amounts written in by the House are probably not sufficient to enable the act properly to be administered.

Mr. President, I think I have covered that particular section, and I want to take up the next section recommended by the committee-that is, section 75, which relates to agricultural composition and extension.

SECTION 75. AGRICULTURAL COMPOSITIONS AND EXTENSIONS

This section in many respects follows section 74 relative to individual debtors. There are some very important differences, however, to which I desire to call attention.

As section 74 was originally drawn it included the farmer and gave him all of the advantages that were given to the individual debtor. The section now presented to the Senate provides that upon the application of 15 farmers in any one county, the district court having jurisdiction of that territory shall appoint a referee, who shall be known as a conciliation commissioner. The act provides that he shall be familiar with agricultural conditions but shall not be engaged in the farm-mortgage business, the business of financing farmers, or transactions in agricultural commodities, or the business of marketing or dealing in agricultural commodities, or the furnishing of agricultural supplies.

It also provides that the district court may, if it be found necessary or desirable, appoint a suitable person as a supervising conciliation commissioner.

I may say that, having drawn this section which pertained to the farmer alone, we struck out of the section relating to the individual the word "farmer," leaving this as the only section that would give the farmer relief. But upon further consideration, although no change has yet been made in the bill, I am satisfied that we should not leave it in that condition, because there may be, and I think and hope there are, many farmers in this country who would not be able to it. I have no doubt but that the section can be improved avail themselves of this section, because it provides, in the first place, that there shall be 15 in number in a single county before the judge is authorized to appoint such conciliation commissioner. But that is a matter of detail, which can be taken care of at any time.

Paragraph (q) provides that the conciliation commissioner shall upon request assist the farmer in preparing and filing his petition, and in all matters subsequent thereto arising under this section, and that the farmer shall not be required to be represented by an attorney in any proceedings under the section.

It has been alleged in the criticism of this plan that the selection of a conciliation commissioner who, for the purpose of this section, is a referee in bankruptcy, is the selection of a judge who is bound, under the circumstances, to have more sympathy for the debtor than he has for the creditor. The advice of the conciliation commissioner is sought by the farmer in the first instance; he is directed under the measure to prepare the necessary petitions of the farmer, and the farmer is not required to be represented by an attorney in any proceedings under this section.

It is contended that in a contest between a person who claims to be a creditor and the farmer, the conciliation commissioner acting as a judge will, because of his previous conferences with the farmer, be in a disagreeable position.

Another objection to this plan is that before a farmer can get any relief under either of these sections, it will be necessary for him to get 14 other farmers, living in his county, to join him in making his original application for the appointment of a conciliation commissioner. This objection can be remedied by so modifying the section relative to the individual debtor as to permit the farmer to make application under its provisions, if he so desires. I referred to that just a moment ago.

The object of the appointment of a conciliation commissioner is to make it less difficult for the farmer to obtain relief under this bill. There is another important reason also. This bill provides that the conciliation commissioner shall receive for his services the total sum of $10, paid out of the Treasury of the United States. At the time of the filing of the petition the farmer must deposit $10 toward the payment of all other expenses in connection with his application. In view of the fact that the costs of the referee are taken care of by the Federal Government, and that no provision is made for the appointment of a trustee, the only other actual expenses would be the cost of subpænaing and paying witnesses in case of a contest of some kind. It is believed by the committee that the $10 paid by the farmer will pay all of these expenses. The cost to the Federal Government, therefore, would be $10 in each case, plus the expenses of a supervising conciliation commissioner if any such were appointed, who under the act is to be paid not more than $5 per day, plus his actual expenses; this to be paid out of the Federal Treasury also.

It will be observed that this schedule of fees is probably considerably less than the fees recommended by the committee in the section referring to individual debtors.

There is another difference in the operation of these two sections. It is not contemplated that any trustee shall be appointed for the farmer and, therefore, the physical possession of his property will be left with him. We have provided that the court shall exercise such control over the property as the court finds necessary, thus the technical legal title to the farmer's property may be temporarily taken from him.

That, of course, is quite necessary and quite important, because if we take the technical title away from him, then he is in the position of acting as his own trustee; and if he takes things and does anything with them without the consent of the court, he would become criminally liable.

Some very definite objections to this whole section were raised in the Judiciary Committee, and I am hoping that it will be adequately debated and carefully considered, as I am sure it will be, before any definite action is taken upon upon, and I shall gladly cooperate in any effort in this | bers of the Senate may have different views upon this subdirection.

Mr. President, I thought it would save time for me to prepare, in part, at least, what I desired to say with respect to this bill. I covered the two sections which were before the Senate. But I think it desirable that I should at the same time explain the importance of these other two sections.

I think the adoption of the section pertaining to the railroads is the more important of the two, and for two reasons.

As I have stated, I think the adoption of the section pertaining to the railroads is the more important of the two, and for two reasons. First, the railroads are a public necessity; and secondly, they are not so readily adaptable to equity receiverships as are ordinary corporations. 'An equity receivership, as everyone knows, requires an ancillary receiver in every jurisdiction where the railroad corporation has property. In addition to that, the railroad must continue to be operated, and the operation under such a complicated scheme is frightfully expensive and necessarily less efficient.

The section proposed gives to the Federal court in the jurisdiction where the railroad has its principal offices, or where it has its domicile, control over the entire property of the railroad, regardless of where it may be located. This means that one receiver or one trustee is all it is necessary to appoint in order to control the whole operation of that particular road.

The section, as prepared by this committee, is, we believe, amply safeguarded. We have not overlooked the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is intended to have a great control over the railroads of the Nation. We have therefore provided that every debtor railroad desiring relief under this section shall, after filing its petition with the court, submit such plan of reorganization to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Full powers are given that commission to hear the railroad representatives and its creditors upon any plan proposed. The commission may approve the plan proposed, change it, if it finds it desirable, or it may adopt a plan proposed by the creditors. Special direction is given to the commission to approve no plan unless it is equitable and in the interest of the public. If the plan approved by the commission shall be accepted by two-thirds of any class of debtors, it shall immediately be binding upon that whole class. Ample provision is made for the class of creditors who do not accept the plan, whereby an appraisal of the value of their claims may be had, and thereupon they shall be paid in cash or securities that are equal to cash.

I think, as now drawn, we have stricken out the provision referring to securities which are equal to cash.

It has been pointed out that, under the present conditions, it is not possible for a railroad corporation to make any adjustment with any class of security holders because of its inability to get all of them to agree to the plan. It is well known that there are always some creditors who refuse to join in corporate reorganization, hoping and believing that they can thereby secure for themselves a greater amount for their holdings than is being given the group that is willing to make such readjustments.

There are some details in the bill which it might be necessary to discuss. I shall for the moment touch upon only two or three of the most controversial ones.

In the bill as it passed the House it is provided that the judge can not appoint a trustee under this section unless such trustee has been recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Our committee changed that and provided that the commission should select a panel of trustees, from which the judge might select one or more. It also provided that the judge might select one not mentioned in the panel, provided such selection was approved by the commission. The question has been raised as to whether it would be possible for the commission to select a panel beforehand from which a desirable trustee could be selected under the terms of the bill. A temporary trustee is to be appointed as soon as the bill is filed in the court. This becomes necessary in order to preserve the property and prevent equity suits being brought by the creditors. Mem-ject, but, in my judgment, it is not important enough to justify delay in passing the bill. Finally, we have stricken it all out and left a provision which I have prepared, and left it entirely to the court in the selection of the trustee.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRAZIER in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator's suggestion implies that the Judiciary Committee had done something respecting the railroad provision and the corporation provision. I do not believe the Senator intends to imply that the Judiciary Committee took any action upon those provisions.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator evidently did not hear the beginning of my address in which I explained clearly that the Judiciary Committee had not done any of these things and had not given them consideration. The only thing I said with respect to the Judiciary Committee was that it could not be said—and could not be inferred from the action of the Judiciary Committee—that that committee was opposed to either of the sections or does not fully realize the importance of their adoption.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator does not imply that the Judiciary Committee considered those two sections in any respect in reporting out the bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have with the greatest care tried to make it clear that the Judiciary Committee is not responsible in any sense for the two sections.

Mr. BLAINE. What the Senator is now reporting are his own views and not the views of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct. Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield. Mr. BRATTON. The Senator pointed out the differences between the House bill and the bill prepared by the Senator with respect to the appointment of trustees. I understood him to say that now he has stricken out everything and left the appointment of the trustee entirely to the judgment of the court.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BRATTON. When and where was that done?

Mr. HASTINGS. May I say to the Senator in reply that I am now talking about an amendment which I myself am introducing and for which I am wholly responsible. I did not intend to imply that any other member of the committee was responsible for it in any way. If I gave any such impression it was not intentional. The amendment which I expect to offer to the bill with respect to the railroads has not had the approval of even the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. The full committee having instructed me to report to the Senate the two sections, and there being such pressure on me by Members of the Senate and others to see whether it is possible to have adopted the railroad section in particular and the corporate reorganization section if possible, I have given considerable time in trying to perfect that amendment to meet the various views of many persons, hoping that by meeting those views it would be possible for me to get them through the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the full committee considered the railroad reorganization section at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. It has not. In presenting the matter to the Senate the Senate does not have the advantage of the matured consideration of the Judiciary Committee upon this subject.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Senator another question? Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I know the Senator has given a great deal of time, study, and thought to the subject. I would like to of that particular provision? I am asking only for the purpose of emphasizing that I think it will be difficult for the Senate in the closing days of the session to pass upon so complex a proposition.

Mr. HASTINGS. I can not give the Senator accurate information, but I can say that there are not enough days left in this Congress for the Senate to give as much time to it as I have given.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator from Delaware whether he thinks such an important piece of legislation as the two sections he is now discussing, and which he has offered as an amendment to the bill, should be disposed of in the closing hours of the Congress without their first having been considered by a committee?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the Senate may very well doubt that. If I may be permitted, I should like to proceed and explain the sections, a thing I did not originally intend to do, but I think I can do it in a little while. If I might be permitted to explain the two sections that I expect to propose as an amendment to the bill, I shall then suggest to the Senate that we dispose of the two sections which were submitted by the committee to the Senate, and then, and not until then. I will undertake to take much of the time of the Senate on the other two proposals. That is the way I would like to see it work out, but I would like to invite attention to my proposed sections while I am on the subject and would like to explain them. I want to comment also upon the importance of having some legislation at this session upon the subject matters covered by them.

Let me say to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and to other Senators that the railroad section, as I expect to present it to the Senate, is not of my own creation, certainly not solely my own creation. The Solicitor General has given much time to it and has assisted me in talking to lawyers all over the country who found objections to it. He has taken it up with the representative of the railroad executives and with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it has been changed from time to time to meet the objections and suggestions that have been made by the various groups. In that group was also a representative of the New York group which has been studying the railroad situ-

As I believe I said, the amendment which I shall propose strikes out the selection of any panel of trustees and deprives the Interstate Commerce Commission of having anything to do with it, because, after a good many conferences in regard to it, it was believed that it would be easier to select a person for a particular railroad job than it would be to undertake to select a panel and take the chance of that panel including the man who was particularly qualified for it.

In that connection let me invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the moment the bill is filed, without knowing whether it is possible to get the necessary votes of the creditors to put any plan through, but the moment it is filed by the corporation, a trustee is appointed for the purpose of preserving the property.

In that same connection I might point out that it is not left alone to the railroad to present the bill to the court declaring itself insolvent or unable to meet its debts and that it is desirable to have reorganization, but 5 per cent of the indebtedness of the railroad as shown by its last report may take such action-not, however, until the matter has been heard by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is, a minority group can not go and make difficulties for the railroad without first having submitted their objections and their ideas to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission undoubtedly knows more about the condition of all the railroads than any other one agency in the Government, or outside of the Government for that matter. So there are two ways in which the matter ask the Senator how long he has taken in his preparation | may be brought to the court. But, whenever it is brought, there must instantly be appointed, at least temporarily, a trustee. I do not know whether it is advisable to have the Interstate Commerce Commission submit a panel of trustees or not. That is certainly not important enough to defeat the measure.

Another change made in the House bill referred to "special masters." The House provided that six special masters should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and from such a panel so selected the judge should pick a special master if it became necessary to appoint anyone to aid him. The report on the House bill by the Judiciary Committee indicates that the purpose of this plan was to build up a group of specialists upon this subject who would be more efficient than persons who might be selected by the district court.

The House provided that such special masters shall not receive salaries, but shall be allowed fees for their services. Bearing in mind that such special masters in order to be helpful to the court ought to be outstanding lawyers, and realizing that outstanding lawyers would not give up their practice and sit around and wait to be selected from such a panel it was believed that the worthy object which the House had in mind could not be thus realized. In order, however, to avoid the possibility of a district judge selecting some person that he desired to favor instead of the person who could best do the work, the alternative suggestion has been written into the Senate section, providing for the selection by the circuit court in each of the 10 circuits of a panel of three, from which the district judge might make his selection. This plan has the additional advantage of having a person selected in the circuit where the litigation is pending. It was believed that it would be less expensive to take a person from the circuit where his work would be close to his own office than it would be to perhaps drag him across the continent in order to perform the same service.

Just here it might be well to state that the general impression that receivers, trustees, and special masters are treated too liberally by the district courts has been considered and in order that the Federal judges may be relieved of some such responsibility, provision is made that these fees shall be reviewed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the maximum amount fixed by it. This certainly ought to be a sufficient safeguard.

The bill, with respect to the corporate reorganization, is somewhat along the same lines except, of course, the Interstate Commerce Commission is not mentioned in connection with it. Under the corporate reorganization section there are two ways in which the matter can be gotten into court. The debtor corporation may make the application stating that it is insolvent or unable to meet its obligations as they mature, and that it desires to present a plan to its creditors for reorganization. The other way is if there be creditors of the corporation who file an involuntary petition of bankruptcy against that corporation alleging that it is bankrupt and so on; then in such instances the debtor may, in its answer, set up the same things which it could set up if it were filing a petition in the first instance. Those are the two ways in which the debtor gets into the court under this

Then, adequate provision is made for the appointment of a trustee if it be found necessary and for notices to be sent to creditors, and so on.

There is one paragraph in that section about which some complaint has been made, a complaint which I think is not well founded when read in connection with the whole bill. There is a provision for the submission of the plan to the creditors of the corporation at any meeting called for that purpose. That plan may be submitted by the debtor; it may be submitted by the creditor; it may be submitted by a stockholder; but, in order to present any plan at all, there must be obtained the consent of 10 per cent of the creditors of the corporation. The purpose of writing that provision in the bill was to save time and prevent a multitude of plans being suggested without having very much back of them.

Just as is done in the railroad section, in this section it ! is made necessary for the debtor to secure two-thirds in number of any class of creditors. Having gotten two-thirds of such number that class is bound. In the railroad section I did not mention, I think that two-thirds of any class bind the whole class and compel them to accept even though they be secured creditors. There has been much controversy with respect to that provision, though not so much in the case of the railroad section as in the case of the corporate section. To most of us it seems desirable that the twothirds shall be compelled to bind the one-third; but, bearing in mind always that the minority must be protected, in the corporate reorganization section we have provided for an appraisal of that one-third value which is left out and the payment of that one-third in cash, putting such creditors in the same class in which are put the class of creditors where the consent of two-thirds is not obtained. I am not sure that I have made myself clear with respect to that, and I will repeat a portion of it.

If there are three classes of creditors in a railroad corporation—I am taking a railroad in this instance—and two-thirds of the number in the first class agree to the plan and two-thirds in the second class agree to the plan but only 50 per cent of the third class agree to it, the first class and the second class are bound, but no one in the third class is bound. Then, under the proposed act, the court undertakes to appraise that property, as it appraises property under the old bankruptcy act, and pays to those in the third class in cash.

When we come to the corporate reorganization section we have not written such provision in it, because we were afraid to do so, believing that there would be serious objection to it; and I myself do not know whether I am for it or against it. In the case of the corporate reorganization section this arrangement is provided: There are the same three classes. If two-thirds of the first class agree and two-thirds of the second class agree, the other one-third in both of those classes are put in the same position as those in the third class where a two-thirds majority is not obtained, and under those circumstances an effort is made to appraise the value of the holdings of those minority groups and to pay them in cash. This applies, however, to secured creditors only.

It has been argued by lawyers who are engaged in reorganizing corporations that unless we make it possible for the creditors voting two-thirds to bind the one-third, then the bill will not amount to anything. I disagree with that view; I do not believe it is correct at all; but, with these two thoughts passing through my mind, I undertook to find some sort of a compromise between the two. So I have written into one of the bills a provision to the effect that instead of being compelled to pay cash to the one-third of the creditors, in either instance, or the whole class that objects in another instance, instead of being compelled to go out in the market and raise the cash I have provided that if the judge should find it desirable he might compel them to take marketable securities which were equivalent to cash.

I have been convinced, after much criticism of that provision, that it probably did not amount to very much and that we are back to where we were, either to the point of permitting two-thirds to control the whole class or to let the one-third have an opportunity to have the property appraised and get their money in cash.

Mr. President, there is one other provision in this bill that is very controversial. The House wrote into the bill a provision to the effect that none but natural persons should be appointed receivers or trustees under this bill, except that for certain reasons appearing wise to the court, he might appoint a corporation, but that should not be done in a multiplicity of cases. That provision was written in the bill for one specific purpose. That purpose was to prevent the judges in the southern district of New York, there being eight of those judges, from appointing a certain trust company as permanent receiver in all bankruptcy cases.

It is stated that that practice has been going on now for some years, that there are as many as 5,000 such cases, and that the courts referred to have a standing rule appointing one particular trust company receiver in bankruptcy cases. As we hear about that, and if we do not happen to know anything about it, it strikes us as more or less of a shocking thing for a court to do, and in the city of New York there is a very great feeling with respect to it among the judges and among the members of the bar, the judges, on the one hand, with many members of the bar agreeing with them, and a great many members of the bar disagreeing with them. The courts call attention to the fact that some two or three years ago there was a scandal in New York City with respect to bankruptcy cases, and the court was compelled to adopt some such drastic rule as this in order amply to protect the creditors of bankrupts' assets. The lawyers, on the other hand, say in reply that those irregularities grew out of the delinquencies of one Federal judge, who subsequently resigned; that the bar associations of New York City have spent $75,000 of their own money cleaning up that particular mess; and that, having been as patriotic as that, having taken that much pride in their own profession, it is cruel and wrong for the courts now to take away from them that which under normal conditions would be a part of their

There is much to be said, and much has been said, about that contention. Every day and several times a day I have been importuned with respect to it. There are Members of Congress who are insisting upon one thing and the Federal judges and a number of very excellent lawyers in New York who are insisting upon another. My own judgment is that under the present plan the creditors receive a greater sum out of the bankruptcy proceedings than they otherwise would, but I hesitate to put myself in a position of supporting what appears on its face to be a monopoly; and so I am in great distress with respect to it.

I have undertaken to reach some compromise with respect to that provision, and I have written into the amendment which I propose to offer a provision which I think may be reasonably satisfactory. That provision prohibits the court from adopting any such rule and leaves the individual judge to follow the practice, if he may think it is wise, or to follow some other practice if he thinks it unwise. That is my recommendation with respect to this subject. It is the only way of which I know to get out of it.

Mr. President, I may say in conclusion-

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has pointed out some of the serious objections that have been raised to the corporate and railway provisions of the amendment which he proposes to offer. I should like to ask the Senator if the Judiciary Committee has given any close study to the general question of public policy involved in permitting a railway corporation or any other corporate entity to become a voluntary bankrupt?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know how many members of the committee have done so, but the committee, as a whole, has not. The committee, as a whole, has not considered either the railroad section or the corporate reorganization section.

Mr. GEORGE. Wholly aside from all the objections about which the Senator is talking, does he not think that the Judiciary Committee ought to give very careful consideration to the broad question of policy involved in permitting in a respite law voluntary bankruptcy on the part of a corporation—any sort of a corporation, but particularly a corporation such as a public carrier? There is a moral restraint, however the law may be framed, against the individual going into bankruptcy or taking shelter under a debtor's respite law of any character, but there is not any moral restraint at all operating on the conscience of a corporation when it is offered shelter under such a device—if I may refer to it as a device—as these two sections, just from a hurried reading of them, impress me as being.

I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I should like to know if the committee has passed upon this broad and, as I think, all-controlling question of public policy. The Senator, I understand, says the committee has

Now I want to ask the Senator with reference to the individual provisions; that is, the sections that permit the individual or the farmer to come in. I did not have the opportunity of hearing all that the Senator said, and I do not find anything in the report on this particular question.

The individual debtor, or, let us say, farmer, may avail himself of the protection afforded by this part of the bill, and he may stay all proceedings by secured creditors. As I understand, of course the lien of the secured creditor is in no wise affected, but the manner and method and time of procedure on the part of the creditor are under the control of the court. I believe that is correct.

Take the ordinary case of the secured creditor who holds a lien against the property of the individual, but who also has the guaranty of a guaranty company for the payment of interest or discharge of the lien. Is there any provision in the bill which would protect that guarantor, or would he simply be left out in the cold while his debtor went in under the stay law and had the protection of the court?

Mr. HASTINGS. Some time earlier in my remarks I called attention to and read what I later proposed that would take care of that guarantor.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear the Senator. I was wondering about that, because frequently the guarantor would be called upon to make payment of maturing interest, but, of course, his hands would be stayed. He could not call on the debtor, because the debtor would have the protection of the court.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it would be admitted that that ought to be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator stated earlier in his remarks, when the Senator from Georgia was absent. that it was his intention to offer certain language which he read to the Senate, covering the point which the Senator has raised.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear that. I was anxious about it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, may I say in reply to the Senator's suggestion that, of course, I think it is unfortunate that the Senate does not have before it, when it comes to consider a bill of this importance, the benefit of the most careful study by the whole Judiciary Committee. I for one should have hesitated about trying to get a report from the committee to the Senate without that careful study except for the fact that since it was known that I was chairman of the subcommittee considering this matter it has been urged upon me so often and so vigorously by all classes of people, and I have been so impressed with the statements that the chances were that it would go a long way toward helping us out of our present condition, that I have been willing at least to give whatever time I could give to it, and to bring it to the Senate and discuss it as frankly as I could with the Senate, in the hope that with a frank discussion of the measure and a study by the Senators who would interest themselves in it, as most of them undoubtedly will, for a period of three or four days, it would be possible for us at this session of the Congress to pass a bill that would be perfectly safe and would, after all, be well considered, although it did not have the advantage of the study of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sure that I appreciate the attitude of the Senator; and I appreciate his desire to open up any defensible avenue of escape for the railway companies, or other corporations for that matter, in this great emergency. I must remind the Senator, however, that those of us who are not members of the Judiciary Committee probably have followed our usual custom, especially under the pressure of this hard session, and have shunted aside everything that | Chair.

came to our desks about this important suggestion, in reliance upon the advice of the full committee finally upon all of the questions.

I find myself in that position; and I wanted to know if the committee had given consideration to what seems to me to be the first, primary consideration with reference to these particular provisions. I am not suggesting, however, that the Senator is not prepared to give us the same information that the full committee would, and I am sure I can say to the Senator that I know that his desire is to present to the Senate a measure that may be of real help to the industry and commerce of the country at this time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I might say, in further reply to the Senator, that it was suggested to me yesterday that it was perfectly possible to have this bill rushed through the Senate. It was believed that the Senate was in a frame of mind to legislate, and this was a good opportunity to get this bill through.

It may be, and I think it usually is, in the Senate, that we depend upon our committees. I know it is with respect to my own attitude. I depend largely upon the committees, and I follow the recommendations of the committee unless I have heard the debate and have made up my mind that the committee was wrong with respect to the matter under consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to make a suggestion which I believe may meet the approval of the Senator from Delaware and which I am certain will be gratifying to a number of Senators, including some who are members of the Judiciary Committee.

The Senator has said that it is his purpose to proceed with the two sections that have been reported by the committee, and with that policy I am in hearty accord.

May I suggest to the Senator that it be at least tentatively understood that when those two sections have been disposed of and agreed upon, if an agreement is reached, it may then be practicable to lay aside temporarily the bill and take up some other matter, so as to afford an opportunity for a further study of the two sections that were eliminated by the action of the Judiciary Committee.

I am convinced, if I may make that statement now, that it is very desirable and essential that some provision be incorporated with respect to railroad reorganizations. It is not my intention to go into a discussion of that subject at this time, but I think the Senate will desire an opportunity to pass upon it.

If we can dispose of these two sections to-day and then take up some other matter, laying aside the bill temporarily, and let the remaining two sections go over so as to afford that opportunity for study which I think we all admit is necessary, I believe it will tend to strengthen the bill, particularly in relationship to the two sections referred to.

I think I ought to add this:

I am among those who have been pressing for action on this bill, particularly as it relates to the farmer. As stated by the Senator from Delaware, I offered the amendment that was incorporated with certain changes as section 75 of the pending bill; and the Senator from Delaware worked day and night in his effort to get action and to bring the subject matter before the Senate. He is to be highly commended for the diligence he has shown. At the same time, other members of the committee and Members of the Senate have not had opportunity to make a study, particularly of the corporate-reorganization and railroad-reorganization sections; and it seems to me that in the interest of effective action it might be well to dispose of the two sections first referred to by the Senator, the one relating to individual and the other to farmer compositions, and postpone until to-morrow consideration of the other sections.

How does that appeal to the Senator?

Mr. BRATTON and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.
Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I appreciate the indulgence of the Senator from Delaware in order that I may make a brief statement with respect to my attitude touching these two sections—the one relating to corporate reorganization and the other relating to railroad reorganization.

Permit me to say in a preliminary way that I commend the Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the subcommittee, for the extraordinary diligence with which he has handled the measure. The bill was referred to a subcommittee of three members, the Senator from Delaware being chairman, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Hebert] and I being the other two members.

The Senator from Delaware has devoted himself industriously and energetically to the bill; but I have given it very little consideration, and I think the same is true of the Senator from Rhode Island. In fact, the chairman of the committee prepared and gave to the Senator from Rhode Island and to me each a copy of a tentative report of his consideration of the measure, such report reaching us only two or three days before the bill was reported to the full committee.

So, Mr. President, in the final analysis of the situation, only one member of the Judiciary Committee has given prolonged consideration to this important measure. As a member of the subcommittee and as a member of the full Committee on the Judiciary, I do not think we would be justified in passing during the closing days of this session a measure so far-reaching in its effects as the section touching railroad reorganization.

Entertaining that belief, I made a motion in the full committee that those two sections be dropped from the measure—that is to say, the one touching corporate reorganizations, the other touching railroad reorganizations—and that the remaining two sections, dealing with individual debtors and farmers, be reported to the Senate.

We are in the closing days of a strenuous session of Congress, one which has exacted heavy duties of every Member of this body. This measure is far-reaching in its possibilities. It is my judgment that action on the corporate-reorganization section and on the railroad-reorganization section should be deferred.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware give me leave to make a statement for the benefit of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The provisions that have been stricken out by the action of the Judiciary Committee having relation to corporate reorganizations and railroad reorganizations are in the House bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And, of course, they will be in conference, no matter what may be the policy of the Senate in striking them out.

It was my thought that perhaps, if the Senate should avail itself of the suggestion which I made a few moments ago, greater freedom of action could be assured the conferees if the Senate were afforded the opportunity to pass on the amendments which the Senator from Delaware has worked out, and which he has stated it is his purpose to offer on the floor, in order that the Senate might have the opportunity of determining that question and the further question as to the relative merits of the House provision—which, as I have stated, will be in conference anyway—and the amendments which the Senator from Delaware expects to propose. I think it would be sound policy, if we can do so, to consider those amendments so as to liberalize the powers of the conferees.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me for just a moment? Then I shall not trespass further on his time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, whatever action the Senate takes should be taken with all of the deliberation available to us in the closing days of the session. I freely concede that, and while legislation on this subject may be both important and necessary, I still doubt whether the Senate has available to it now sufficient time to enable it to give to this legislation the consideration it deserves and demands.

I hope very much, therefore, that we may defer action on these two sections until the Senate may have available to it enough time so that at least several members may devote themselves to it with interest and devotion comparable to the industry with which the Senator from Delaware has applied himself to the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I make a suggestion for the consideration of Senators who are interested in this measure? I agree with everything that has been said by the Senators who have spoken concerning the importance of the legislation under consideration. My understanding is, however, that the Committee on the Judiciary reported the pending amendment with the understanding that it was not possible, in the time remaining, to pass upon the section dealing with corporations and the section dealing with railroads.

If it is desired—and if the Senate feels that it is necessary—that these two important sections of the bill should be acted upon at this session, may I suggest the advisability of recommitting the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary without further debate, permitting that committee to take up and consider the two amendments which the Senator from Delaware has offered, thus affording some agency to act for the Senate which will be enabled to draw into the discussion and into the work of perfecting those amendments persons outside of the Senate who have given a great deal of study to these two sections of the bill, and whose advice in the matter, I think, will be very helpful to the Senate.

The only objection I see to the suggestion offered by the Senator from Arkansas is that if we lay this matter aside there will be no group of Senators upon whom will be fixed the direct responsibility of attempting to pass upon these two important sections of the bill. In the meantime the Senate will be working upon other matters of importance, and when we come to resume the consideration of the bill we will find ourselves in just the same situation in which we are at the present time.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Senator whether or not the provisions of the bill, aside from the two under consideration, are of sufficient importance to justify the Senate's acting upon them and passing them without immediate consideration of the two which are now being discussed?

Mr. HASTINGS. My own judgment is that there are Members in the House and Members in the Senate some of whom believe that the first section is the most important section in the bill. There are others who believe that the section relating to the farmer is the most important section in the bill. There are others who believe that the corporate reorganization section is the most important, and many believe that the railroad section is the most important of them all.

As I have stated, the Committee on the Judiciary did not undertake to state which was the more important and which was the less important, but, following the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico, the Committee on the Judiciary directed that those be presented to the Senate which seemed to be less controversial than any others, and which could be explained very much more easily and could be understood by the Senate very much more easily than the other two sections.

I have gotten myself into this great difficulty here with respect to the two sections by undertaking to go through with an explanation of the whole bill in the first instance. What I intended to do was not exactly what the Senator from Arkansas suggested, but I did not intend that the Senate should get into any controversy or argument with respect to the corporate and railroad sections, until we had passed upon that which had been recommended by the committee.

Having gotten that much done, I, of course, am not in a position to insist, and will not for a moment insist, that the Senate act upon these two sections which the Committee on the Judiciary did not have an opportunity to pass upon, unless the Senate agrees with me that these things are of such paramount importance that the Senate ought to be willing and ought to endeavor, sitting as a committee of the whole, if you please, to understand these two sections, and to see to it that, if it is possible to do so, the country get whatever advantage is possible from such

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Senator whether or not he wants the bill passed with the two sections out?

Mr. HASTINGS. The question is not what I want done; it is what the committee recommended. I am here representing the committee, and will not knowingly do that which the committee does not want me to do in connection with

Mr. WATSON. From the discussion here of this phase of the subject, I have been led to understand that the committee had made no recommendation.

Mr. HASTINGS. They have made recommendations on two sections, on the two sections which are believed to be least controversial, although one member of the committee is very much opposed to the farm section.

Mr. WATSON. What were the two sections?

Mr. HASTINGS. The individual-debtor section and that which pertains to the farmer alone.

Mr. WATSON. They are of sufficient importance to be passed, are they not, without regard to the others?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no doubt but that they are sufficiently important.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to say just a word in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin about referring the bill back to the Committee on the Judiciary. If that is done, there will be no chance of the bill's being considered any further at this session.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. DILL. Let me call attention to my reason for saying that. The corporate section and the railroad section involve the possibility of reorganizing the capital structure of literally billions of dollars of property of corporations in this country, and it seems to me that the only hope of getting any legislation of this kind is to pass the pending bill, and let the Committee on the Judiciary in the special session which will follow this take up these other matters, because, as one member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I am unprepared to discuss intelligently this subject. I do not know what it involves. I should like to have hearings, and I think other members of the committee would like to have hearings, on these sections, because they are so vast in their ramifications and effects.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to say, in response to the statement made by the Senator from Washington, that I have no desire to prevent action on this subject at this session. What I had in mind was that if the Senate is determined to pass on it, it would be better for the Committee on the Judiciary to take the bill over the week-end, and endeavor to work out something which it could sponsor and recommend, than it would be for us to proceed here on the floor of the Senate to try to write as important a piece of legislation as this. Senators will recall that in connection from the point of view of technical draftsmanship they should bring a blush of shame to the face of every Senator who has anything to do with them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin realize, as stated by the Senator from Washington, that to recommit the bill means no bill for this sessionmeans its defeat, unalterably and definitely?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will permit, I do not believe that is true. I believe that if the bill were sent back to the Committee on the Judiciary to-day and they were given an opportunity to study the amendments offered by the Senator from Delaware to-morrow and over the week-end, on Monday the committee could report back its recommendations in the premises.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will rest the matter on the statements made to me by members of the Committee on the Judiciary, that if the bill be recommitted there can be no action on it during this session. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin has no motive to defer or prevent action. Nevertheless the inevitable effect of his suggestion for a recommittal would be to prevent legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If that be true, Mr. President-with the indulgence further of the Senator from Delaware—may I say that if it is impossible for the 15 members of the Committee on the Judiciary, devoting undivided attention to this matter for two or three days, to work out any solution of it, how much more preposterous it is to suppose that 96 Senators here on the floor of the Senate can write legislation properly drawn to treat with the two important sections the Senator from Delaware has offered?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I was impressed with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas the moment he made it. My correspondence indicates that there is very wide interest in this subject. That section which refers to the farmer is claiming an enormous amount of attention in my section of the country, and I think it is universally conceded that the two sections which are submitted should be passed, if we do not get anything more.

I do think, also, that the two amendments which the Senator from Delaware is proposing are important enough to have a little consideration given to them. We possibly would get farther if we proceeded on the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay the bill aside for a time, after which we could take up the measure and have a discussion of these two items. If we recommit the bill, Senators understand what procedure would be necessary to get it back on the floor, while if it is laid aside, I could call it up at any minute, or any other Member of the Senate, by calling for the regular order, could bring the bill before us immediately.

It seems to me it is worth while, in view of the fact that we want these two sections if we do not get anything more, to give time to consider the other two, but let us not send it back where it could not be gotten before us again and we could not call it up. I am very much impressed with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that if the bill is referred back to the Committee of the Judiciary the result will be no legislation at this session. I agree likewise with the Senator from Washington, that we do not have sufficient time to give thorough consideration to the section relating to railroad reorganization, because it is complicated and involves the capital structure of railroad companies. That was the very reason that moved me to offer the suggestion in the Committee on the Judiciary with important bills where we have attempted to do that, that the two sections, one relating to individual debtors and the other to farmers, be reported to the Senate, and the other two highly complicated sections be dropped until a subsequent time when we would have an opportunity to study them carefully. It seems to me that if we should proceed to consider the two sections now before the Senate and pass the bill in that form, the body at the other end of the Capitol would readily concede that this body had not had adequate time to study the other two sections, and that they would be willing to recede on those two sections, thus allowing those two phases of the legislation to go until the extra session of the Congress. I hope very much that course may be followed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. I would like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if the bill was temporarily laid aside, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], whether it would be feasible for the Judiciary Committee then to proceed to the consideration of the amendment which will be offered by the Senator from Delaware? Every member of the Senate concedes the importance of legislation on the subject, and because of the emergency and of the necessity for the legislation and for its consideration, I wonder if the Judiciary Committee could not proceed to consider that question? They have at hand the hearings held in the House and the discussions there. My opinion is that very careful consideration was given to the matter at the other end of the Capitol and that we have the basis of the measure now in the bill as it came from the House. I ask the Senator whether he thinks it possible for the committee to work it out upon that basis?

Mr. BRATTON. As one member of the committee I do not believe so. The Senator knows the many mistakes that have been made in passing legislation during the closing days of a hard-pressed Congress. We have not dealt with a subject during recent times more comprehensive, more complicated, and more far-reaching in its possibilities than the section relating to railroad reorganization. We could make some tremendous mistakes of serious consequence through hasty action. It seems to me that it is advisable to wait until we have the time to give that particular section the calm, deliberate, cautious study that the public interest requires; at least that is my view.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may we proceed to the consideration of the two sections and then, when those two sections are offered in the form of an amendment, the Senate can reach an agreement as to what it desires to do with them, whether it wants further to consider them or to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas and lay aside the bill. If the Senate wants to do that I shall not object.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement in reference to the situation. I have not been able to take the floor previously because the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has occupied it.

In my judgment we are confronted with a very serious proposition for legislation and I want to give the Senate a picture of what happened in the Judiciary Committee and the viewpoint of that committee that moved them to take the action they did take.

In the first place, everybody concedes the importance of the legislation. I know of no Senator who does not believe we ought to legislate on the subject and on all the subjects included in the bill. It is not because any member of the committee or any other Member of the Senate wanted to avoid that kind of legislation that the Judiciary Committee took the action it did.

I realize, too, that it is not only important but that it is extremely urgent. It is an emergency, perhaps, with which we are confronted. If we look at it in a fair, logical way, we must reach the conclusion, I believe, that we are confronted with an impossibility. Either we must delay the consideration of the legislation or we must act blindly and take the bull by the horns and pass something without knowing what it is. It may be, considering the terrible condition with which the country is confronted, that the latter course would be justified; but if that course is to be taken, then, on behalf of myself as chairman of the Judiciary Committee and on behalf of the committee itself, I want the Senate to act in the light and with the knowledge of what the Judiciary Committee did, or rather failed to do.

So far as I am personally concerned—and this may not apply to other members of the committee—it presents a very embarrassing situation. Perhaps what I am about to say is of itself a criticism of the Judiciary Committee, or more particularly of its chairman. Perhaps it is a justifiable criticism. I do not want to be relieved from any responsibility in that respect. I know that so far as I am concerned, for the last six or seven years I have realized there existed what seemed to me to be an important step in legislation that Congress ought to take, and that was to revise the bankruptcy act. I have in a quite general way given a good deal of consideration to it in times that are past, without ever once attempting to frame a bill that would meet the difficulties of the situation.

It became very urgent in the last session of Congress, because other persons took it up. Recommendations were made that we pass some law upon the subject. I had accumulated some information on the subject. I have never utilized it because it was a physical impossibility for me to give the attention to this important question that it deserves. With my limited ability I was unable to reach a conclusion myself without thorough study, and I have never had time to make such a thorough study as the question requires. Neither have the Judiciary Committee ever had that time.

If we are going to legislate properly on the subject, in my judgment there are quite a number of experts in different parts of the country who ought to be called before the committee in order to give us the benefit of their judgment. There are men in different parts of the United States who have made a study of the question, some of them from a very practical standpoint. I am thinking now of Judge Clark, of New Jersey, Federal district judge, who has given a great deal of attention to it and has practiced in his own court what he thinks ought to be done. Some of the very interesting things he has done ought to be considered by the committee that is framing a law on the subject. The committee ought to have his advice and the benefit of his experience gained from dealing with this question in the eastern part of the United States where so many bankruptcies have occurred and where some of the abuses under the present law came to his notice and under his consideration.

Professor Frankfurter has given a great deal of study to the question. He has written several very illuminating articles and has supplied some Members of the Senate, including myself, with some illuminating discussions of the various phases of the question.

But, Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee have had before them proposed legislation on various subjects that have taken all of their time. In all the time I have been a member of that committee I have never known a session of Congress where there was so much and such varied legislation coming before that committee as has been before it during the last session and the present session. This question is one, but it was never taken up for consideration. It was never reached by the committee. Perhaps we were at fault in not considering it. It may be that somebody else in charge of the committee would have handled it more successfully, and those questions would have been taken up and others which we considered would have been thrown

The general bill on bankruptcy was referred to the Judiciary Committee during the last session of Congress. It was referred to a subcommittee. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], who has just addressed the Senate, was chairman of that subcommittee. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] were other members of the subcommittee. The subcommittee gave a great deal of consideration to the subject. They held very extended hearings and called a great many witnesses before them.

In the meantime the question became more acute. In the meantime at this session of Congress some other particular questions, like the railroad situation and some legislation that it was thought might through bankruptcy proceedings help the farmers of the country, were brought up. They were comparatively new subjects and were referred to the subcommittee. They were considered by the subcommittee.

When the subcommittee reported to the full committee not many days ago, the committee in the best of faith and without ever once trying to indicate or intimate that the subjects proposed for legislation were unimportant or that they were not extremely important or that they ought not to be legislated on, realized that the 4th of March is only a few days away. They believed, and I do not believe anyone can contradict it successfully, that to give attention to these subjects as they ought to be considered would make it a physical impossibility for us to report the bill and expect it to be passed and put on the statute books before the 4th of March.

We were confronted with the fact that on the 4th of March we have to adjourn. There is no escape from it. There is no way we can avoid it. Here came this proposed legislation which was referred to the committee. Realizing that the controversial questions involved in the railroad portion of the bill and in the general corporations portion of the bill were so great that there would be a great deal of the debate both in the Senate and in the House, realizing that only a few days remain of this session and that we have appropriation bills and other legislation that have to be enacted before the 4th of March, the committee decided the way we did, much to our regret, because we felt that we were forced into it. We thought there was no escape from it. We did not want to present to the Senate, and as chairman of the Judiciary Committee I personally did not want to present to the Senate anything on an important subject like this that would come from the committee without the committee having carefully and fully considered it. We did not have the time to consider it and give full and due and proper thought to the varied subjects involved. We knew there would be considerable disagreement among members of the committee as to what ought to be contained in the legislation as it related to railroads and general corporations.

In the meantime we knew, and had known for several years, of the abuses that have been going on, particularly in some of the Federal courts in the East, coming from receiverships. For instance, in one of the courts in New York understand a general order was made appointing the Irving Trust Co. receiver in all cases. When a receivership case came before the court and a receiver was appointed, it automatically meant the Irving Trust Co. The Irving Trust Co. was made the receiver. I understand right now on the dockets of the courts of the city of New York there are cases-and there have been a good many such cases, I am told by members of the bar: I have no personal knowledge of them-where the Irving Trust Co. is both plaintiff and defendant in the same suit. They have to sue themselves and they have to defend when they are sued by themselves. So we may have the Irving Trust Co. as receiver for corporation A, plaintiff, and the Irving Trust Co. as receiver for corporation B, defendant, and so on, something in the manner of the interlocking directors of corporations. These receiverships take on such a form that it only requires a glance to see that there is something wrong with the system.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, let me inquire if the Irving Trust Co. is one of the companies which were listed on the chart which the Senator referred to yesterday?

Mr. NORRIS. It was.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand the Irving Trust Co. is both plaintiff and defendant on the docket of litigated cases?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I wonder how many such instances as that there may be?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how many there may be, but I have been told by members of the bar of New York City that there are a good many.

Mr. LONG. I am wondering how much we are going to lose and what difference it makes what we do lose?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know. I mention that to show the necessity for some legislation.

Mr. President, I agree with every word that is said by Senators when they point to the importance of this bill and the necessity for some legislation of this character, but if anyone will try to go into the bankruptcy statutes and the railroad statutes applying to receiverships he will find that he has on his hands a task of great difficulty which it will be almost impossible to perform to his own satisfaction in one day or one week; it is a mammoth proposition.

So we are going to legislate on the question, probably, and if we shall legislate we are going to have to take a jump in the dark, so far as the Senate is concerned. We may come out all right, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the position taken by the Judiciary Committee. The members of that committee realized the situation; they saw no escape from ill-considered legislation, with the possibility of jokers. We were dealing with legislation affecting some of the biggest corporations in existence, and many of us felt that we ought to deal with this subject with some care; that we ought to make the necessary investigations before we deal with it. On the other hand, comes the claim-and it is a well-founded claim and I do not dispute it—that the railroads particularly are in a terrible condition; that some legislation in regard to receivership ought to be enacted, and that some legislation in regard to corporate reorganization ought to be enacted.

In the case of railroad receiverships I have known, and I think every Senator has known for years, that very great abuses have grown up in many of the Federal courts. Not only in the case of railroads but in the case of other corporations judges have appointed some favored person as receiver and some other favored person as attorney for this corporation and that corporation and the next corporation, and later allowed them large fees. I have only to call the attention of the Senate to the receivership case of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad several years ago, a matter which has been referred to many times on the floor of the Senate. In that instance receivers were appointed and attorneys were appointed and enormous fees were allowed to receivers and enormous fees were allowed to the attorneys, and also bonuses were given at the end, often $50,000, $60,000, or $75,000, all paid out of the bankrupt's property. Rather sometimes it is a system of confiscation, under which the small creditor gets nothing, and the big corporation which starts the receivership proceeding expects to freeze out a whole lot of the little fellows. That is an important matter to consider. No man can deny that a condition of that kind ought to be rectified, and ought to be rectified by legislation, although by proper practice the judges of the Federal courts, if they in real good faith exercised their judgment under the law as it stands now, could put an end to 95 per cent of these abuses.

It often happens that a railroad or other corporation is thrown into the hands of a receiver intentionally by some of the alleged stockholders or bondholders, with the idea of freezing out the smaller holders of bonds and of stocks. They get the advice of the ablest lawyers in the world to bring about a condition under which they will be enabled to ask and obtain the appointment of a receiver. Then when the receiver is appointed, the judge has very often appointed as receivers the very men who wrecked the institution, and, in addition to that, has appointed as attorneys for the receivers the men who gave the proper advice so that the corporation could be wrecked, and such receivers and attorneys have been allowed fees that were bigger than they used to get while they were engaged in the wrecking business. These abuses in our judicial procedure stand out like sores on the body politic.

I can see that such conditions ought to be remedied, but we are confronted now with a proposition to remedy them in two or three days; that is what we are up against. We ! can not do it. Much as I should like to do it, it is an impossibility. So we have the choice. I am not advising the Senate which course it should follow. Perhaps we ought to enact this legislation without consideration, on the theory that it may be that we can not make it any worse; but if I could have my way about it, and we had to vote without more consideration, I should like to take the House bill and add to it the amendment applying to the farmers which the Judiciary Committee suggested, let it go at that, and take a chance on it. I want the Senate to know, if there are evils or jokers that afterwards are shown up in this proposed law, if it shall be passed, that at least the Senate had the truth told them through the Judiciary Committee so that the responsibility for anything wrong can not be shouldered upon that committee.

I am not even saying, Senators, that the right way is to pass this legislation and make this jump in the dark, although perhaps that is the best thing to do: but we are confronted with the fact that on the 4th of March all pending bills and proposed legislation of all kinds unacted upon will be dead and we will have to commence over again. So the Judiciary Committee thought they would take the suggested remedy that will help the farmers of the country, although there is some dispute about it; and the benefit which may be derived from it, I think, is vastly overestimated by those who are behind it. I do not look for very great assistance to the farmers even if that provision shall be included in the bill, but I may be wrong. I am willing to take it. We did take it in the Judiciary Committee, and we thought, since it is impossible, for the lack of time alone, to consider the other controversial question, we would legislate on this question and put that through at this session, and at the special session commence on the other work.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, whether or not the full committee considered all the criticisms and suggested changes-a memorandum of which I hold in my hand, comprising quite a lengthy documentmade by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the proposed legislation in reference to the railroads?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the committee did not do so. The Senator has asked a very proper question, and I should like to say to him that the Judiciary Committee had this measure up only at one session. They gave no consideration to any of the items in the bill except the one of which I have spoken. After debating it among themselves for some time, they reached the conclusion which I have tried to make plain to the Senate, that it was a physical impossibility to get this bill through if it was given proper consideration at this session. We are not to blame for the fact that we are proceeding in a short session of Congress. We realize that one man, if the discussion goes along a few days more, can prevent the passage of any legislation if he wants to take advantage of parliamentary procedure and engage in a filibuster, and a few men can defeat any bill now on the calendar before the 4th of March if they want to do it. Realizing that these matters contained bitterly controverted propositions, we decided not to take them up at all, because we believed it would be futile to try to do it. And now, Mr. President, it seems to me that the wise thing to do, if we are going to decide to pass this legislation, would be to pass the House bill with the one amendment to which I have referred. and let it go at that.

Mr. President, I now want to call the attention of the Senate to a sample of what we may expect. I hold in my hand a letter signed by Representative Celler, of New York. It is directed and was sent to the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], but, because of the absence of that Senator, the matter has been referred to me. I only read this letter in order to show what we may expect in the way of controversy. There can be no question about it being honest controversy, and the bill will be full of such controversy.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. As the able chairman of the Judiciary Committee is about to descant upon some of the possible inconsistencies or annoying features of the bankruptcy bill, may I take the liberty to inform him that just now telegrams are coming from my State, Illinois, asking me if this proposed bankruptcy legislation will continue to embrace trust companies and railroads. May I ask the able chairman if he can inform me if the bill is so framed at this time?

Mr. NORRIS. The House bill contains provisions of that kind. They are in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. President, this letter reads:

I invite your attention to the provision of S. 5551, committee print No. 2 (bankruptcy bill), of February 10, 1933, subdivision (0), page 25, which is as follows:

"(0) No court shall by rule require the appointment in any proceeding under the provisions of section 74 or section 75 of this act of any corporate trustee in all or any class of cases which may be brought: Provided, however, That the judge approving the petition or answer in any such proceeding shall not by this provision be restricted in his appointment of any qualified trustee, whether be restricted in his appointment of any qualified trustee, whether corporate or individual."

The companion provision, which I had inserted in the House bankruptcy bill, is as follows:

"(m) Whenever in this act the words 'receiver' or 'trustee' are used, same shall mean a natural person, except, however, upon good cause affirmatively shown by any interested party or parties that it is for the best interests of the debtor or the plan generally, the court may appoint a corporation, but such corporation shall not be appointed in a multiplicity of cases."

Any Senator can see that that controversy between those provisions—the one in the House and the one in the Senateis subject to a great deal of debate. What does "multi-plicity of cases" mean? The evil that they are striking at is the same in both cases. The language to accomplish it is very different. It is doubtful in my mind whether either provision reaches the difficulty. The proviso in one case permits the thing to be done that it makes illegal in the first part of the paragraph; and the other provision makes legal the very thing that is denounced in the first part of the sentence, in my judgment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish this. The Congressman goes

Both these provisions are aimed principally at the monopoly now enjoyed by the Irving Trust Co., of New York, in all receivership cases. The New York State Bar Association, the New York County Lawyers' Association, the Brooklyn Bar, the Federal Bar, and all county bar associations in the metropolitan area have gone on record as being opposed to this gigantic monopoly.

The Irving Trust Co. is receiver in over 5,000 ca

Where is the Senator who asked me how many cases there were? He seems to have disappeared, whoever he was.

The Senate provision aforesaid provides that there shall be no standing receiver, but limits that prohibition to sections 74 and 75 of the bill-

Now, notice:

These are new portions of the bill—and limit the prohibition further only in the case of the appointment of trustees. These limitations render the Senate provision useless. The prohibition should apply to all provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, old as well as new. The prohibition should also apply against the appointment of a standing receiver as well as a standing trustee.

I think the argument made by Congressman Celler in this letter is perfectly logical; and yet it is an illustration showing how easy it will be, in a complicated thing like a bankruptcy act, to let jokers of this kind creep in.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish the letter, and then I will yield. I will yield now, however. I will not read the balance of the letter.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the Senator will be interested to know that the first provision he finds in the Senate bill relative to the rules was prepared by myself in an effort to compromise between these conflicting views, and the writing in of the word "trustee" was done by mistake. I intended to correct that here by writing in "receiver and trustee"; but, after long conversations with many people, this was as close as I could come to making any suggestion that came anywhere near getting them together upon this controversial matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for his interruption; but it only illustrates what is bound to be in this legislation. I warn the Senate that there probably will be hundreds of such things in this very lengthy and complicated piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I intended to read a communication from Judge Clark, a very illuminating memorandum of considerable length, and also one from Mr. Frankfurter, but I do not want to take up the time. I realize that if a Senator talks more than 10 minutes now he probably will be charged, and perhaps justly, with filibustering, because the 4th of March is right here in sight. I only want to repeat, in closing, what I have tried to say before, that the Judiciary Committee have not undertaken to shirk any responsibility. They were acting in the best of faith. They believed that they were confronted with an impossible condition. They knew that if they reported a complicated piece of legislation here, it would be easy to kill it. If they gave it the proper consideration in the committee, it would take several days. Without any question, it would take at least that long. There ought to be a week's consideration by any committee that handles it, without anything else to intervene or to interfere with it; and that, we know, is an impossibility just before the 4th of March.

Senators and Representatives have on their hands a multitude of things that they can not throw overboard and cast aside, and devote all their time to one thing, and when they realize that even if they did they would be unable to do a good job they hesitate to go into it, because they feel, and I think rightly, that they are only going up against a tree anyway in the end; that if they do try to bring in the right kind of legislation that is of a controversial nature in a short session this near the end of it, it is going to be an impossibility to enact it into law unless we surrender everything to everybody who makes any demand.

The statement of the Senator from Delaware that the language that he drew here, which he now sees has omitted a very important thing in that it does not apply to receivers, but only to trustees, and that he made a mistake in doing so, is an illustration that these honest mistakes will creep in when we are dealing with legislation of this importance, and the most technical legislation that I have had anything to do with, unless it be the legislation that we passed at the last session of the Congress in regard to labor and capital and the limiting of injunctions in labor disputes.

So, Mr. President, the committee thought that the only logical course it could adopt, unless we let something go through without consideration, was to take the action it did, and report back in favor of passing the particular provision in regard to farmers. I have not any doubt but that the House gave good consideration to this bill, and I would rather take the House bill than to take a bill that came even from the Judiciary Committee where they were unable to give it consideration. I think it would be a serious mistake.

EXPENSES, SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILD-LIFE RESOURCES

Mr. TOWNSEND. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 340, increasing the limit of expenditures by the special committee investigating the conservation of wild-animal life; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 5, after the word "pur- lieu of the sum proses," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500," and in agree to the same.

line 6, after the word "authorize" and before the period, to insert a comma and the following: "and said resolution No. 246 hereby is continued in full force and effect until final report of its activities with recommendations is made by said committee to the Senate," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized and directed by Senate Resolution No. 246 on April 17, 1930, to investigate the conservation of wild-animal life hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $7,500 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized, and said resolution No. 246 hereby is continued in full force and effect until final report of its activities with recommendations is made by said committee to the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to. The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

LIZZIE PITTMAN

Mr. BLACK. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 4327.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4327) for the relief of Lizzie Pittman, which was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$250" and insert "$350 in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

Mr. BLACK. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report. I shall withdraw it if it leads to any debate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the report. I ask the Senator if the Democratic Members of the conferees agreed to the

Mr. McNARY. Oh, yes. All agreed; and I may say that in the case of the only three items that are of any interest, involving increases by the Senate, we receded on all save one, where we took a smaller amount.

Mr. KING. So that the Senate conferees did get something out of the conference?

Mr. McNARY. Very little, however.

Mr. KING. I wish I could say the same thing for other Senate conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ODDIE submitted the following report, which was

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator ask for the consideration of the report at this time?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Costigan	Kendrick	Russell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think I ought to have a word or two to say about this report before a vote is taken.

The Senate will recall that last summer a resolution was adopted continuing the Economy Committee, and that committee has been serving ever since.

My recollection is that the bill carried provisions which it was estimated would result in economies, under the Budget estimates sent in by the President, of about $225,-000,000 or $230,000,000. According to estimates I have made-I will not say according to estimates by others-the conferees struck about $205,000,000 out of the economy bill.

They struck out the Bratton amendment, which would have required a saving of 5 per cent, and that, I estimate, would have amounted to around $150,000,000. They struck out the Robinson amendment as to aircraft, which amendment eliminated a provision under which pure subsidies were being paid to aircraft companies in the amount of They struck out the amendment as to tax refunds, which in my judgment would have saved at least $50,000,000 more. Tax refunds have been costing us something like $100,000,000 for the last several years, and that sum is a very modest sum in comparison with what they cost us before. They ran up to as high as $300,000,000 in one year, and when we remember that the individual income taxes now produce about $132,000,000, if I recall the figure correctly, it is easily seen that we are paying back in refunds very nearly as much as we are collecting from the taxpayers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator has not been quite correct in his statement as to what the conferees agreed upon. The conferees have come to no agreement whatsoever with regard to the Bratton amendment. That is still in disagreement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, technically that may be true, but it is not so actually, for the reason that the House conferees took back the Bratton amendment with a recommendation that it should be disagreed to, and the House has disagreed to it, as I understand it.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will pardon me, all that is now before us are certain items, including the air mail item, in which the Senator is particularly interested, from which the Senate conferees have receded, and one or two items from which the House conferees have receded. The entire economy part of the bill is still in disagreement, and on it there has been no vote at all, and I hope it will be sent | back to conference for further conference. That contains the Bratton amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is technically true, but I want to say that the 3 Democratic conferees from the House and the 2 Republican conferees from the House, constituting a unanimous vote of that body in conference, and the 6 Republican members constituting the Senate conferees, joined together to cut out all these economies. They were opposed to all of these economies. They were opposed to the Bratton amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there was no vote in conference whatever on the Bratton amendment. The Senate conferees did not recede at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not say there was a vote. I said they were unanimously opposed to the Bratton amendment, and the Senator knows that is a correct statement. They were all oppposed, unanimously opposed, to striking out the aircraft subsidy. They were all opposed to the tax-refund amendment. They were all opposed to striking out the Bureau of Efficiency provision. In other words, they virtually absolutely destroyed all semblance of economy that was proposed in the bill.

The Economy Committee worked for nearly three months to bring about these economies. In my judgment it did a most excellent work. Yet, when we got into conference, the 3 Democratic Members of the House and the 2 Republican Members of the House, and the 6 Republican Members of the Senate, joined together and they virtually took out all of the economies from the bill.

That is what it means; that is what it does. It should not have been done. I do not approve it. With that statement I leave it to the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I want to make a very brief statement. The statement made by the Senator from Tennessee is entirely misleading. It is true in so far as the votes cast on the floor for certain items in which the Senate is interested are concerned. It is true, on my own behalf, that I voted against the Bratton amendment. It is not true that in committee I opposed it, nor did the other Republican members of the conference oppose it. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], who is sitting in the Chamber, a member of the conference, will agree with me that the Republican members of the conference made no effort whatsoever to withdraw from the proposal with regard to the Bureau of Efficiency provision, with regard to the Bratton amendment, or with regard to the other matters the Senator has mentioned. We did find that the House was adamant in regard to the air mail contract item, and that is the only matter of importance mentioned by the Senator which the conferees, by the vote, indicated they withdrew from.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to recall the Senator's attention to what happened about the air subsidy amendment. The Senate conferees, I think by a majority of one. voted to sustain that amendment, or not to put it in disagreement. I left the meeting of the conferees last Saturday morning assuming that that vote was final. I never dreamed of its being anything else. I had to be here on the floor of the Senate in connection with the cotton bill; and while I was here, although I sent a request down to the committee not to vote on that amendment further while I was absent, to let it go over until I could come back, a short time afterwards I was informed that the committee had voted again and had voted it out.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. In regard to what the Senator from Tennessee has just said, I wish to state that the conferees sent up to the floor of the Senate a request to the Senator from Tennessee that he be present in order that the conferees could finally determine their action on this air mail amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I did not get that re-

Mr. ODDIE. Word came down that Senator McKellar could not come at that time. It was necessary for us to conclude the meeting, and we took a final vote on the amendment, and the result is known.

In regard to the economy provisions, I am going to ask that the Senate insist on its amendments, and that this matter be sent back to a new conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be permitted to interpose a suggestion, the economy provisions are not involved in the conference report.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Chair. That is a matter which I have been endeavoring to explain to several who are not quite clear as to what is before us. The matters which are before us are certain amendments in the Treasury-Post Office part of the bill from which the House conferees have receded, also certain matters from which the Senate conferees have receded. A number of matters are still in disagreement, a few of them of minor importance, in the Treasury-Post Office part of the bill, and some of very great importance in the rest of the bill, known as the economy provision. There is no agreement on the part of the conferees in regard to those matters.

It is true the House has discussed them. Members of the conference on the part of the House have gone back for information and instruction as to how they are to procee!. But I understand from the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], that he does not propose at all to withdraw from the Senate's action in regard to the economy provision of the bill. Therefore the statements made by the Senator from Tennessee are entirely misleading in regard to the action of the Senate conferees on that part of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President— Mr. BINGHAM. There has been no action taken by the Senate conferees, except to maintain-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BINGHAM. Just as soon as I finish the sentence I will vield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not like the word the Senator uses when he says my remarks are "misleading." What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator means this: That when the Senator from Tennessee says that the Senate conferees vielded on all the economy features he coupled together with the air mail provision, in which he is interested, the Bratton amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I explained exactly about the Bratton amendment, and the Senator knows I did, if he heard me. The Senator is undertaking to mislead the Senate as to what was done. The Senator knows that at least these three major items of economy, namely, the Bratton amendment, the air-subsidy amendment, and the taxrefund amendment, which constitute over $200,000,000 of economies, are as dead as Hector by reason of the action of the conferees. There is nothing misleading about that, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Again I say, Mr. President, that no action which the conferees have taken has any reference whatsoever to the Bratton amendment, or the so-called savings from refunds, in which the Senator from Tennessee is interested. No action has been taken by the conferees on those matters. Those matters are still in disagreement. It is the intention of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill to ask that they still be in disagreement and go back to conference.

The Senate conferees are in no way responsible for the action the House may have taken in regard to those matters, and therefore, with all due respect to my friend from Tennessee, I merely wanted to state that there are certain Senators who do not understand the present situation with regard to the conference report. His opening remark plunged them into further misunderstanding of the situation, because he combined in the same paragraph matters which have been decided by the conference and which are now in the report with matters which are still in disagreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I understand the able Senator from Connecticut, there are some items upon which an agreement has been reached between the two Houses, but the important ones, as I understand his position, although I do not quite agree with him, are still in dispute. Why bring the report to the floor of the Senate until the conferees have fully agreed or found it impossible to agree? Why take it up piecemeal and deal with what the Senator seems to regard as less important? Why not bring the matter all here at the same time?

Mr. BINGHAM. There are two reasons for it. In the first place, it has been done frequently and is a custom of long standing, especially when there is what is called new legislation in the bill, for the conferees to report agreement in regard to certain matters and disagreement in other matters and have the bill sent back to conference. The Senator well knows that has been done time and again.

In the second place, it was done at the specific request of the House conferees and in order to oblige the situation as they saw it, and for no other reason.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Under the rules of the House the conferees could not act without first going back to the House for instructions.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. We do not have such a rule here, but they have it there, and that answers the question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I am still somewhat in doubt as to what the situation would be in case we adopt the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie], who is in charge of the conference report. Just what will we have passed upon and taken out of conference if and when we shall adopt his motion?

Mr. BINGHAM. We will have passed upon a few of the amendments in the Treasury and Post Office Department appropriation bill itself, apart from the economy provision. In other words, we will have passed on about 10 or 12 amendments which are in that part of the bill dealing with the Treasury and Post Office Departments and will not have passed on any amendment in the economy part of the bill or those sections added subsequent thereto.

Mr. BORAH. Will we pass upon that portion of the bill which has reference to reorganization?

Mr. BINGHAM. No. That is in disagreement and we will ask that that be sent back to conference.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as I understand it, the economy part of the bill and the provisions with reference to granting powers for reorganization will be sent back to conference?

Mr. BINGHAM. Those are in disagreement and it is our wish that they be sent back to conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately I was called from the Chamber and did not hear the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] or the opening observations submitted by the Senator from Connecticut. My understanding, however, is at variance with the statement just submitted by the Senator from Connecticut. I have understood that the House conferees have affirmatively acted upon the so-called Bratton amendment and economy provisions, and it is a mere matter of form to present the conference report or the partial conference report here at this time and appoint conferees and again send the matter back to conference; that the House has already acted on the matter, or the House conferees have done so at least, and that there is no particular expectation of securing any different results from those which have thus far been achieved. If I am in error I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is in error in this regard. There has been no agreement in the conference with regard to those portions of the bill known as the economy provisions and the reorganization provisions to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] just referred, and the sections following them. Those are still in disagreement. There are one or two minor matters in disagreement in that part of the bill dealing with the Treasury Department. My recollection is that the matter regarding the price of paper per pound is still in disagreement, though the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] will correct me if I am in error about that. There has been no agreement reached in regard to these matters.

It is true the House conferees went back to the House for instructions with regard to the matters of new legislation. They have received those instructions, but in order that we may work out, in a full and free conference with the House, the matters concerned in section 14, the economy provision, and Titles III and IV, it is necessary to send the matter back to conference and get the best agreement we can with the House.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to ask another question of the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham]. If we adopt the motion of the Senator from Nevada, does it place the Senate at any disadvantage whatever either in conference or here with reference to considering the matters to which we have not agreed?

Mr. BINGHAM. None whatever. They are still in conference. Of course, the House conferees have found out how far the House is willing to go in certain matters. They come back to conference with certain instructions from the House. If the Senate conferees are unwilling to agree to those instructions, then the matter must go back for further instruction. But we are under no disadvantage whatever in regard to the matters which have not been agreed to by the Senate conferees and the House conferees.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the situation is brought about by reason of the House rules, under which the chairman of the House conferees, when the bill was returned to the House, offered one amendment to the bill, which amendment contained the so-called economy provision, and now when it comes to the Senate we are taking the whole amendment referring to the economy provision back to conference to be agreed upon by the conferees, if it be possible?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; including the Senator's provision regarding reorganization. The whole matter is in disagreement and will go back to conference.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] just a moment. While technically these matters will be in disagreement, yet when the conferees meet here is what will take place: The House members will say, "We have had a vote in the House on the Bratton 5 per cent amendment and we are precluded from doing anything about it. It is a matter of necessity for us to do nothing about it. It is absolutely necessary, if we are going to have an agreement, for us not to accede to it." They have already voted on it in the House, we will be told.

So with the tax-refund matter and the Bureau of Efficiency matter, and so with everything except the provision which gives the President the right to consolidate commissions, bureaus, and other agencies of the Government. That is the only matter that is really actually in conference between the two Houses. As to the others, we will be precluded by a vote which the House has already had.

Mr. BORAH. We can ourselves reject the report when it comes back?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes. The Senate will have the right to do that. Of course in the situation as it is now, we are obliged to go back to conference in order to straighten out the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as a matter of fact the conference report, to which it is moved we shall agree, accomplishes very little. It does not affect what appear to me to be the vital issues in conference. It does not involve the subject matter of real dispute. For instance, the conference report is "that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 10, 11, and 13, and agree to the same."

Amendment No. 2 relates to the appropriation for the Customs Service, and the agreement increases the appropriation as provided by the Senate amendment by about $2,400,000.

Amendment No. 5 is a mere technical correction in the text of the appropriation relating to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving.

Amendment No. 6 is another technical correction relating to the Public Health Service.

Amendment No. 10 has relation to the acquisition of sites or of additional land in connection with the appropriation for public-building construction.

Amendment No. 11 provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the American Red Cross Building may be served with heat from the Government central heating plant.

Amendment No. 13 exempts, as proposed by the Senate, the use of automobiles by the President from the general restriction of use of Government automobiles.

The further agreement is as to amendments numbered 3, 4, and 12, that the Senate recede from those amendments, so that what is actually involved in this conference report is of relatively little importance.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Really, then, very little is settled by the adoption of the report?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Absolutely.

Let me say further, Mr. President, that in all probability the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] has correctly appraised the true situation as to what will be the final result of the conference. I do not concede that it is involved in the present motion, but all the circumstances indicate that he has anticipated what will probably result. The present motion is merely clearing the way for a future motion which will eliminate the result of the work of many months on the part of the economy committee, but, as stated by the Senator from Idaho, we will have an opportunity to pass on that question when the conference report comes back again. But let Senators remember and see if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] for once in his life has not proven himself entitled to the title of "prophet."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] respecting the matter beginning on page 75, known as section 11. It will be remembered that the Senate inserted a provision to the effect that certain employees in hospitals, where they worked overtime, should be entitled to an equal shortening of workdays thereafter. I am advised that the conferees have inserted the word "not" directly to change the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that the matter in which he is interested is still in disagreement. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie], in reporting the conference, is dealing with matters which concern wholly the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department. I rose to explain that the matters mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] and others and that part of the bill with which I have had particular connection as chairman of the Economy Committee, are not now before us at all, but those matters are still in disagreement.

May I say to the Senator from Arizona that when the conferees met, the first thing the House conferees said to us was that a very large part, more than nine-tenths, of the matters in disagreement between the two Houses were such that they would be unable to reach any conclusion about them because they regarded them as new legislation which must be taken back to the House. There was no attempt on the part of the Senate conferees to dodge the issue. We took up that in regard to which they were willing to come to a decision. That as to which they were unable to come to any decision we had of necessity to let go back for further conference.

In further answer to what the Senator from Arizona said, that in which he is interested is in that part of the bill which is not now before us and is still in disagreement. I understand the object of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Oddie] is to move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and that the matter be sent back to further conference.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think we might agree to the motion that is pending. I do not see that very much is to be accomplished by agreeing to it or by disagreeing to it. Later there will inevitably arise a contest here that will be of importance and that will determine the other issues involved in this proposed legislation. When those issues are brought in, we shall probably meet them as best we can.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad when I find myself in agreement with my leader. I am now, however, not in agreement with him. I do not accept the view presented by him and others that the matters under consideration are relatively unimportant. Items increasing the expenses of the Government ought not to be considered unimportant at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKellar. I desire to make this statement to the Senator and to the Senate. I think the Senator from Arkansas is entirely right in saying that the pending motion is not relatively important, because the matter has to take that course in order to reach a final conclusion; but my purpose in making a statement about it at this time was to let the Senate know that the conferees have already virtually, in substance and in fact, done away with nine-tenths of the economies that the Economy Committee of the Senate had brought about, and I thought it was a good time to let the Senate know just what had occurred and not wait until the final conference report came in to apprise the Senate of that fact.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand that frequently, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bing-ham], a partial agreement upon the part of conferees is reported back to the respective Houses, and after action, affirmative or negative, the matters in dispute go back to conference; but I submit that there is no rule, certainly in this body, and I am not advised that there is one existing in the other legislative body, that requires conferees to return to their respective Houses with partial reports. Most conference reports show an agreement with respect to all matters in controversy.

Now, we are called upon to approve the action of the conferees in eliminating an important amendment adopted by the Senate, which struck out a subsidy of $19,000,000 for air mail contracts. After earnest and lengthy discussion over several hours, the Senate voted to strike out the entire item. We are informed what fate awaited the action of the Senate. The conferees restored the item of $19,- 000,000, thus nullifying the action of the Senate. They also ignored the action of the Senate in several other matters, two of which I shall refer to in a moment, thus adding $3,000,000 to the tax burdens of the people.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut that approval of this partial report will not affect the ultimate determination of items of dispute when the appropriation bill is again considered by the conference committee. There is such a thing—and it is not unparliamentary to comment upon it—as mutual concessions by conferees; I shall not use what might be denominated an improper word by saying "trading," but it is known that concessions are made, and mutual concessions oftentimes result in a compromise agreement, under which there is unison of action upon the part of the conferees.

Now, if we approve the action of the conferees in restoring the subsidy of $19,000,000, which was the subject of controversy, and in restoring the other items to which I shall refer in a moment, and the bill goes back to conference, obviously the Senate conferees are partially disarmed; they do not have before them these items which they may employ in securing or urging reasonable concessions with respect to other items which may be in disagreement between the two bodies.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the statement made that this item of $19,000,000 is not a question of importance. After, as I said a moment ago, prolonged discussion and considerable controversy, the Senate took affirmative action. It was brought to the attention of the Senate during the consideration of that item that the Postmaster General had made contracts which many considered as improvident, and that he intended to enter into other contracts and to make extensions, notwithstanding there were pending a resolution and another measure in this body and, as I am advised, a resolution in the other legislative body which forbade further contracts being let under existing law. But, notwithstanding these pending measures, and notwithstanding the discussion which took place in the Senate, as I am advised, the Postmaster General immediately let other contracts and extensions, paying no attention whatever to the action of the Senate or to the manifest desire on the part of Members of the Senate that there should be a halt in the letting of contracts until an investigation of the entire question of air mail subsidies was conducted.

I do not know why the conferees receded from the Senate amendment striking out the $19,000,000 appropriation. Why not disagree to this partial report and let the matter go back to conference, so that those items which we are asked now to accept may still be in conference and our conferees may obtain the benefit of using them in the final adjustment of all controversial items that may be brought to the attention of the conference committee? I appeal to the Senate to reject the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Utah is entirely correct. One of the amendments from which, it is observed, the Senate recedes is the appropriation of $19,000,000 for air mail subsidies which was stricken out on my motion for the purpose of forcing an investigation of the manner under which existing contracts have been let and for the best means of reducing expenditures in that behalf.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit, may I ask if the Senator from Arkansas is reading from the statement of the managers on the part of the House?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh no, I am making a statement in my own behalf and I am making the statement in my own language. Why does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. MOSES. I have not seen the printed statement submitted by the managers on the part of the House, and I wondered if that is the document the Senator holds in his hand?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; that is the document I hold in my hand, if that is material, and I can give further information as to the manner in which I am holding it, if the Senator desires.

Mr. MOSES. No; I am not asking for any further explanation on the part of the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not observed that the air mail amendment was one of the amendments from which the Senate conferees receded. It appears that this appropriation is for the execution of contracts which have heretofore been made. I shall insist upon the passage of the resolution of the Senator from Alabama or some similar resolution opening up the proceedings under which these contracts were entered into. I do not wish to be placed in the attitude of repudiating contracts that are in force, but I do think that, under the existing law, if the committee had taken the time and trouble, it could have reduced this appropriation by several million dollars and not worked any serious detriment to the air mail service.

I do not believe, from the limited study I have been able to make, that any more improvident action has been taken in connection with the business of the Government than that taken in relation to these air mail contracts. I expect if the subject is opened up and the facts are brought out that they will reveal partiality, unnecessary expenditures, and many proceedings that are justly to be censured and criticized.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if I have the right to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, not for gymnastics, but for a question.

Mr. MOSES. I want to make a statement as one of the conferees.

Mr. KING. If I do not lose my right to the floor, I am glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. MOSES. Of course, I can have no quarrel with the beliefs expressed by the Senator from Arkansas. There are many beliefs held by many people with which I am not in full agreement. That does not constitute a source of controversy between them and me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOSES. I have not the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: May I yield the floor and not lose my right to the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. What I wanted to say was this-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. MOSES. As a conferee on the part of the Senate on many appropriation bills, I have never gone into the conference room except in the belief that regardless of my personal opinion of the action taken by the Senate there was but one course open to me as a conferee on the part of the Senate, and that was to maintain the position taken by the Senate.

With reference to this particular item, while it is not the practice to reveal in detail what takes place in conference, I think the Senate ought to know that the Senate conferees were resolute in standing by the amendment which the Senate had made with reference to the air mail. The House conferees were adamant in the position which they took; and an unprecedented course was pursued in connection with this item, in that the conferees gave a hearing to two Members of the House, the chairman of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the most active member of that committee, the Representative from Pennsylvania.

Those two Representatives consumed the better part of a forenoon session of the conferees in setting up the fact that the Post Office Committee in the House was now engaged in formulating a bill to deal with the whole subject of air mail contracts as they exist and of air mail contracts as they may be let in the future.

Following that presentation of the conferees, the Senate members of the conference discovered that the resistance which they had encountered on the part of the conferees on the other side of the table had been very much fortified; and, Mr. President, as reluctantly as I submitted in another conference yesterday with reference to the amendments which the Senate had adopted in connection with the Children's Bureau, I had to succumb to the force majeure which did not permit the conference to move unless we had surrendered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MOSES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the advantage of agreeing to this conference report?

Mr. President, I said a few moments ago, in answer to a question of the Senator from Idaho, that I did not see any great advantage to be gained by refusing to agree to the motion that is pending, because it relates for the most part to relatively unimportant matters; but in view of the fact that the real controversies in the bill are not resolved by this agreement, and that the Senate conferees have conceded at least one important amendment—the air mail subsidy amendment, for which they stood with such unfaltering loyalty and courage while the opposition was assaulting them with all the force and organization that have been described by the Senator from New Hampshire-what is the advantage in agreeing to this conference report, which, with the exception of the air mail amendment, deals only with relatively unimportant matters, unless it is to clear the way for a recession on the part of the Senate conferees respecting the all-important issues involved in this bill?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas and I, in our conversations and in our exchanges on the floor, are accustomed to deal one with the other in absolute frankness. I will say now in absolute frankness to the Senator from Arkansas that I can not see any very great advantage to be gained, except that, having gone so far in agreement, the House having agreed so far with what the conferees have done, the conference will be diminished in its scope and in its time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MOSES. Yes, indeed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears, then, that what will actually happen will be that the conferees on the part of the House get what they desire if we agree to this motion, and they will have the long chance of getting everything they desire after we have done that. I think we might just as well take the whole thing back to conference.

That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. MOSES. I am not sure that the application of the doctrine of chances-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I say to the Senator that I have been called from the Chamber temporarily on a very urgent mission.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I shall hold no Parthian arrows on his departure.

I must say, however, that this conference, prolonged as it was, covering almost an entire week, dealt with every subject in controversy in a spirit of complete, accurate examination of the problems presented; and any Senator here who has served upon conference committees, especially conference committees dealing with appropriation bills, can well understand what I mean when I say that the Senate conferees found themselves in a situation where nothing in connection with the bill could move unless we disposed of this item, and we had to dispose of it in the manner which we employed, otherwise there would have been no bill at all.

If this report, as now presented, is not agreed to in the manner proposed by the motion of the Senator from Nevada, I think that we gravely endanger the entire bill in the lifetime of this Congress. If that is what the majority of the Senate desires. I am in no position to make great resistance; but since we have violated no precedent, since this partial report is no novelty in the Senate, since the motion of the Senator from Nevada is entirely proper, since its adoption, as I view the situation, will expedite the consideration and the enactment of the entire measure, I hope that the Senate may agree to the motion proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MOSES. Yes, indeed.

Mr. REED. Will it in any way improve the chances of the House being able to impose its will upon us on the economy section of the bill if we now approve this partial report?

Mr. MOSES. I can not see that, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will yield to me, I can not see it either; but I can see this-

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Arkansas intimated that that would be the case, but I could not see it. I do not see it now.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New Hampshire answered the Senator from Arkansas that he saw no real importance in acting on this partial report now. It seems to me there is a very great importance in it.

Mr. MOSES. No; I said "except"—— Mr. REED. I hope the exception will include this thought:

There may be a minority of the Senate that would want to vote against this partial report because of the rejection of the airplane item. There may be another minority of the Senate that would want to vote against the solution of the economy-section difficulty. Those two minorities, added together, may make a majority that would defeat the bill.

Mr. MOSES. That is entirely possible.
Mr. REED. We avoid that by acting on the bill piece-

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would a motion to instruct the managers on the part of the Senate be in order if the pending motion should be agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not think so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a peculiar situation here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to comment upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, and then I will yield the floor to him. It is not possible to recommit a bill to conferees with instructions. That may not be done.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President— Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. MOSES. I have yielded the floor to the Senator from Vermont, but if the Senator from Alabama wishes to ask me a question, I will retain it for that purpose.

Mr. BLACK. I have here a report, and I desire to be sure as to whether or not it is correct as to what the conference has agreed on.

Mr. MOSES. Is it the document which the Senator from Arkansas held in his right hand?

Mr. BLACK. No; I have not the one which the Senator from Arkansas had. This is the one I have in my left hand.

I find that, according to the report, the House has receded on three or four amendments.

Amendments Nos. 2 and 3, the report says, make a technical correction.

No. 4 appropriates $30,800,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $29,800,000, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 5 makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

No. 6 makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for freight, and so forth, under the Public Health Service.

As to amendment No. 10, the House seems to have yielded on this point, besides the technical matters: The action of the conferees strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the authority in the House bill for "acquisition of sites or of additional land." The House gained that point.

Mr. DICKINSON. No; the Senate gained that point. Mr. BLACK. What is that, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. MOSES. Inasmuch as I am continuing to hold the floor, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] can answer that question much better than I, because that action was taken by the Senate upon an amendment offered from the floor by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BLACK. And that has been stricken out?

Mr. DICKINSON. It has been agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. It has been agreed to on the part of the House; and while it does not change the sum of money involved in any of the public-buildings construction—there already being $80,000,000, as I recall, remaining in the fund for the acquisition of sites under the authorizations already made—it brings to a temporary halt the extension of public-building construction throughout the country. If I have compacted it too much in my statement, the Senator from Iowa, who is the author of the amendment, may have the floor in my time to answer.

Mr. BLACK. The two amendments on which, as I find from this report, the House yielded to the Senate, are No. 11 and No. 13. No. 11 provides that the American Red Cross Building may be served with heat from the Government central heating plant; and No. 13 exempts, as proposed by the Senate, the use of automobiles by the President from the general restriction on use of Government automobiles.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator must not forget No. 10, which we have just discussed, and on which the Senate won a signal victory.

Mr. BLACK. How much is involved in that victory?

Mr. MOSES. Not a nickel, Mr. President. That is to say, it makes no change in the sum of money appropriated, but it does make a very complete change in the method in which the fund is to be administered.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand it—and I want to be sure—I find that amendment No. 2 makes a technical correction.

No. 3 makes a technical correction.

No. 4 makes a $1,000 correction.

No. 5 makes a technical correction.

No. 6 makes a technical correction.

No. 10 changes no appropriation of any kind.

On No. 11 the House yields to the Senate on supplying heat to the American Red Cross.

On No. 13 the House yields to the Senate with reference to the use of automobiles.

In return for that the Senate yields on the $19,000,000 subsidy for air mail. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I must protest that the Senator from Alabama is not entitled to infringe upon the privilege of Yankee trading, especially when he is talking with me. If he wishes to summarize this conference report in a mathematical sense by setting up that the Senate yielded on amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and the House yielded on amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8, that, of course, is demonstrable with a piece of chalk and a blackboard

That, however, is not the manner in which conferences perform their functions. That is not the manner in which appropriation bills are formulated. That is not the manner in which the Government is carried on.

Mr. BLACK. I agree to that.

Mr. MOSES. We did not act in that manner in the conference. We were confronted, as Grover Cleveland said, not with a theory but with a condition. Some time the Senator himself will be wrestling in conference on an appropriation bill, and he will discover that those things which we are now exposing to the Senate as having taken place in the conference room over this measure are the things which constantly take place.

It is a matter of adjustment; it is a matter of retreat where retreat is strategic; and on this particular item of $19,000,000, which seems to be the immediate crux of the controversy here in the Senate in connection with this report, the Senate conferees were moved to their action especially by reason of the unexampled manner in which the House presented its view; that is, the House conferees being reinforced by the chairman of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and by the most active member of that committee, who came to us and, as I have already said, consumed a whole forenoon session in explaining what the House intended to do.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I simply wanted to get down to the issue as I see it. If I am incorrect, I want to understand it.

The chief thing at issue here is the $19,000,000 appropriation. Of course, no one would attach any importance in a conference to the heat that is supplied to the Red Cross.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to discuss that item, I will say to him that, so far as I was concerned as a Member of the Senate, when the amendment was offered here, and as a conferee on the part of the Senate, I did not believe in the amendment in the form in which the Senate adopted it. I felt that while it was very desirable that the buildings of the Red Cross should be heated from the central heating plant, I felt constantly that it would be necessary to enlarge the central heating plant in order to take care of them, and there was no appropriation made in the bill to take care of that. It is true that the Red Cross would pay for the piping which connected it with the steam mains, and would pay for the steam they used, but in the event that the central heating plant had to be enlarged, as I firmly believe must be the case, there was no appropriation made for that extra expense on the part of the Government.

The Senator may read the numbers in the document he holds in his hand from 1 to 18, and he will find many of them which, in their essence, seem to be simple. He may find some of them which may seem to deal with subjects with which the Congress of the United States should have no business. But he can not find an item there in the 18 amendments as to which there was not a division of opinion on both sides of the table; that is to say, between the Senate conferees and the House conferees; nor can he find a single item wherein the conferees on the part of the Senate did not go, as they regarded it, the limit in supporting the views of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one other question?

Mr. MOSES. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senate accepts this partial report, and it goes back to conference, as I see it, there are no more technical corrections our conferees would have an opportunity to trade on, are there?

Mr. MOSES. I am not sure, because I have not studied the bill from a grammatical point of view, but in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama, I may find some further make-weights.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator can. I think he did well in his efforts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad to be associated with my leader, the Senator from Arkansas, in opposition to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to approve the partial report submitted by him. The Senator from Arkansas, after learning the issues involved in the matter before us, takes the position that the conference report should be rejected. I feel sure that a majority of the Senate, after knowing what the question before the Senate is, will join those who are opposing the motion to adopt the conference report.

I am curious to know why the Senator from New Hampshire, in view of his statements that two Representatives not members of the conference committee appeared before the committee and gave information bearing upon the $19,000,000 air mail subsidy, did not afford opportunity to Senators or others who opposed the subsidy to appear before the conferees and submit information relative to the question involved.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think it is only fair to suggest that the two Members from the House, Representative Mead and Representative Kelly, were invited there at the suggestion of the House conferees to outline their plan as to how to approach this mail matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator that they did not come before the conferees to argue one way or the other in regard to the appropriation, or the amendment striking it out. They came to explain to us, at the request of the House conferees, what the plan of Mr. Kelly, the original author of the air mail bill, and the chairman of the committee, was in regard to future air mail contracts. They outlined to us the bill which they had in course of preparation, and, which since then, if I am correctly informed, has been reported out of committee, and is now being considered by the House. They offered it, not exactly in the nature of a compromise, but in the nature of a cure for some of the matters which had been brought up on the floor and referred to as being undesirable in the past. It was largely because of the very excellent statement they made with regard to the proposed changes in legislation that the Senate conferees felt that they were justified in withdrawing from the Senate amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator corroborates the views expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire and justifies the conclusion that the conferees did not regard the views of the Representatives as irrelevant to the matter under consideration. It matters not the purpose for which the two persons referred to appeared before the conference committee, or who invited them to appear. It is unimportant as to whether they voluntarily appeared or did so at the instance of some committee of the House. The fact is they did go and I think the statements of the Senators from New Hampshire and Connecticut warrant the inference that the statements made by the Representatives had some influence upon the committee. I make no criticism whatsoever because of the appearance of any person before conference committees. Indeed, there are many occasions when the conferees are justified in seeking information with respect to items in bills which they are considering. If conferees need additional information concerning controversial matters, I see no reason why they may not, with propriety, obtain data to aid them in reaching just and fair conclusions. I am only suggesting that where persons appear before conference committees to explain controversial items, it would seem proper to permit persons who entertain different views concerning the issues involved to meet the committee and present their side of the question.

I should have been glad to have had the Senator from Alabama, who is familiar with this matter, afforded an opportunity to appear and explain the proposed bill which the Senator says has been introduced in the House, and show its futility and also its irrelevancy to the question involved in the air mail subsidy which the Senate eliminated from the bill, but which the conferees have restored.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I remind the Senator that the most ardent advocate of the proposed striking out of the air mail appropriation was a conferee, was there during the discussion, and that he made no move whatsoever to invite the Senator from Alabama or anybody else to aid him in cross-examining the House witnesses or to suggest that any other witnesses be called.

Mr. KING. I do not want to say that there was any dereliction upon his part, but it does seem to me that where witnesses are permitted to appear before conferees in advocacy or in explanation of controversial items, where it is known that there are other persons opposed to those items, particularly Members of the Senate or of the House, equal opportunity should be given them to present relevant facts and express their views in opposition to the views tendered by the voluntary witnesses or the invited witnesses who appear before the committee.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. No request was made at all before the conferees that any witnesses from the Senate be present. The Senate had already heard a vast amount of testimony on this air mail question.

Mr. KING. But the Senator, knowing the attitude of the Senate, was receiving statements from persons who volunteered to appear or who were requested to appear to present views bearing upon the $19,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator in that statement at all. The suggestion was made by some one that these Members of the House could give some testimony to the conferees which would be valuable to them in regard to future air mail legislation that the House was working on.

In that connection, Mr. President, I want to say that a few days ago the Senator from Alabama requested of me that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate act on his resolution providing for a complete and thorough investigation of the air mail operations and contracts. I called the committee together as quickly as I could, and within a day the committee met, heard the Senator from Alabama, adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] to Senator Black's resolution, which was agreed to by the Senator from Alabama. The committee acted favorably on this resolution and the favorable report of the committee was presented to the Senate, and I believe is on the calendar now.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah vield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It is not on the calendar; it went to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I hope it will be on the calendar to-day. I do not know whether the Committee to Audit and Control has acted upon it or not. If it does not, I may state that I expect to move to discharge the committee as soon as possible.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I did not understand the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama. Did he refer to the resolution he introduced?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. FESS. It was acted upon to-day.

Mr. BLACK. It has been acted upon?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Has the report been made?

Mr. FESS. I think not. It is in the hands of the chairman of the committee, but the report will be made to-day.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me just a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I wanted to state to the Senator that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which I am chairman, acted expeditiously in this matter, and did everything it could to get the resolution of the Senator from Alabama acted on promptly and favorably.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the statements which have been made thus far justify the position which I have taken and the position just taken by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]—that this partial report should be rejected and that the matter should be sent back to conference.

The Senator from Alabama has just shown incontrovertibly that the Senate conferees yielded upon substantially all matters in disagreement between the conferees of the House and the Senate and covered by this report before us. True there are a number of items on which, it is stated. the House receded, but they were technical matters, nothing substantive, nothing important. The $19,000,000 item, which was important, received the coup de grâce at the hands of the committee.

I stated a moment ago, and I beg pardon for repetition, that it is important when conferees of the two Houses meet to adjust matters of disagreement growing out of amendments offered by the House or the Senate, or both, they should approach their task with the understanding that the rights of each House should be respected and that by discussion and conciliation the differences might and should be ironed out. If we accept a partial report, which is neither conciliation nor concession upon the part of the House, it is obvious that when the bill goes back to conference the Senate conferees will be at a disadvantage; they will have no ground for legitimate bargaining, no opportunity to obtain concessions or compensation for surrenders made.

I submit, Mr. President, that the Senate, in view of the importance of this item and in view of the position which the Senate took when it struck out the air mail subsidy, the report should be rejected and the matter be sent back to conference.

Mr. President, I call attention to two others upon which the Senate acted when the bill was before this body. It was brought to the attention of the Senate that the appropriations for the expenses of the Bureau of Customs and the Internal Revenue Bureau were entirely disproportionate to their activities and achievements; that the costs of collecting revenue were too great, and the appropriations evidence a disregard of economy, and a concession to extravagance and inefficiency. It was shown that a number of years ago, when the revenues collected by these two bureaus were very much greater than recent and present collections, and the costs of collection were but a small percentage of the costs now incurred in collecting customs and internal revenue, amendments which I offered were, after discussion, adopted. One of the amendments reduced by $1,000,000 the amount for the collection of customs and $2,000,000 for the cost of collecting internal revenue. Figures presented showed that in 1912, when the customs collected amounted to more than $300,000,000, the appropriation for their collection was only $10,000,000. In 1914 the collections were nearly $300,000,000 and the costs of collection were $9,000,-000. In 1915 the collections were $209,000,000 and the appropriation for the purpose of collecting the same were $9,000,000.

In 1932, when the customs collected were $331,000,000, the sum of $22,000,000 was appropriated to pay the employees and the other costs of collection, or $6.87 for every $100 collected, as against 65 cents per $100 in earlier days. In other words, in 1932 it cost $6.87 to collect each $100. For 1933 the customs receipts were considerably less and the appropriation for the year was $22,000,000, or approximately $7 for every $100 collected. The appropriation bill for the next fiscal year carried, as I recall, $22,000,000, though it is certain the customs dues will be less than for this fiscal year. This means that approximately $8 was carried in the bill to meet the costs of collecting $100.

There can be no justification for this enormous increase in the costs of this bureau, but the bill came to the Senate burdened with bureaucratic demands. I insisted that the appropriation be reduced several million dollars, but was opposed by some members of the committee, as well as a number of other Senators. After discussion I succeeded in reducing the amount $1,000,000. I thought that Senators on the other side of the aisle, knowing that a new administration is coming in, and that there would be some Democrats in the bureau, would have joined with Democrats in voting for a larger reduction in this item. But after a hard flight only $1,000,000 were saved. But the conferees have repudiated the Senate's action on this item and restored the House provision.

But having secured only a small reduction of $1,000,000, which still allows $7 to $8 to collect each $100, as against 50 to 75 cents per hundred dollars a number of years ago, our efforts for economy are frustrated by the conference.

I now refer to the Internal Revenue Bureau. When the Senate was considering the item to meet its costs for the next fiscal year I showed that the annual costs for a number of years, going back to 1912, was materially less than for the past five or six years. My recollection is that it cost nearly five times as much to collect $100 last year and the year preceding as it did in the years 1912, 1913, and 1914. As the years went by the costs increased, notwithstanding the diminution in receipts from taxes and from the collections made by this bureau.

In 1913 the appropriation for the entire bureau was only $5,000,000; in 1914 it was only five million and odd dollars. In 1915 it was $6,000,000, and in 1917 it was $7,000,000. In 1918, when the total taxes collected were more than $4,000,000,000 as against less than $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 collected by this bureau in 1913 and 1914, the appropriation for the bureau was more than $27,000,000. The cost was only $5,000,000 a few years before, with the amount of revenue collected not very much larger.

In 1921, $33,000,000 was appropriated for the bureau, and the collections were $4,595,000,000, but the cost of collection was only 72 cents per $100 collected. In 1922 there was another $1,000,000 added to the appropriation, making a total of $34,000,000, with diminishing receipts totaling $3,197,000,000, but it cost $1.07 to collect each $100.

In 1923 $36,000,000 were given to the bureau for the collection of $2,621,000,000, or $1.39 per hundred dollars collected. But the machinery in the bureau kept increasing, the personnel was enlarged, the number of agencies and subagencies multiplied, and the costs increased so that last year it cost more than $2.50 to collect each $100, although the total amount collected was very much less than in preceding years to which I have called attention.

For the present fiscal year the cost will be more than $3 for each $100 collected, as against 33 cents, 53 cents, 50 cents, and 72 cents for each $100 collected during the years 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916. In other words, as the revenue has decreased the expense per $100 collected has increased to more than $3 at the present time. Notwithstanding this showing the Senate refused to make reasonable reductions, but finally consented to reduce the appropriation $2,000,000. With this concession the bill carried a huge sum, enough to pay more than $3 for each $100 collected for the next fiscal year. But the conferees were unwilling to accept this small reduction, and restored the House provision.

Mr. President, I have taken the time of the Senate to challenge attention to the action of the conferees with respect to three items. In my opinion we should reject the conference report and insist that the Senate's action, so manifestly just, be approved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. AUSTIN. The economy part of the bill is said not to be before the Senate at the present time. That provision was originally numbered 19. Afterwards it was numbered 16, and at the present time it is numbered 14.

As that original section of the bill called the economy provision was before the Senate, it contained a clause relating to permanent annual appropriation laws, so that thereafter the appropriations must be made annually by the Congress. Among those were the Morrill Act creating colleges for agricultural experimentation and industrial education, agricultural extension service, and vocational education, the latter two known as the Smith-Lever Act and the Smith-Hughes Act. Those two provided for cooperation between the Federal Government and the several States, and that cooperation extended into the States and even included industrial organizations.

The next parliamentary step in connection with it was an amendment adopted by the Senate after debate, in the course of which debate those who had charge of the economy provision of the measure accepted the amendment, and the Senate understood—at least this much of the Senate understood and a large part of the United States understood—that the conferees on the part of the Senate would at least advocate the sustaining of that amendment.

I do not undertake to be censorious or to say what the details of the transaction were, but such handling of the matter occurred in conference as that a report was made and appears here, which reads in part as follows:

As to this amendment-

Meaning the whole economy amendment-

the managers on the part of the House expect to offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment, striking out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and inserting in lieu thereof other matter.

That the House did. Now, we find that we are confronted, as we consider the question whether we are to adopt or reject the pending motion, with a proposed bill differing entirely from the Senate measure containing section 14, which reads as follows:

Sec. 14. All laws providing for specific annual appropriations are hereby modified so that after June 30, 1934, in lieu of appropriations made therein, the sums available for the purposes of such laws shall be such sums, not exceeding the amounts now provided in such laws, as may hereafter be provided therefor from time to time by Congress.

In other words, the House has passed upon the matter. The House has adopted a section relating to the subject matter which is wholly and entirely different from that which the Senate adopted as an original provision relating to permanent annual appropriations. Here we are asked to adopt a fraction of the business that was transacted by the conference. What is the effect of doing that? What goes back to conference? Does the conference consider again that which it has already passed upon in respect of these permanent annual appropriations, or is the debate closed? However, we in the Senate are in a position where we can not save ourselves in this matter.

Mr. President, to address a parliamentary inquiry in a few words to the Chair, I ask: Will section 14 of the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 14—the economy provision—which was formerly section 16, when it was acted upon by the Senate, be considered any further in conference or is the matter closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report pending before the Senate at this time covers only those amendments of the Senate on which the conferees have agreed, and does not include the matter referred to by the Senator from Vermont. If the conference report shall be agreed to on the propositions submitted, then action may be had by the Senate upon the amendments which have not been agreed to by the other House; and the Senate may disagree to the House amendment to the Senate amendment and send it back to conference or consider it on the floor of the Senate, and amend the amendment to the Senate amendment adopted by the other House.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the amendment which was agreed to by the other House on February 21, 1933, as a substitute for the economy provisions of the appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments follow immediately the vote which is about to be taken; that is, will it be pending following the adoption or rejection of the report that is now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The logical order, after agreeing or disagreeing to the conference report, would be to pass upon the separate amendments of the House to the Senate amendments still in disagreement as they are presented to the Senate, or if they are presented en bloc, they may be divided and a separate vote may be had upon each one or upon any one of the number, or they all may be sent to a further conference.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, what is known as the Austin amendment is not affected by any action which we may take upon the pending conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to by the Senator will not be affected by whatever action may be taken on the pending motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the conference report, but I sincerely hope that it may be disagreed to. There are a number of items in the bill which are of very great importance, and it seems to me that we can better deal with it as a whole than by piecemeal. So I wish to express my hope that the entire bill will go back to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NEELY. If the conference report shall be adopted, will not the Austin amendment thereby in its purposes be entirely defeated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has nothing to do with the conference report. It will have to be presented to the Senate after the conference report shall have been acted upon, if it is agreed to; and if the conference report is rejected, of course, the whole matter goes back to conference. If the conference report shall be agreed to, however, House amendments to the so-called Austin amendment and the other Senate amendments will be submitted to the Senate for such action as the Senate may desire to take.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have noted in the Record 48 telegrams which I have received in the last few hours from West Virginians in behalf of the retention of the Austin amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the telegrams in the nature of petitions, praying for the retention of the so-called Austin amendment in the Post Office Department appropriation bill pertaining to the agricultural extension service item, were ordered to be noted in the RECORD and to lie on the table, as follows:

From E. B. Ruppenthal, president, Morgan Fruit Growers (Inc.), of Berkeley Springs; George W. Myers, jr.; W. T. McDonald; J. W. Lynch, member, Jefferson County executive committee; J. H. Abbot, assessor of Kanawha County; Charles C. Lewis, first president Kana Cooperative Farm Bureau 1914, and J. M. Slack, county clerk of Kanawha County, all of Charleston; the Marion County Farm Bureau, by A. L. Thomas, secretary, and Mrs. J. E. Watson, of Fairmont; J. M. Downs, of Farmington; J. Stemple, president Barbour County Wood Growers' Association, and A. L. Proudfoot, president Farm Bureau of Barbour County, of Philippi; Jackson County Farm Bureau, by G. H. Castrup, secretary, of Ripley; D. D. Cunningham, of Rivesville; Henry W. Campbell, secretary, Hampshire County Farm Bure

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I hope this conference report will be agreed to as it is presented. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] that I am personally very much in favor of the Austin amendment, and I hope that will be disposed of as the Senate disposed of it | previously by adopting it as offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TYDINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Coolidge Hebert Ashurst Pittman Copeland Dale Johnson Reed Reynolds Bailey Bankhead Kean Davis Dickinson Kendrick Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Keyes Barbour Barkley King La Follette Dill Russell Schuyler Bingham Sheppard Shortridge Smith Fletcher Black Lewis Frazier George Blaine Logan Long McGill Borah Bratton Glass Steiwer Glenn McKellar Stephens Brookhart McNary Metcalf Bulkley Goldsborough Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Bulow Gore Grammer Byrnes Moses Neely Norris Hale Harrison Wagner Walsh, Mass. Capper Caraway Carey Hastings Hatfield Nye Oddie Watson Wheeler Clark Connally Hayden Patterson White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not throw into the discard all the conferees did as the result of meeting every day and almost all day for nearly a week. The Senate conferees worked as hard as they could with the conferees on the part of the House to assure an agreement. We have agreed on certain amendments, and the House has accepted the conference report. The most important part of the bill is still in disagreement. That will have to go back to conference. If the Senate shall not accept this conference report and shall send it back to conference, then we will have to begin de novo, with the House conferees annoyed by our action and unable to understand why the Senate went back on its conferees on the matters on which they finally succeeded in agreeing. I hope that this little conference report, which does not represent a very large part of the bill, but does represent a lot of work, will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. If present, he would vote nav.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WHEELER (after having voted in the negative). transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas].

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL];

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS-36 Davis Dickinson Hebert Austin Barbour Kean Reynolds Robinson, Ind. So the conference report was rejected.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to say for the RECORD, for any interpretation that anybody may want to give it, that I voted one way and prayed the other way. [Laughter.]

Thomas, Idaho

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

I yield. Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. LONG. Is that the usual course of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Louisiana would not understand anything that I might say about prayers. [Laughter.]

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am doubtful whether anybody would understand what anybody said about prayers.

I send to the desk a concurrent resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

A concurrent resolution indorsing the passage of Senate bill 2487. introduced in the Senate of the Congress of the United States by Burron K. Wheeler, relative to the coinage of silver

Whereas there is pending in the Senate of the Congress of the United States a measure, known as Senate bill 2487, introduced by Burton K. Wheeler, the United States Senator from Montana, providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver on the basis of 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold; and Whereas we believe and maintain that international bimetallism should be promptly accomplished, if possible; but if not, then the United States, as a creditor nation of the world, should, with the United States, as a creditor nation of the world, should, with the aid of as many nations as possible, or, if necessary, alone, in the common cause of humanity and for their economic betterment, proceed to adopt and establish bimetallism on the ratio of 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana (the Senate concurring), That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana indorse and urge the passage of Senate bill 2487, introduced by Burton K. Wheeler, providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold.

Sec. 2. The clerk of the house of representatives is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the President elect of the United States and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to each United States Senator and Member of the Congress from Indiana.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as in executive session, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of sundry routine military nominations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator to say that he is acting on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be read. The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, these are all routine nominations of the grade of colonel and below. I ask that the reading may be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made; and, without objection, the nominees will be

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the President may be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified.

(The nominations this day confirmed appear at the end of to-day's proceedings.)

GASOLINE TAX

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that upon the completion of the bankruptcy legislation now before the Senate I shall ask that the gasoline tax bill, with my amendment providing for Federal-aid road appropriations, be made the order of business.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 466) for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co., which was, on page 1, line 12, after the word "claim," to insert "and in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, based on the above transaction: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. BOYLAN, and Mr. SUMMERS of Washington were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Smoot, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Hale, Mr. Glass, and Mr. COPELAND conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENBMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, on page 40, lines 23 and 24, to strike out the words "and excepting a farmer as hereinafter defined."

As I explained this morning, in view of the fact that under the following section it becomes necessary for 15 farmers to join in a petition to the judge of the district court before conciliation commissioners can be appointed, this becomes necessary in instances where there might not be found that number in any one county.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment would be to give a farmer the option of proceeding under either provision. Is not that true?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, on account of the disorder in the Chamber, I was unable to hear what the amendment was, and in what place in the bill it is proposed to be

Mr. HASTINGS. On page 40, lines 23 and 24, I propose to strike out the words beginning in line 23, "and excepting a farmer as hereinafter defined." The importance of it is that under section 75 it might be difficult in some instances for a farmer to take advantage of this section at all, because the section provides that 15 farmers must cooperate and state to the district judge that they desire to take advantage of this act.

Mr. BLAINE. As I read the language now on page 40, line 23—"Any person excepting a corporation and excepting a farmer as hereinafter defined may file a petition."

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct, and I want to strike out the words "and excepting a farmer as hereinafter defined," so that a farmer may take advantage of that section in cases where he can not or does not desire to take advantage of section 75.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 23, the Senator from Delaware proposes to strike out of the committee amend-ment the words "and excepting a farmer as hereinafter defined," so as to read:

Sec. 74. Compositions and extensions: (a) Any person excepting a corporation may file a petition, or, in an involuntary proceeding before adjudication, an answer within the time limited by section 18(b) of this act, accompanied in either case, unless further time is granted, by his schedules, stating that he is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature, and that he desires to effect a composition or an extension of time to pay

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, on page 45, line 13, after the word "lien," I want to add the words "or the amount thereof," making the proviso read:

Provided, however, That such extension or composition shall not impair the lien or the amount thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what would ! be the meaning of the language "impair the lien"? Does the Senator mean "reduce the amount"? I was just wondering whether the words "reduce the amount thereof" or "diminish the amount thereof" would not be appropriate.

Mr. HASTINGS, I think the suggestion is a good one, and I change the amendment to read "impair the lien or reduce the amount thereof."

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection to that, but I do not see any necessity for it.

Mr. HASTINGS. I agree with the Senator that the original language covers the object sought, but there have been a great many people who are disturbed about it and who have wondered whether, under that language, it would be possible to reduce the amount; and in order to make it certain, I have suggested this amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. May I suggest that if there are a great many people disturbed over that matter, I can very readily conceive how a great many more will be disturbed over a great many matters in this section.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is undoubtedly true.
Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to oppose the amendment. This provision in regard to the creating of the privilege or the right of extension to farmers for adjusting obligations and indebtedness upon their farms contemplates that they will be able to make some mutual adjustment with their creditors, or, at least, with a majority of their creditors. Yet, under the original provisions of the bill, the only latitude authorized under the terms of the extension is that of an extension of time for the payment of an indebtedness. That is the only latitude authorized and granted to a farmer, under this provision of the bill, in the matter of making an adjustment in the nature of an extension, while under the other provision of the bill, which is applicable to debtors generally speaking, a person would have the privilege of a composition settlement upon such terms as he might arrange.

The terms specified may affect the question not only of adjustment as to terms of payment or time of payment, but they are authorized to effectuate new terms and new conditions as to the amount that shall be paid. That, of course, is embraced within the idea of a composition settlement.

When we come to the special remedy which this bill proposes to set up for the farmer and for his accommodation, we restrict his privilege, and the beneficent features of the measure in his behalf, to allowing him to get some extension of terms only, regardless of the fact that on account of his disastrous and paralyzed condition financially he is not able to pay in full his indebtedness, that it would be to the creditors' advantage to make a reduction of the indebtedness and make an adjustment, that it would be impossible for him to carry on according to the original amount, and that it would be even of advantage to the creditors to make a reduction, the law as here proposed would not authorize it, and now the Senator from Delaware, to make it doubly sure that it would not be permitted, proposes to put in a provision which would make it even plainer that it would not be permitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If I understood the statement of the Senator from Florida, it was to the effect that under the terms of the bill as reported by the committee there might be no composition respecting the indebtedness of a farmer. Is that correct?

Mr. TRAMMELL. As originally reported; but the Senator from Delaware has offered an amendment, which, of course, would strike out that feature which previously would have prevailed against the farmer, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware would grant the farmer the privilege of a composition settlement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What I was about to say was that the Senator from Florida is entirely wrong in his | not be any misunderstanding about it.

statement. The amendment offered by me, and incorporated in the bill entitled "Agricultural compositions and extensions," beginning on page 48 and extending down to the end of the bill, expressly provides for compositions and extensions on behalf of the farmer, and is substantially similar to the arrangement carried in the previous sections relating to individual debtors generally. In proof of the correctness of my statement, I refer the Senator to page 50, paragraph (c) of the pending bill, which reads:

(c) At any time within five years after this section takes effect a petition may be filed by any farmer or by any creditor of such farmer, stating that the farmer is insolvent or unable to meet his debts as they mature, and that it is desirable to effect a composi-tion or an extension of time to pay his debts.

Then follows language which implements the principle of the provision which I have just read. There is just as much arrangement in the bill for compositions in behalf of farmers as in behalf of debtors generally, and there is no basis for the assertion or the conclusion that the relief relating to farmers is limited to mere extensions, as the Senator will readily see by referring to the language commencing on page 48 and extending down to the end of page 57.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me. It may be that the Senator has the wrong copy of the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have the bill that was placed on my desk. I do not think I made myself quite plain to the Senator. The position I am taking is that. under the provision for an extension settlement, the restrictions as to what may be contained in connection with an extension settlement, as found on page 44, line 22, read as follows, and this is setting forth the restriction of the terms of an extension agreement:

The terms of an extension proposal may extend to the time of payment of either or both unsecured debts and secured debts, the security for which is in the actual or constructive possession of the debtor or of the custodian or the receiver.

As I understand it—and I have not found any other privilege given to an extension settlement except that—that is the condition upon which an extension agreement may be made, to wit, an extension agreement is authorized to be made only upon the question of the time of payment, not upon the question of a reduction of indebtedness or rearrangement.

I want to get information, and if either the Senator from Delaware or the Senator from Arkansas can point out to me in the bill a provision where, under an extension agreement, there is any other latitude than in connection with the time of payment, of course I will be glad to have the information.

I am differentiating. There are two processes. There is one of composition settlement, which applies to people generally other than corporations, and in which there is an attempt, in the original amendment, until the Senator from Delaware recently amended it, to include the farmer, because the attempt was to set up a special remedy for the farmer until 10 minutes ago, when the Senator submitted his amendment. That, of course, should bring farmers within the composition provided, which I think is very proper. But if the extension provision is to be utilized. why should it not authorize a farmer who uses it to arrange also for a reduction of his indebtedness, and not merely take care of the question of whether or not the time should be extended 6, 12, or 18 months?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield. Mr. HASTINGS. May I make certain that the Senator understands that the purpose of the bill was not to compel the secured creditor to reduce the amount of his debt. The differences between the Senator's suggestion and that which we had in mind in the proposal are fundamental. I want to make it clear that it was not the purpose of those writing the bill that a secured creditor should be compelled to reduce the amount of his claim by a single dollar. That is the reason why I suggested the amendment so there could Mr. TRAMMELL. I realize that is the policy of those who wrote the bill and those who are reporting the bill. I think under existing circumstances it would be the part of wisdom to bring in the question of reduction of secured indebtedness. The security within itself would not be of sufficient value to absorb the assets. A person who is a secured creditor has a mortgage of $15,000 upon a farm. The farm is worth only $5,000. With him holding that kind of a club over the situation, how can the debtor effectuate any compromise or how can we effectuate any compromise to help the farmer arrange an equitable settlement?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the language on page 53 of the bill. The language is:

The terms of a composition or extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either secured or unsecured debts, or both, and may provide for priority of payments to be made during the period of extension as between secured and unsecured creditors. It may also include specific undertakings by the farmer during the period of the extension, including provisions for payments on account, and may provide for supervisory or other control by the conciliation commissioner over the farmer's affairs during such period, and for the termination of such period of supervision or control under conditions as specified.

Plainly under that language there may be a composition of secured or unsecured debts, and there may be an extension of secured or unsecured debts.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The other language in the bill plainly says there shall not be any impairment. It plainly says so, while this language is general. Therefore when the court comes to construe it he will hold as courts always do. When there is a specific provision upon a specific matter the court will hold that the specific provision shall prevail over the general language.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. "Impairment of lien" has relation to an entirely different subject than the question of composition. "Impairment of a lien" means the lessening of its effectiveness as a lien, but there is nothing to prevent a composition of secured or unsecured indebtedness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The section which was just read by the Senator from Arkansas, on page 53, doubly emphasizes my criticism of the provisions of the terms that may be written into an extension. The Senator read this language on page 53:

The terms of the composition or extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either secured or unsecured debts, or both, or may provide for priority of payments to be made during the period of extension as between secured and unsecured creditors.

The language does not say one word about or give any authority to the court to consider an extension agreement wherein there is a reduction of the indebtedness.

Now let us go to page 44 and find out what can be provided under an extension agreement. Of course, that is restricted to what the law authorizes. Here are the terms that may be written into an extension agreement:

The terms of an extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either or both unsecured debts and secured debts the security for which is in the actual or constructive possession of the debtor or of the custodian or receiver.

What can we put in the extension agreement under this bill? It can only be a question of the extension of the time of payment. The paragraph to which the Senator from Arkansas called attention does not go any farther than that language. It rather emphasizes that language.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know that I can make any clearer the statement I made a moment ago, but I will read the language, leaving out the alternative:

The terms of a composition may extend the time of payment of either secure or unsecure debts.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not talking about the terms of a composition. I have never said anything about the terms of a composition being restricted. If the official reporter will read my remarks, it will be seen that I have been talking about the terms of an extension agreement, which was the plan set up to help the farmer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If a debtor wishes to proceed for a composition, he may have an extension, provided it is approved in the proceedings contemplated by the bill, either as to a secured or an unsecured debt. In view of that fact, I do not think the suggestion of the Senator is sustained.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The provision of a privilege for the farmer has been very much broadened since the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] struck out that provision which precluded him from the right of a composition settlement. The bill as it was reported here until 15 minutes ago precluded the farmer from a composition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is where the Senator from Florida is in error. The bill expressly provides for composition on behalf of the farmer. I read part of the language a while ago. I am utterly unable to understand why the Senator from Florida repeats that statement. While section 75 has exclusive relationship to agricultural compositions and extensions, there is the language that I read a while ago expressly providing for composition for the benefit of the farmers either on their own initiative or on the initiative of their creditors. Then there are provisions for the action of conciliation commissioners in working out the composition. All through section 75 runs the subject of composition of farmers' indebtedness.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish first to reply to the Senator from Arkansas. If what the Senator from Arkansas has said is correct, then I do not understand why there was written into the bill, on page 40, section 74, treating of compositions and extensions, this language—any person excepting a corporation and excepting a farmer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will let me, I can explain that exception. The reason for excepting the farmer, as explained by the Senator from Delaware, is that farmers' compositions were provided for in the language I have already described in section 75. Originally it was not intended, and it was not intended when the bill was reported, that the provisions in section 74 should relate to compositions by farmers, because that subject is covered fully in section 75, and by the language in that section which I have read.

The reason why the Senator from Delaware proposed to strike out the exception as to farmers in section 74, which deals with compositions for debtors generally, was that in the farmers' composition section is a provision requiring that 15 farmers in the county shall petition for the appointment of a conciliation commissioner. The Senator from Delaware fears there would be some counties in which there would not be 15 farmers who would join in such a petition, and 14 farmers who might be found would be denied the opportunity to have compositions made in their behalf. That is all the significance of that language. The provisions in the farmers' composition section are just as clear, just as forceful, and quite as liberal as they are in the section relating to compositions for debtors generally. There is not a distinction in the world.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is my desire, and I am sure the Senator from Arkansas has the same desire I have in regard to this matter. After reading the bill I felt it was my duty to point out that the extension settlements did not have, within the authority granted, any provision to rearrange terms. Suppose a farmer owes $10,000 and wants an extension agreement. He has no cash. He is not able to effect, strictly speaking, a composition agreement, because as a rule when we undertake to effect a composition agreement the creditors want the money. The provisions of the bill show all the way through that it is contemplated that money shall be paid when effecting a composition settlement with creditors. During the better and earlier days I never knew of a composition settlement being made except where all cash was paid.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield. Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know that I heard all of the Senator's argument in connection with the matter, but I may state to him that I once considered whether after the word "creditor" in line 14, page 45, it was worth while writing in the words "without such creditor's consent." I wonder if that would aid the Senator?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Here is an amendment which I had prepared prior to the controversy which has been raging for the last few moments and which I was going to suggest when we reached that point. On page 45, line 1, after the word "receiver," I had thought of suggesting the words "and may provide for a reduction in the amount of either or both secured or unsecured debts." That merely provides a latitude under the extension provision.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is that but a composition?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It might be a composition, but at the same time we would have the privilege under this provision which provides especially for an extension for farmers, where it is proposed to set up a board of conciliation and have commissioners and try to provide some machinery. The purpose is to provide some machinery for the farmers to get an adjustment of their debts. But when it comes to the question of adjustment under that particular provision, the machinery which it is proposed to set up would restrict him only to the matter of getting the time for payment of his indebtedness extended. That is all the bill would permit him to do.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. In order that I may understand his objection to this measure, may I inquire whether the Senator is in favor of permitting a majority in number of unsecured creditors and a majority in amount of unsecured claims to compel the secured creditors to take the same kind of a settlement that they themselves are willing to take?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not in favor of a plan whereby the security of a person holding a secured debt, the security being equal to the indebtedness, is impaired; but there are more people in the country to-day, especially among the farmers, whose security is not equal to the amount of their indebtedness than there are those otherwise situated; and if we do not allow them to negotiate and let some one pass upon the question of whether or not the entire indebtedness may be reduced, then, of course, they are precluded from that privilege, and the only thing that a farmer can do is to get a little extension of the time of payment.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I say to the Senator that there is certainly nothing in this bill anywhere that prevents a secured creditor from voluntarily agreeing to reduce his claim on account of debts due him?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is a thing which the bill proposes to provide; but under the terms of an extension or settlement are expressly provided and undoubtedly are restricted by the provision on page 44, according to my recollection. This is what the bill provides; and, of course, I think all Senators realized the restriction when they wrote it in the

The terms of an extension proposal may extend the time of payment of either or both unsecured debts.

That is the only thing that can be gone into in such a settlement or extension. Under that paragraph and under that set-up of machinery that is the only question that can be considered. Can we apply any general relief without specifically providing the different things which may be done when we are proposing to change the bankruptcy laws and

Mr. HASTINGS. May I point out to the Senator that

A man may very well and in some instances, as it seems to me, will contend that if he be given time by a composition he can pay twice as much as he will be able to pay now. He therefore offers 30 cents to-day, payable in cash, and 60 cents on each dollar payable if they will give him a year, and 90 cents if they will give him two years. So there is a combination of the two, a composition between the creditor and the debtor and an extension at the same time. The only point is that the secured creditor is not compelled to reduce the amount of his debt at all, but, of course, he may voluntarily do it, and he may be compelled to wait for the collection of his debt if in equity the judge believes that if he gives an opportunity to the debtor he may rehabilitate himself financially.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, we are all aiming at the same end in this matter. The Senator states that the creditor may voluntarily do what is suggested. If he is proceeding under the special remedy for composition and the law providing for the special remedy specifically says that it shall not be done, has the court the authority then to reduce his indebtedness? If the proceeding be under the general bankruptcy law, under the composition settlement, why, of course, it is discretionary with the creditors as to what they may do; but when the proceeding is under a new provision, an emergency provision, is not the court restricted in passing upon a proposal in a case of that kind to the provisions under which the parties are operating?

I have known of bankruptcy cases—I happen to have been engaged as attorney in some cases-where some of the creditors were so determined to get their whole "pound of flesh" that other creditors had to raise a part of the money in order to get an adjustment with them for the purpose of effecting the composition settlement. I should dislike to have a relief measure, intended for people under the pitiable conditions that exist in this country, to take such a position that a few creditors calling themselves "secured creditors" could throw a monkey wrench into the machinery and prevent an equitable and just settlement. I should very much dislike to see a condition of that kind.

I think the Senator from Delaware is right in that there should be provision for a composition settlement and for an extension settlement, and that the two may be combined. The question in my mind is when the court comes to consider the matter whether he is going to construe the bill to mean that there was any intention on the part of Congress that the two should be combined. I have never sat on the bench; but I think that when the two remedies are set out specifically and separately and distinctly, the court is not going to construe that those two methods of relief shall be combined in one action but will hold that the parties will have to come through either one door or the other; that they will have to come through the composition door or they will have to come through the door providing for an extension. If they operate under the extension provision they will have to operate under the extension machinery providing for reconciliation commissioners and inspectors and so forth, but if it be a composition, then there will be employed the machinery for such composition.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. I call the Senator's attention to the provision of paragraph (f) on page 44 which provides for the confirmation of compositions or extensions. The word used in the bill is "proposals"-

Application for the confirmation of the composition or extension proposal.

If the Senator will follow along to the next paragraph, paragraph (g), he will see that it is there made obligatory upon the court to confirm such proposals. In other words, if the proposal has in it a provision for an extension as well as for a composition the court shall confirm it if satisfied that it is "equitable and feasible," and so on. Clearly the purpose of that language is to provide for the consideration there may be a composition and an extension combined? of both a composition and an extension in the same proposal.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course we just have a little difference as a matter of legal construction. That provision deals, I understand, specifically with compositions. Following along at a later time, and in a different paragraph, there is a provision which deals with extension settlements. I know we all aim to do the best we can for the poor unfortunate people in this country, whether they are farmers or otherwise.

This amendment has already been pretty thoroughly discussed, and I am going to propose an amendment, and we will have a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question first comes on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, after which the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think it advisable to have the amendment read; it has not as yet been read.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, during this discussion I have concluded to change the amendment a little; and I desire to withdraw my pending amendment and offer one on page 45, line 13, after the word "not" to make it read in this way:

That such extension or composition shall not reduce the amount of or impair the lien of any secured creditor.

I think that follows out the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas and reads a little better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment now presented by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, what amendment are we considering? Is it the amendment of the Senator from Florida or the amendment of the Senator from Delaware?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida is not now in order. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment reported by the committee is before the Senate. The question is on that

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] has offered an amendment which the clerk

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, in line 1, after the word "receiver," it is proposed to add the following: "and may provide for a reduction in the amount of either or both secured or unsecured debts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I wanted to interrupt the Senator from Florida while he was on the floor some time ago. As I understand, his amendment would justify the tribunal, without the consent of the secured creditor, to reduce the amount of his claim? Is that correct?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It does not provide for a reduction of the value of the security, but it does provide that there may be a reduction in amount. The Senator from Delaware has just had an amendment adopted which provides that the amount of the security shall not be impaired or lessened. My amendment refers to a reduction in the

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator contend that Congress has the power to authorize some tribunal to reduce the amount of any contract, whether it is a secured or an unsecured claim?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The same criticism may be made as to other provisions and the general purposes of this bill. In the general provisions of the bill we are attempting to say that those disconnected with the matter, who are not in anywise in the transaction, may force a reduction of the debt regardless of the kind it is. Of course, it applies to unsecured debts, but they might be contractual debts, debts entered into by solemn contract, and we permit a certain number of creditors to come in and say that such debts shall be reduced. So I think the same criticism might be launched against even that provision of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I was just curious to ascertain whether or not the Senator intended to confer upon any tribunal, under any procedure, the right to reduce the amount of any contract claimed without the consent of the creditor?

Mr. TRAMMELL. This whole bill provides that a majority of creditors in amount could do that under the composition settlement and under the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator believe that the Congress has such power?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am going to support the bill because of the emergency.

Mr. BLAINE. I am asking the Senator the frank question, Does he believe that the Congress has such power?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not studied that feature sufficiently well to commit myself on that legal point. I am going to waive the doubt in favor of the people of the country who need this relief. That is about the only answer that I can give.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator is contending that Congress has that power?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I left it to the committee to investigate that question.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me put this question: Is it not rather unfair toward the farmer to let him believe that something is going to be done for him when we know that it can not be done under the Constitution?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Delaware? I desire to offer two amendments that relate to the same subject matter. I believe the Senator from Delaware will accept them.

On page 41, line 8, after the word "property," insert "including a claim for future rent."

Mr. HASTINGS. I certainly thought I had that in the section. I may say to the Senator that a great many applications have been made to me with respect to that, and I saw no objection to putting it in; but it may be that I did not get it in this particular section.

Mr. BRATTON. I think it is not.

On the next page I desire to offer another amendment which relates to the same matter. I think both of them will be acceptable.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire just where the Senator proposes to put that, please?

Mr. BRATTON. On page 41, line 8, after the word "prop-'insert "including a claim for future rent."

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no objection to that amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Then, Mr. President, on the next page, page 42, line 6, after the period, I move to insert: "A claim for future rent shall constitute a provable debt, and shall be liquidated under section 63 (b) of this act."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. HASTINGS. Referring to the language just written into line 8, page 41, which I said I thought was in this section, I ask the Senator whether he has considered, on page 42, the language beginning in line 1?-

The term "creditor" shall include for the purpose of an extension proposal under this section all holders of claims of whatever character against the debtor or his property, including a claim

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I had considered that, but that describes the holder of the claim.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have no objection to the other amend-

Mr. BRATTON. I thought the definition of "debt" should include an express provision respecting future rent.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, may we have the second amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send up his amendment?

Mr. BRATTON. I send up the amendment, to be inserted on page 42, line 6, following the period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 42, line 6, following the period, it is proposed to insert a new sentence, reading as follows:

A claim for future rent shall constitute a provable debt, and shall be liquidated under section 63 (b) of this act.

Mr. HASTINGS. I inquire of the Senator from New Mexico whether that is not an amendment affecting the rents under the old law. As I stated this morning, there are so many things that various people want corrected in the old statute that I was very much afraid to get into it for fear we would get into a great deal of trouble in connection with it; and I have sought in this bill in the other sections to prevent any controversy arising under the old act. Therefore I intended that those words should apply to these particular sections.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I concur with the Senator that we should free ourselves of any contact with the old act; and I think I shall withdraw the amendment. I do not care to go into the old act. I think we should not do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator. Mr. BRATTON. Let me ask the Senator from Delaware whether he thinks that with the amendment already adopted on page 41, line 6, a claim for future rent could be established and receive the same consideration and the same disposition under this measure that any other claim or any other debt would receive?

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator mean without its being written in there?

Mr. BRATTON. No; with the amendment already adopted.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not any doubt of it, with the amendment already adopted; and my own notion about it was that it would be true without having it written in there at all, because we have undertaken in these sections to include all the claims that could be had against a debtor, so that when he got relief he might know that he had relief from every kind of a claim that might be had against him.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, temporarily I shall withdraw the amendment offered at page 42, line 6.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for another moment? I have amendments that I desire to offer at three other places in the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not going to speak. I was going to offer some amendments. I should prefer that the Senator offer his amendments, and then I should like to offer some.

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well.

On page 51, line 9, the section reads at this time:

After the filing of such petition or answers by the farmer, the farmer shall, within such time and in such form as the conciliation commissioner shall determine, file an inventory of his estate.

When I first considered this amendment I had thought that was a dangerous thing to write in there, because we would have one conciliation commissioner adopting one form and one time in which returns should be made, and some other conciliation commissioner adopting another time; so we have provided in another place that the Supreme Court is authorized to make such general orders as it may find necessary. My attention was called to the fact that that probably was not necessary to be written into the bill, but so far as I can see it does no particular harm.

I desire on line 9, page 51, to strike out the words "conciliation commissioner shall determine" and write in the words "rules provide," so that it will read:

The farmer shall, within such time and in such form as the rules provide, file an inventory of his estate.

I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, on page 54 I want to make the same correction in the farmer section as was made in the individual section referring to the extension of secured debt. In order to do it, it will be necessary to write in after the word "not" on line 4, page 54, the words "reduce the amount of nor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. On page 55, line 15, beginning with line 15, the section reads:

Except upon petition made to and granted by a court of bank-ruptcy after hearing and report by the conciliation commissioner, the following proceedings shall not be instituted:

That is a very drastic provision preventing executions and what not from being carried out against a debtor. My attention has been called to the fact that "a court of bankruptcy" frequently means a referee, and it is believed that that sort of an important thing ought to be heard by the judge. I desire, therefore, to propose an amendment on page 55, beginning on line 15, to strike out the letter "a." and on line 16 to strike the words "court of bankruptcy" and insert in lieu thereof "the judge."

I propose that as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, this morning I referred to the importance of protecting the corporations or individuals that may have guaranteed the principal and interest of a mortgage. I read a proposed amendment which I have somewhat modified; and I propose this now as a new section and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 57, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to strike out the quotation marks and insert the following new section:

SEC. 76. Extensions or compositions, made pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this chapter, shall extend the obligation of any person who is secondarily liable to any person for the prompt payment of such debt or debts, or any part thereof, and a copy of the order confirming such extension or composition, certified as required by the provisions of law with reference to Judgments and proceedings in courts of the United States, shall be sufficient evidence that such extension or composition has been confirmed in any suit or proceeding brought against any been confirmed in such person so liable.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield. Mr. BRATTON. It is the purpose of this amendment to give to one bound secondarily the same benefits accruing to the one bound primarily?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is right.

Mr. BRATTON. And in case of a composition with a reduction of the amount due, the indorser or other person secondarily liable would have the benefit of that?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BRATTON. If it is merely an extension of the time of payment without any reduction of amount, the one secondarily liable gets the benefit of that?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is true; and, there being no authority for any court to reduce the amount without his consent, of course he is amply protected.

amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, there is one other amendment that has been submitted to me by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] to which I desire to give a little further consideration.

I now desire to offer, but do not ask for its consideration at the present time, a section relating to the reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator want it read?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want it read. I just want to have it offered. I am not asking that it be considered at

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator withhold that until I can offer some amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not pending. The Senator is not offering it to be considered now.

Mr. HASTINGS. Not for the present.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator have the amendment printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HASTINGS. In accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table and be printed. The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Hastings to the bill (H. R. 14859) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, viz: On page 57, after line 10, insert the following:

"SEC. — Reorganization of railroads engaged in interstate commerce: (a) Any railroad corporation may file a petition stating that the railroad corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization. The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the railroad corporation, during the preceding six months or the greater portion thereof, has had its principal executive or operating office or with the court in whose jurisdiction the corporation has its domicile, and a copy of the petition shall at the same time be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission hereinafter called the commission. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in addition to the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other sections of this act. Upon the filing of such a petition, the judge shall enter an order either approving it as properly filed under this section, if satisfied that such petition complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing it. If the petition is entered shall, during the pendency of the proceedings under this section, have exclusive jurisdiction of the debtor and its property wherever located. The railroad corporation shall be referred to in the poceedings as a 'debtor.' Any corporation, the majority of the capital stock of which having power to vote for the election of directors is owned, either directly or indirectly through an intervening medium, by any railroad corporation filing a petition as a debtor under this section, or substantially all of whose properties are operated by such a debtor under lease or operating agreement may file, with the court in which such other debtor had filed such a petition, and in the proceeding upon such petition under this section, a petition stating that it is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it mature and that it desires to effect a plan of reorganization in connection with, or as a part of, the plan of reorganization of such other debtor; and thereupon such court shall have the same jurisother debtor; and thereupon such court shall have the same jurisdiction with respect to it, its property and its creditors and stockholders as the court has with respect to such other debtor. Creditors of any railroad corporation having claims or interests aggregating not less than 5 per cent of all the indebtedness of such railroad corporation as shown in the latest annual report which it has filed with the commission at the time when the petition is filed, may, if the railroad corporation has not filed a petition under this section, but subject to first having obtained the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, after hearing, upon notice to such railroad corporation, file with the court in which such railroad corporation might file a petition under the provisions of this section, a petition stating that such railroad corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that such creditors propose that it shall effect a reorganization; upon such filing of such a petition copies thereof shall be

The question is on the forthwith upon the railroad corporation; the railroad corporation shall, within 10 days after such service, answer such petition; if such answer shall admit the jurisdiction of the court, that the claims of the petitioning creditors constitute the amounts necessary to entitle them to file such petition under this section, and that the railroad corporation is either insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, the court shall, upon the filing of the recommendations of the commission in writing, enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this section if satisfied that it complies with this section and has been filed in good faith, or disapprove it if not so satisfied; and if so approved the proceedings thereon shall continue with like effect as if the railroad corporation had itself filed a petition under this section; if such answer shall deny either the jurisdiction of the court or that the claims of the petitioning creditors constitute such necessary amounts or that the railroad corporation is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, the court shall summarily try the issues, and if after the filing of the recommendations of the commission in writing it shall find that the petition complies with this section, and has been filed in good faith, the court shall enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this section, and the proceedings thereon shall continue with like effect as if the railroad corporation had itself filed a petition under this section; otherwise the court shall dismiss the petition.

"(b) A plan of reorganization within the meaning of this section (1) shall include a proposal to modify or alter the rights of creditors generally, or of any class of them, secured or unsecured, either through the issuance of new securities of any character or otherwise; (2) may include, in addition, provisions modifying or alterthrough the issuance of securities of the property of the debtor with those of another railroad corporation and the issuance of sec

The term 'creditors' shall, except as otherwise specifically provided in this section, include, for all purposes of this section and of the reorganization plan, its acceptance and confirmation, all holders of claims, interests, or securities of whatever character against the debtor or its property, including claim for future rent, whether or not such claims, interests, or securities would otherwise constitute provable claims under this act.

"(c) Upon approving the petition as properly filed the judge (1) may temporarily appoint a trustee or trustees of the debtor's estate, who shall have all the title and, subject to the control of the judge and consistently with the provisions of this section, shall exercise all the powers of a trustee appointed pursuant to section 44 or any other section of this act, and, subject to the judge's control, shall have the power to operate the business of the railroad corporation; (2) shall fix the amount of the bond of such trustee or trustees and require the debtor, the trustee, or trustees to give such notice as the order may direct to creditors and stockholders and to cause publication thereof to be made at least once a week for two successive weeks of a hearing to be held within 30 days after such appointment, at which hearing or any adjournment thereof the judge may make permanent such appointment, or may terminate it and may, in the manner herein provided for the appointment of trustees, appoint a substitute trustee or substitute trustees, and in the same manner may appoint an additional trustee or additional trustee or trustees; the trustee or trustees and their counsel shall receive such compensation as the judge may allow within a maximum approved by the commission; (3) may for cause shown, and with the approval of the comthe judge may allow within a maximum approved by the commission; (3) may for cause shown, and with the approval of the commission, in accordance with section 20 (a) of the interstate commission, in accordance with section 20 (a) of the interstate commerce act, as amended, authorize the trustee or trustees to issue certificates for cash, property, or other consideration approved by the judge, for such lawful purposes and upon such terms and conditions and with such security and such priority in payments over existing obligations, secured or unsecured, as might in an equity receivership be lawful; (4) shall require the debtor, at such time or times as the judge may direct and in lieu of the schedules required by section 7 of this act, to file such schedules and submit such other information as may be necessary to disclose the conduct of the debtor's affairs and the fairness of any proposed plan; (5) shall determine a reasonable time within which the claims and interests of creditors and stockholders may be filed or evidenced and after which no such claim or interest may participate in any and after which no such claim or interest may participate in any plan except on order for cause shown; the manner in which such claims and interests may be filed or evidenced and allowed, and, for the purposes of the plan and its acceptance, the division of creditors and stockholders into classes according to the nature of their respective claims and interests; (6) shall cause reasonable notice of such determination, or of the dismissal of the proceedings, or the allowance of fees or expenses, to be given creditors and stockholders by publication or otherwise; (7) if a plan of reorganization is not proposed or accepted, or, if proposed and accepted, is not confirmed, within such reasonable time as the judge may, upon cause shown and after considering any recommendation which has been filed by the commission, allow, may mendation which has been filed by the commission, allow, may dismiss the proceeding; (8) may, within such maximum limits as are fixed by the commission, as elsewhere provided in subdivision (g) of this section, allow a reasonable compensation for the services rendered and reimbursement for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan by officers, parties in interest, reorganization managers, and committees or other representatives of creditors or stockholders, and by their attorneys or agents, and by such assistants as the commission with the approval of the judge may specially employ; and (9) may on his own motion or at the request of the commission refer any matters for consideration and report, either generally or refer any matters for consideration and report, either generally or upon specified issues, to one of several special masters who shall have been previously designated to act as special masters in any proceedings under this section by order of any circuit court of appeals and may allow such master a reasonable compensation for proceedings under this section by order of any circuit court of appeals and may allow such master a reasonable compensation for his services. The circuit court of appeals of each circuit shall designate three or more members of the bar as such special masters whom they deem qualified for such services, and shall from time to time revise such designations by changing the persons designated or reducing or adding to their number, as the public interest may require: Provided, however, That there shall always be three of such special masters qualified for appointment in each circuit who shall in their respective circuits hear any matter referred to them under this section by a judge of any district court. For all purposes of this section claims against a railroad corporation which would have been entitled to priority over existing mortgages if a receiver in equity of the property of the debtor had been appointed by a Federal court at the date of the filing of the petition hereunder shall be entitled to such priority, and holders of such claims shall be treated as a separate class of creditors. If in any case in which the issues have not already been tried under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section any of the debtor's creditors shall, prior to the hearing provided for in subdivision (c), clause (2), of this section, appear and controvert the facts alleged in the petition, the judge shall determine, as soon as may be, the issues presented by the pleadings, without the intervention of a jury, and unless the material allegations of the petition are sustained by the proofs shall dismiss the petition. Any creditor or stockholder shall be heard on the question of the appointment of any trustee or trustees, the proposed approval of any reorganization plan, and upon filing a petition for leave to intervene on such other questions arising in the proceeding as the judge shall determine. The debtor, or the trustees if appointed, shall within 15 days or, upon cause shown, such other time as may be directed by the ju by the debtor or the trustees in a proceeding under this section or otherwise. Such lists shall be open to the inspection of any creditor or stockholder of, or claimant against, the debtor, during reasonable business hours, upon application to the debtor or trustees, as the case may be.

"(d) Before creditors and stockholders of the debtor are asked finally to accept any plan of reorganization, the Interstate Com-merce Commission shall after due notice hold a public hearing at which the debtor shall present its plan of reorganization and at which, also, such a plan may be presented by the trustee or trustees, or by or on behalf of creditors of the debtor, being not trustees, or by or on behalf of creditors of the debtor, being not less than 10 per cent in amount of any class of creditors. Following such hearing, the commission shall render a report in which it shall recommend a plan of reorganization (which may be different from any which has been proposed) that will, in its opinion be equitable, will not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, will be financially advisable, will meet with the requirements of subdivision (g) of this section, and will be compatible with the public interest. In such report the commission shall state fully the reasons for its conclusions, and upon further hearing if the commission shall deem necessary, modify any of its recommendations and conclusions in a supplemental report stating the reasons for such modification. There modify any of its recommendations and conclusions in a supplemental report stating the reasons for such modification. Thereafter the plan of reorganization recommended by the commission shall be submitted in such manner as the commission may direct to the creditors and stockholders of the debtor for acceptance or rejection, together with the report or reports of the commission thereon; and the commission shall at the same time afford an expection, the accept or reject any other plan of reorganization.

thereon; and the commission shall at the same time afford an opportunity to accept or reject any other plan of reorganization filed as in this subdivision (d) provided.

"(e) A plan of reorganization shall not be recommended by the commission until it has been accepted in writing and such acceptance has been filed in the proceeding by or on behalf of creditors holding two-thirds in amount of the claims of each class whose claims or interests would be affected by the plan, and by or on behalf of stockholders of the debtor holding two-thirds of the stock of each class: Provided, however, That if adequate provision is made in the plan for the protection of the interests, claims, and liens of any class of creditors or stockholders in the manner provided in clauses (5) and (6) of subdivision (g), of this section, then the acceptance of the plan by such class of creditor or stockholders shall not be requisite to the approval of the plan: And provided further, That the acceptance of stockholders shall not be requisite to the confirmation of the plan if (1) the judge shall have determined (a) that the corporation is insolvent, or (b) that the interests of stockholders will not be adversely affected by the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan, and its stockholders are bound by such acceptance. For the purposes of this section acceptance by a creditor or stockholder shall include acceptance in writing executed by him; or acceptance by his duly authorized attorney or committee acting under authority executed by him subsequent to the recommendation of poses of this section acceptance by a creditor or stockholder shall include acceptance in writing executed by him; or acceptance by his duly authorized attorney or committee acting under authority executed by him subsequent to the recommendation of the plan by the commission. Upon acceptance of the plan in accordance with the provisions of this subdivision (e) the commission may, without further proceedings, grant authority for the issue of any securities, assumption of obligations, transfer of any property, or consolidation or merger of properties, to the extent contemplated by the plan consistent with the purposes of the interestate commerce act as amended. If the United States of America is directly a creditor or stockholder, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept or reject a plan in respect of the interests or claims of the United States.

"(f) If the plan recommended by the commission is accepted as provided in subdivision (e), the commission shall thereupon certify the plan to the court together with its approval thereof and that the same has been so accepted, together with a report of the proceedings before it and its conclusions thereon. If the plan accepted as provided in subdivision (e) differs from the plan recommended by the commission, it shall, upon acceptance, be submitted to the commission, which shall hear all interested parties upon such notice and subject to such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe. If after such hearing the commission determines that the accepted plan in its opinion is equitable and will not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders; will be financially advisable; will meet the requirements of subdivision (g) of this section; and will be compatible with the public interest; the commission shall thereupon certify the plan to the court, together with its approval thereof and that the same has been duly accepted, and together with a report of the proceedings before it and its findings and conclusions thereon. The comm shall decline to issue such a certificate, it shall file in the proceedings its decision, specifying the particular grounds upon which it bases its disapproval of the plan.

"(g) Upon such approval by the commission, and after hearing such objections as may be made to the approved plan, the judge shall confirm the plan if satisfied that (1) the approved plan complies with the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section, is equitable and does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders; (2) all amounts to be paid by the debtor or by any corporation or corporations acquiring the debtor's assets, for services or expenses incident to the reorganization and cost of financing, have been fully disclosed and are reasonable, or are to be subject to the approval of the judge; (3) the offer of the plan and its acceptance are in good faith and have not been made or procured by any means or promises forbidden by this act; (4) the approved plan provides for the payment of all costs of administration and other allowances made by the court, except that compensation provided for in subdivision (c), clause (8) of this section may be paid in securities provided for in the plan if those entitled thereto will accept such payment and the court finds such compensation reasonable; (5) the approved plan provides, with respect to stockholders of any class the acceptance of which is requisite to the confirmation of the plan, and who would not become bound by the plan under the provision of subdivision (h) of this section, and of which more than one-third have not accepted the plan, adequate protection for the realization by them of the value of their equity, if any, in the property at not less than a fair upset price, or by appraisal and payment in cash either of the value of their stock or, at the objecting stockholder's election, of the value of the securities, if any, alloted to such stock under the plan; (6) the plan provides with respect to any class of creditors the acceptance of which is requisite to the confirmation of the plan, and who would not become bound b realization by them of the value of their securities, liens, and claims, either (a) by the sale of such property subject to their liens, if any, or (b) by the sale free of such liens at not less than a fair upset price, and the transfer of such liens to the proceeds of such sale, or (c) by appraisal and payment in cash of either the value of such liens and claims or, at the objecting creditors' election, the value of the securities allotted to such liens and claims under the plan. Section 57, clause (h), of this act shall be applicable to the appraisal of securities under this section, and the value of the unpaid balance shall be appraised as an unsecured claim; and (7) the debtor, and every other corporation issuing securities or acquiring property under the plan, is authorized by its charter or by applicable State or Federal laws, upon confirmation of the plan, to carry out the plan. In the case of a sale or appraisal under clause (5) or (6) of this subdivision (g) the court shall refer to the commission for its consideration and recommendation the amount to be fixed as the upset price and the appraisal of any securities.

and the appraisal of any securities.

"(g) Upon such confirmation the provisions or plan shall be binding upon (1) the corporation, (2) all stockholders if the judge shall have determined (a) that the corporation is insolvent, or (b) that the interests of stockholders will not be adversely affected by the plan, or (c) that the debtor has pursuant to authorized corporate action accepted the plan and its stockholders are bound by such acceptance, (3) all stockholders of each class of which two-thirds in amount shall have accepted the plan, (4) all creditors whose claims are payable in cash in full under the plan, (5) all creditors entitled to priority under subdivision (c) of this section, whose claims are not payable in cash in full under the plan, provided two-thirds in amount of such creditors shall have accepted the plan in writing filed in the proceeding, (6) all other unsecured creditors, provided two-thirds in amount of such creditors shall have accepted the plan in writing filed in the proceeding, and (7) all secured creditors of each class of which two-thirds in amount shall have accepted the plan. The confirmation of the plan shall discharge the debtor from its debts except as provided in the plan. Upon confirmation of the plan by the judge, the debtor and other corporations affected by the plan, or organized or to be organized for the purpose of carrying out the plan, shall have full power and authority to put into effect and carry out the plan and the orders of the judge relative thereto, the laws of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding; and they shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, as designated in section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints, prohibitions, or requirements by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything auth (g) Upon such confirmation the provisions or plan shall be

"(1) Upon the confirmation of the plan the property dealt with by the plan, when transferred and conveyed to the debtor or other corporation or corporations provided for by the plan, or if no trustee or trustees have been appointed when held by the debtor pursuant to the plan, shall, as the court may direct, be free and clear of all claims of the debtor, its stockholders and creditors, except such as may consistently with the provisions of the plan be reserved in the order confirming the plan or directing such transfer and conveyance, and the court may direct the trustee or trustees, or if there be no trustee or trustees the debtor, to make any such transfer and conveyance, and may direct the debtor to join in any such transfer or conveyance made by the trustee or trustees. Upon the termination of the proceeding a final decree shall be entered discharging the trustee or trustees, if any, making such provisions as may be equitable, and closing the case.

"(k) If a receiver of all or any part of the property of a corporation has been appointed by a Federal or State court, whether before or after this amendatory act takes effect, the railroad corporation may nevertheless file a petition or answer under this section at any time thereafter, but if it does so and the petition is approved the trustee or trustees appointed under the provisions of this section shall be entitled forthwith to possession of such property, and the judge shall make such orders as he may deem equitable for the protection of obligations incurred by the receiver and for the payment of such reasonable administrative expenses and allowances in the prior proceeding under this section, the judge may include in the order of dismissal appropriate provisions directing the trustee to transfer possession of the debtor's property within the territorial jurisdiction of such court to the receiver so appointed, up and for the payment of administrative expenses and allowances in the proceeding hereunder. For the purposes of this section the words 'Federal court' shall include the district courts of the United States and of the Territories and possessions to which this act is or may hereafter be applicable, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States Court of Alaska.

of the property dealt with by the plan as provided in subdivision (j) of this section shall be evidence of the transfer and conveyance of title accordingly, and if recorded shall impart the same notice that a deed if recorded would impart.

"(n) In proceedings under this section 76 and consistent with the provisions thereof, the jurisdiction and powers of the court, the duties of the debtor and the rights and liabilities of creditors, and of all persons with respect to the debtor and his property, shall be the same as if a voluntary petition for adjudication had been filed and a decree of adjudication had been entered on the day when the debtor's petition was filed.

"(o) The term 'railroad corporation' as used in section 76 of this act means any common carrier by railroad engaged in the transportation of persons or property in interstate commerce except a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway which is not operated as a part of a general railroad system of transportation."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have four amendments to offer. They relate to substantially the same subject-two of them to each one of the sections; that is the section respecting individual debtors, and the section respecting farm debtors.

I now send to the desk the proposed amendments, and invite the attention of the Senator from Delaware to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes the following amendment to the amendment of the committee: On page 53, line 25, after the word "specified," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not affect the allowances and exemptions to debtors as are provided for bank-rupts under Title II, chapter 3, section 24, of the United States Code, and such allowances and exemptions shall be set aside for the use of the debtor in the manner provided for bankrupts.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there is nothing technical about this amendment. It provides for the preservation of the debtor's right to exemptions and allowances. I assume there is no opposition to it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, of course the bill now before the Senate is not, strictly speaking, a bankruptcy bill. It is wholly a matter of agreement between a majority in number and amount of the creditors and the debtor himself. I have not given careful consideration to it, but it occurs to me that all of this being matter of agreement, when it comes to a question of extension, or comes to a question of composition, they will either take this into consideration or not, just as the agreement may be had between them. I do not believe it helps the debtor any as it would in the involuntary bankruptcy proceeding. I do not know that it does any particular harm.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, let me call attention to the very simple provision in the bill that if the petition is filed, either voluntarily or involuntarily, then the farmer and his entire property and affairs immediately are subjected to the exclusive jurisdiction of the tribunal, and that includes his exempt property, of course. In drafting the bankruptcy act it was then regarded as absolutely essential to insert a protective provision for exemptions and allowances. I think that is very essential in connection with this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, in view of the deliberate judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin upon it, I will consent to the amendment being agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I propose another amend-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 9, after the word "conditions," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not affect the allowances and exemptions to debtors as are provided for bankrupts under Title II, chapter 3, section 24, of the United States Code, and such allowances and exemptions shall be set aside for the use of the debtor in the manner provided for bankrupts.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, that is applying the same amendment to section 73.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am willing to accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have two other amendments, and let me say that I have drafted them for each separate section. I will offer one for section 73.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 18, to strike out the period after the word "dismissed" and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the debts having priority of payment under Title II, chapter 7, section 104, of the United States Code, for bankrupt estates, shall have priority of payment in the same order as set forth in said section 104 under the provisions of this section in any distribution, assignment, composition, or settlement herein provided for.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what are those debts?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, those debts are all preferred claims, and they are as follows: Taxes. The actual, necessary costs of preserving the estate. The filing fees paid by the creditor. This is in involuntary cases, but refers to the same character of claims and may not apply under this bill. The costs of administration, and there should be very little in the way of costs. Wages due to workmen, clerks, servants, and so forth. Debts owing to any person who, by the laws of the States or the United States, is entitled to priority. Those are the claims which have priority in bank-runtey.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Is it the purpose of this amendment to exclude from agreements for compositions and extensions those debts which have priority under the bankruptcy statute, even though the parties want to have them included?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no. The parties would have a perfect right to go in and consent to the inclusion. But if there is any judicial determination for distribution, assignment, or approval of a composition or settlement which provides otherwise, and without the consent of the parties, priority should prevail as now provided by the bankruptcy law, which includes taxes first, then the costs of administration, then wages of servants and employees, and then the debts having priority under the laws of the State or of the United States.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it is my understanding that this provision in the bill affecting these debtors could not be availed of except by agreement, and that being so, the agreement would include the provisions as to whether or not those exemptions were to come in as a part of the agreement.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; but the bill contemplates more than just an agreement. There may be an adjudication under the bill, there may be a transformation of the proceeding into a bankruptcy proceeding before they get through.

Mr. HEBERT. In that case, of course, the exemptions must of necessity be taken into account.

Mr. BLAINE. Perhaps; I am not so certain about it.

Mr. HEBERT. Would not the debtor revert to the provisions of the bankruptcy law if he were adjudicated a bankrupt?

Mr. BLAINE. If it were transformed into a bankruptcy proceeding that would be true, but the language of the bill is so broad, some of it so uncertain, that I think if the validity of the act is to be preserved in any degree, these prior claims must be preserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I offer another amendment to the next section, the farm section, of identically the same character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, line 10, to strike out the period after the word "dismissed" and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the debts having priority of payment under Title II, chapter 7, section 104, of the United States Code, for bankrupt estates, shall have priority of payment in the same order as set forth in said section 104 under the provisions of this section in any distribution, assignment, composition, or settlement herein provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have one other amendment. I have not written it out, but it is very simple. It is on page 40, section 74, at the beginning of the sentence on line 23, to insert the following words: "At any time within five years after this section takes effect," and continue, "any person excepting a corporation," and so forth.

The purpose of the amendment is to bring the section into harmony with identically the same provision on page 50 as it refers to the farmer, that is, not to extend the time within which this act may apply beyond five years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon that amendment. After very careful study by the Department of Justice it was believed that this section for the relief of individual debtors ought to be a permanent thing. The only reason why the section relative to the farmers was limited to five years was that we had undertaken to do something a little different and something that would give them a greater relief than they could get under section 74. Under normal conditions it would not be necessary to have these conciliation commissioners, and so on. After a period of five years it was at least hoped that they would not be necessary, and then they would have the advantage under section 74. It was believed by those who have given great study to this subject that it was a good thing always to have a provision in the bankruptcy law for a distressed debtor who might get some relief by agreeing with his creditors without bearing forever afterwards the stigma of bankruptcy. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I will address myself to that proposition very briefly. No more stigma will apply to the individual debtor in being called a bankrupt than will be applied to the individual farmer being called a bankrupt. There is no difference at all. Why apply the stigma to a farmer and save him only five years from that stigma, but save the other debtor, who is a trader, a business man, a manufacturer, a lawyer, a banker, a candlestick maker, from the stigma perpetually?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the Senator did not understand my statement with respect to this. I certainly did not intend to put any more of a stigma upon the farmer than upon the rest.

Mr. BLAINE. I know the Senator did not.

Mr. HASTINGS. Here is what happens: After five years the farmer comes back into the class with other people who become debtors instead of bankrupts under this section. This special provision for the farmer is because of the extraordinary condition which confronts him just now, and which, it was believed, might not be necessary to apply to other persons.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that, but this is an emergency measure.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not admit that section 74 is intended solely as an emergency measure. It is intended to be a permanent benefit to the people all over the country for all time, if it works out as we believe it will work out.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the proposal, of course, is to apply this method of relieving debtors indefinitely as a permanent law?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BLAINE. I submit that is exactly a very serious objection to the consideration or passage of the bill. The Judiciary Committee has not given any consideration to the bill whatever. No study of it has been made by the Judiciary Committee. I think about 15 minutes of time was devoted to the entire subject. About the only discussion that was had during that 15 minutes was when I characterized the provision relating to farmers as utterly useless, if not definitely harmful to the farmer.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. In just a moment. There was no consideration whatsoever given to this legislation by the Judiciary Committee outside of the subcommittee. visions were not read. They were not considered. I have in my desk in my office voluminous correspondence objecting to this particular section of the bill, the personal-debtor section, not just technical objections, but objections that are substantial. I am now directing my criticism against action upon the bill at the present time and under the present circumstances.

It is clearly impossible and it must be obvious to everyone that we can not rewrite this kind of a bill upon the floor of the Senate, and so we must close our eyes and accept not only the section relating to debtors, but the section relating to farmers-just accept them and hope they are all right and adjourn and go home without any careful consideration of the real substantive part of the proposition. That is why I want to limit the operation of the section to five years. That ought to give the Congress sufficient time to study it. It ought to be limited to one year. Each of the sections ought to be limited in its operation to one year.

I think the section applying to agriculture is a perpetration of a joke upon the farmer. The idea! In these days the farmer, with his farm mortgaged to an amount he can not pay, involved in debt for seed loans, involved in debt for taxes, involved in a multiplicity of indebtedness, with the low prevailing prices of farm products, having this sort of a law enacted in his name is ironical. It is a futile gesture. I think it is unfair to the farmer to give him another

As I understand there have been passed about 30 bills in the name of relief for the farmer, and now here is another bill during the closing days of the session proposed to be put through the Congress under the cloak of "relief for agriculture." Why, Mr. President, no wonder the farmers of the country are losing confidence not only in the Congress but in their Government. When the Congress will propose this kind of legislation without even consideration by a proper committee for more than 15 minutes and attempt to write into the law such perfectly useless provisions, and which must be obvious can not bring any relief to the farmer, it is no surprise that the farmer is justified in losing his respect for Congress and his Government.

It is about time that we cease engaging on these pretenses, this attitude of offering relief to the farmer, handing to him naught but a promise, endeavoring to sustain his hope, and then have the farmer wake up the next morning, as surely he will awaken, and find that he has again been fooled, again been betrayed, that again the Congress has made a gesture which is of no aid to him, but, if anything, harmful to him. It is my opinion that in this bill there is more harm to come to the farmer than good, because when a petition is filed-it may be the creditor who will file the petitionhe will bring the property of the farmer under control of some conciliator, some official whose office has been created by the Government of the United States. There will be thousands of those officials. They will be found all over the country. There will be men wanting the $5 or $10 a day, going about in every county for the purpose of creating a conciliation commission so they can take away from the farmer, or perhaps his creditor who may be as poor as the farmer, $10 or $5 per day, all in the name of farm relief. That is what this bill does.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator from Wisconsin was the section for the relief of the farmer. Because he had patiently sat here without much complaint about the whole bill, and had given it considerable study, sufficient to make it necessary from his point of view to offer some rather important amendments, I was congratulating myself that I was about to be spared his criticism of this section or the section relating to individual debtors. I was going to suggest to him that I would rather accept an amendment limiting its operation to five years than not to get the bill through at all.

But we must bear in mind always that a limit of five years is not of very great importance because if it is a desirable thing it can be renewed before the five years have expired, or if it be undesirable or we do not limit it at all, it can be repealed at any time. So the matter of years is not of very great importance.

As I said, I was trying to be frank with the Senator when I said it was intended that this particular part of the bill was to be permanent legislation, and that the farmer's section about which he complains was not intended to be

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I was making no criticism of the Senator from Delaware or any other Member of the Senate. I was directing my criticism to the bill. My absence from the Senate and my silence on this matter is for reasons which the Senator may not know. That does not, however, indicate that I have become enamored with any portion of the bill. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think if we will look for a moment at the provision, we will begin to realize what a dangerous thing it is to try to draw a bill on the floor of the Senate. Let us consider the language for a moment. The first time my attention was called to it was when the amendment was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator from Nebraska desires to take considerable time, I presume. I have an amendment which I think can be disposed of without objection or debate.

Mr. NORRIS. But the pending amendment has to be disposed of before the Senator has a right to offer his amendment, and I am debating the pending amendment. I want to make my remarks before we vote on the amendment. Perhaps it would be better if I waited until afterwards [laughter], but I think I had better say what I have to say before we vote on the amendment.

First, let us consider this language. This is the way it reads on page 40, line 23:

Any person excepting a corporation and excepting a farmer.

Then it goes on to tell what they can do. The reason for putting in the words "excepting a farmer"-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair say that those words have been stricken from the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Have they been taken out of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been.

Mr. NORRIS. Then that takes away a good deal of the force of my argument [laughter]; but it does illustrate just the same the danger of trying to prepare a bill of this importance on the floor of the Senate. The language was put in because the farmer is cared for in another part of the bill, but the other part of the bill which provides for the farmer is limited to five years. If this language were left in the bill, as I supposed it was, then at the end of five years the farmer would have no way to get into court. He would be the only man who would be cut out. The corporation is provided for in another section.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. If I may be permitted, I will say that the real purpose of striking out those words was not, as the only member of the committee who protested against this | Senator suggested, because the other provision runs for five years but for the purpose of avoiding a situation where there could not be 15 farmers gotten together who would want to take advantage of the act.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I shall propose to the pending bill, and ask that it be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] has had a rather serious situation called to his attention and has prepared an amendment, which is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BROOKHART. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 77. In all bankruptcy proceedings the officers and agents in charge of the bankrupt funds are authorized to deposit the same without limit as to amount in the postal-savings depositories at the prescribed interest rate in all cases where local banks are unable or unwilling to give the required security. Such deposit, or any portion thereof, may be withdrawn as required in the bankruptcy proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART].

The amendment was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, so far as I know, those are the only amendments that are not seriously controverted, and, following the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, I now move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 25, 1933, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the revelation of eternal love, let us constantly seek to be filled with Thy blessed spirit. Thou hast revealed to us with clearness and power the divinest law in all this universe, namely, the law of love. Do Thou enthrone this wonderful grace within our souls. Take out of our hearts that which is harmful and destructive. If they are blighted with vanity, greed, or envy, forgive us and set us free, our Heavenly Father, and let in the sovereignty of love. With our spiritual eyes open and uplifted we shall see the light, which may be delayed but not denied. Each day inspire us to quit ourselves like men, by being strong, courageous, and true. May we now declare it can be done, because it ought to be done. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 14458. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14562. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred, without amendment, in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 47. Concurrent resolution relating to Statuary

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered that the House be requested to return to the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) entitled "Joint resolution establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commismission, and for other purposes," with accompanying papers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13872) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4327. An act for the relief of Lizzie Pittman.

CONDUCT OF JUDGE HAROLD LOUDERBACK

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not advised just what the proper parliamentary procedure is in this situation. The gentleman from Oklahoma filed the report for the majority of the committee

The SPEAKER. The usual custom is that the Member who reports the legislation coming before the House is the one the Chair ordinarily recognizes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has asked what the parliamentary situation is, and the Chair has stated that the custom has been that the Speaker would recognize the gentleman who has been directed by the committee to report the bill.

Mr. SNELL. This is a peculiar situation. I understand the bill has been reported.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair will recognize the gentleman who reported it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those in favor of the resolution be allowed one hour's time, and that I be allowed one hour, and that I divide my time with the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 387

Resolved, That the evidence submitted on the charges against Hon. Harold Louderback, district judge for the northern district of California, does not warrant the interposition of the constitutional powers of impeachment of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, when they report back a resolution of that kind, is it a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is not only a privileged matter but a highly privileged matter.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, this is the first instance to my knowledge, in my service here, where the committee has reported adversely on an impeachment charge.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's memory should be refreshed. The Mellon case was reported back from the committee, recommending that impeachment proceedings be discontinued.

Mr. SNELL. Was that taken up on the floor as a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield? What I am curious to know is whether this is intended as a vindication or an exculpation from the charges | be an opportunity to vote upon the substitute for the maagainst him?

Mr. McKEOWN. The report of the committee is that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant the House in exercising its high privilege of impeaching a judge.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure the committee is well within its rights, but why is it necessary to make an adverse report if the evidence does not sustain the charges?

Mr. McKEOWN. The minority members have signed a report recommending impeachment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be reported first, so that we may understand the real issue.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to make clear to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that in the course of the consideration of the majority resolution, articles of impeachment will be offered from the floor of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That somewhat clarifies the situation. Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, let me make this observation. The purpose of referring a matter of this kind to the Committee on the Judiciary is to determine whether or not in the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary there is sufficient evidence to warrant impeachment by the House. If the Committee on the Judiciary finds those facts exist, then the Committee on the Judiciary makes a report to the House recommending impeachment, and that undoubtedly is privileged. However, a custom has grown up recently in the Committee on the Judiciary of including in the report a censure. I do not believe that the constitutional power of impeachment includes censure. We have but one duty, and that is to impeach or not to impeach. To-day we find a committee report censuring the judge. The resolution before the House presented by a majority of the committee is against impeachment. The minority members have filed a minority report, recommending impeachment. I am making this observation with the hope that we may get back to the constitutional power of impeachment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] I suggest that the fault is not in the Constitution of the United States but in the constitution of some individuals who are so timid that they are afraid to impeach a judge guilty of improper

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, the duty of the committee is, of course, only to report a resolution for impeachment or not to report it. The committee has reported a resolution which is found in the report:

That the evidence submitted on the charges against Hon. Harold Louderback, district judge for the northern district of California, does not warrant the interposition of the constitutional powers of impeachment of the House.

That is the only thing that the committee has submitted to the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown] has one hour in which to discuss this resolution, unless some other arrangement is made.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that two hours' time be granted on a side. One-half of mine I shall yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. At the end of the two hours' time, that the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman will remember that the committee unanimously voted that the previous question should not be considered as ordered until the majority had opportunity to offer the articles of impeachment.

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield now to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will permit, let the Chair make a suggestion. The Chair understands that the com-jority resolution. Is that correct?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair suggests to the gentleman from Oklahoma that he ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself, and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want one-half of my time to be yielded to the gentleman from Missouri, and that the other hour shall be controlled by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair suggests that the gentleman from Oklahoma control all of the time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing that the gentleman from Oklahoma may control the time. because I am sure that he will make a fair distribution of it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be limited to two hours to be controlled by myself, that during that time the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] be permitted to offer a substitute for the resolution and at the conclusion of the time for debate the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair submits this: The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to two hours, to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma, that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, with the privilege, however, of a substitute resolution being offered, to be included in the previous question. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for the purpose of getting the parliamentary situation clarified before we get to the merits, is there any question in the mind of the Speaker, if it is fair to submit such a suggestion, as to whether or not the substitute providing for absolute impeachment would be in order as a substitute for this report?

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding of the Chair, that the unanimous-consent agreement is, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] may offer a substitute, the previous question to be considered as ordered on the substitute and the original resolution at the expiration of the two hours. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Harold Louderback, who is a United States district judge of the northern district of California, be impeached of misdemeanors in office; and that the evidence heretofore taken by the special committee of the House of Representatives under House Resolution 239 sustains five articles of impeachment, which are hereinafter set out; and that the said articles be, and they are hereby, adopted by the House of Representatives, and that the same shall be exhibited to the Senate in the following words and figures to wit:

figures, to wit:

Articles of impeachment of the House of Representatives of the United States of America in the name of themselves and of all of the people of the United States of America against Harold Louder-back, who was appointed, duly qualified, and commissioned to serve during good behavior in office as United States district judge for the northern district of California on April 17, 1928.

ARTICLE I

That the said Harold Louderback, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and while acting as a district judge for the northern district of California, did on divers and various occasions so abuse the power of his high office that he is hereby charged with tyranny and oppression, favoritism, and conspiracy, whereby he has brought the administration of justice in said district in the court of which he is a judge into disrepute, and by his conduct is guilty of misbehavior, falling under the constitutional provision as ground for impeachment and removal from office removal from office.

In that the said Harold Louderback, on or about the 13th day of March, 1930, at his chambers and in his capacity as judge aforesaid, did willfully, tyrannically, and oppressively discharge one Addison G. Strong, whom he had on the 11th day of March, 1930, appointed as equity receiver in the matter of Olmsted v. Russell-Colvin Co. after having attempted to force and coerce the said Strong to appoint one Douglas Short as attorney for the receiver in said case.

In that the said Harold Louderback improperly did attempt to mittee has something of an understanding that there would | cause the said Addison G. Strong to appoint the said Douglas Short as attorney for the receiver by promises of allowance of large fees and by threats of reduced fees did he refuse to appoint said Douglas Short.

In that the said Harold Louderback improperly did use his office and power of district judge in his own personal interest by causing the appointment of the said Douglas Short as attorney for the receiver, at the instance, suggestion, or demand of one Sam Leake, to whom the said Harold Louderback was under personal obligation, the said Sam Leake having entered into a certain arrangement and conspiracy with the said Harold Louderback to provide him, the said Harold Louderback, with a room at the Fairmont Hotel in the city of San Francisco, Calif., and made arrangements for registering said room in his, Sam Leake's, name and paying all bills therefor in cash under an arrangement with the said Harold Louderback to be reimbursed in full or in part in order that the said Harold Louderback might continue to actually reside in the city and county of San Francisco after having improperly and unlawfully established a fictitious residence in Contra Costa County for the sole purpose of improperly removing for trial to said Contra Costa County a cause of action which the said Harold Louderback expected to be filed against him; and that the said Harold Louderback improperly did use his ing for trial to said Contra Costa County a cause of action which the said Harold Louderback expected to be filed against him; and that the said Douglas Short did receive large and exorbitant fees for his services as attorney for the receiver in said action, and the said Sam Leake did receive certain fees, gratuitles, and loans directly or indirectly from the said Douglas Short amounting approximately to $1,200.

In that the said Harold Louderback entered into a conspiracy In that the said Harold Louderback entered into a conspiracy with the said Sam Leake to violate the provisions of the California Political Code in establishing a residence in the county of Contra Costa when the said Harold Louderback in fact did not reside in said county and could not have established a residence without the concealment of his actual residence in the county of San Francisco, covered and concealed by means of the said conspiracy with the said Sam Leake, all in violation of the law of the State of California.

of California.

In that the said Harold Louderback, in order to give color to his fictitious residence in the county of Contra Costa, all for the purpose of preparing and falsely creating proof necessary to establish himself as a resident of Contra Costa County in anticipation lish himself as a resident of Contra Costa County in anticipation of an action he expected to be brought against him, for the sole purpose of meeting the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California providing that all causes of action must be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action, did in accordance with the conspiracy entered into with the said Sam Leake unlawfully register as a voter in said Contra Costa County, when in law and in fact he did not reside in said county and could not so register, and that the said acts of Harold Louderback constitute a felony defined by section 42 of the Penal Code of California;

Wherefore the said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of a course of conduct improper, oppressive, and unlawful and is guilty of misbehavior in office as such judge and was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE II

That Harold Louderback, judge as aforesaid, was guilty of a course of improper and unlawful conduct as a judge, filled with partiality and favoritism in improperly granting excessive, exorbitant, and unreasonable allowances as disbursements to one Marshall Woodward and to one Samuel Shortridge, jr., as receiver and attorney, respectively, in the matter of the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association.

And in that the said Harold Louderback, judge as aforesaid, having improperly acquired jurisdiction of the case of the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association contrary to the law of the United States and the rules of the court, did, on or about the 29th day of July, 1930, appoint one Marshall Woodward and one Samuel Shortridge, jr., receiver and attorney, respectively, in said case, and after an appeal was taken from the order and other acts of the judge in said case to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and the said order and acts of the said Harold Louderback having been reversed by said United States circuit court of appeals and the mandate of said circuit court of appeals directed the court to cause the said receiver to turn over all of the assets of said association in his possession as receiver to the the experimentations of insurement of the States of Celifornia. appeals directed the court to cause the said receiver to turn over all of the assets of said association in his possession as receiver to the commissioner of insurance of the State of California, the said Harold Louderback unlawfully, improperly, and oppressively did sign and enter an order so directing the receiver to turn over said property to said State commissioner of insurance, but improperly and unlawfully made such order conditional that the said State commissioner of insurance and any other party in interest would not take an appeal from the allowance of fees and disbursements granted by the said Harold Louderback to the said Marshall Woodward and Samuel Shortridge, jr., receiver and attorney, respectively, thereby improperly using his said office as a district judge to favor and enrich his personal and political friends and associates, to the detriment and loss of litigants in his, said judge's, court, and forcing said State commissioner of friends and associates, to the detriment and loss of litigants in his, said judge's, court, and forcing said State commissioner of insurance and parties in interest in said action unnecessary delay, labor, and expense in protecting the rights of all parties against such arbitrary, improper, and unlawful order of said judge; and that the said Harold Louderback did improperly and unlawfully seek to coerce said State commissioner of insurance and parties in interest in said action to accept and acquiesce in the excessive fees and the exorbitant and unreasonable disbursements granted by him to said Marshall Woodward and Samuel Shortridge, jr., receiver and attorney, respectively, and did improperly and unlawfully force and coerce the said parties to enter into a stipulation modifying said improper and unlawful order and did thereby make it necessary for the State commissioner of insurance to take another appeal from the said arbitrary, improper, and unlawful action of the said Harold Louderback.

In that the said Harold Louderback did not give his fair, impartial, and judicial consideration to the objections of the said State commissioner of insurance against the allowance of ex-cessive fees and unreasonable disbursements to the said Marshall cessive fees and unreasonable disbursements to the said Marshall Woodward and Samuel Shortridge, Jr., receiver and attorney, respectively, in the case of the Lumbermen's Reciprocal Association, in order to favor and enrich his friends at the expense of the litigants and parties in interest in said matter, and did thereby cause said State commissioner of insurance and the parties in interest additional delay, expense, and labor in taking an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals in order to protect their rights and property in the matter against the partial, oppressive, and unjudicial conduct of said Harold Louderback.

Wherefore, said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of a course of conduct oppressive and unjudicial and is guilty of misbehavior in office as such judge and was and is guilty of a mis-Wherefore, demeanor in office.

ARTICLE III

The said Harold Louderback, judge aforesaid, was guilty of misbehavior in office resulting in expense, disadvantage, annoyance, and hindrance to litigants in his court in the case of the Fageol Motor Co., for which he appointed one Guy H. Gilbert receiver, knowing that the said Gilbert was incompetent, unqualified, and inexperienced to act as such receiver in said case. In that the said Harold Louderback, judge as aforesaid, oppressively and in disregard of the rights and interests of litigants in his court did appoint one Guy H. Gilbert as receiver for the Fageol Motor Co., knowing the said Guy H. Gilbert to be incompetent, unfit, and inexperienced for such duties, and did refuse to grant a hearing to the plaintiff, defendant, creditors, and parties in interest in the matter of the Fageol Motor Co. on the appointment of said receiver, and the said Harold Louderback did cause said litigants and parties in interest in said matter to be misinformed of his action while said Guy H. Gilbert took did cause said litigants and parties in interest in said matter to be misinformed of his action while said Guy H. Gilbert took steps necessary to qualify as receiver, thereby depriving said litigants and parties in interest of presenting the facts, circumstances, and conditions of the said equity receivership, the nature of the business and the type of person necessary to operate said business in order to protect creditors, litigants, and all parties in interest, and thereby depriving said parties in interest of the opportunity of protesting against the appointment of an incompetent receiver.

Wherefore the said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of a course of conduct constituting misbehavior as said judge and that said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of a misdemeanor

That the said Harold Louderback, judge aforesaid, was guilty of misbehavior in office, filled with partiality and favoritism, in improperly, wilfully, and unlawfully granting on insufficient and improper papers an application for the appointment of a receiver in the Prudential Holding Co. case for the sole purpose of benefiting and enriching his personal friends and associates.

In that the said Harold Louderback did on or about the 15th day of August, 1931, on insufficient and improper application, appoint one Guy H. Gilbert receiver for the Prudential Holding Co. case when as a matter of fact and law and under conditions then existing no receiver should have been appointed, but the said Harold Louderback did accept a petition verified on information and belief by an attorney in the case and without notice to the said Prudential Holding Co. did so appoint Guy H. Gilbert the receiver and the firm of Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel attorneys for the receiver; that the said Harold Louderback, in an attempt to benefit and enrich the said Guy H. Gilbert and his attorneys, Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, failed to give his fair, impartial, and judicial consideration to the application of the said Prudential Holding Co. for a dismissal of the petition and a discharge of the receiver, although the said Prudential Holding Co. was in law entitled to such dismissal of the petition and discharge of the receiver; that during the pendency of the application for the dismissal of the petition and discharge of the receiver; that during the pendency of the application for the dismissal of the petition in bankruptcy was filed against the said Prudential Holding Co. based entirely and solely on an allegation that a receiver in equity had been appointed for the said Prudential Holding Co., and the said Harold Louderback then and there wilfully, improperly, and unlawfully, sitting in a part of the court to which he had not been assigned at the time, took jurisdiction of Co., and the said Harold Louderback then and there wilfully, improperly, and unlawfully, sitting in a part of the court to which he had not been assigned at the time, took jurisdiction of the case in bankruptcy and though knowing the facts in the case and of the application then pending before him for the dismissal of the petition and the discharge of the equity receiver, granted the petition in bankruptcy and did on the 2d day of October, 1930, appoint the same Guy H. Gilbert receiver in bankruptcy and the said Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel attorneys for the receiver, knowing all of the time that the said Prudential Holding Co. was entitled as a matter of law to have the said petition in equity dismissed; in that through the oppressive, deliberate, and willful action of the said Harold Louderback acting in his capacity as a judge and misusing the powers of his judicial office for the sole purpose of benefiting and enriching said Guy H. Gilbert and Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, did cause the said Prudential Holding Co. to be put to unnecessary delay, expense, and labor and did deprive them of a fair, impartial, and judicial consideration of Wherefore the said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of course of conduct constituting misbehavior as said judge and that said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE V

That Harold Louderback, on the 17th day of April, 1928, was duly appointed United States district judge for the northern district of California, and has held such office to the present day.

That the said Harold Louderback as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places when acting as such judge, did so conduct himself in his said court and in his capacity as judge in making decisions and orders in actions pending in his said court and before him as said judge, and in the method of appointing receivers and attorneys for receivers, in appointing incompetent receivers, and in displaying a high degree of indifference to the litigants in equity receiverships, as to excite fear and distrust and to inspire a widespread belief in and beyond said northern district of California that causes were not decided in said court according to their merits but were decided with partiality and with probabilities and flowerites to extent individuals. tiality and with prejudice and favoritism to certain individuals, particularly to receivers and attorneys for receivers by him so appointed, all of which is prejudicial to the dignity of the judi-

All to the scandal and disrepute of said court and the administration of justice therein.

Wherefore the said Harold Louderback was and is guilty of misbehavior as such judge and of a misdemeanor in office.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, no task should be shirked because of its unpleasantness. It is not pleasant either to investigate or to come before this House asking for the impeachment of a public official. It is a tragedy in the life of that official. Therefore, in passing upon the merits of this case, I ask the Members to give this man the benefit of every doubt that may exist in their minds.

This is not a trial. This is an accusation. The question which the Members must decide is whether there are sufficient facts to constitute and warrant the accusation against this official which the House of Representatives under the Constitution must make and refer it to the court provided for in the Constitution for decision.

There is no difference of opinion between the majority report and the minority report, except that the minority report gives you a bill of particulars. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will deal with that phase of the question.

A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives went to California and investigated and collected facts, which were presented to the full committee and which are now being presented to the House. The distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners], presided at those hearings. He was there. He heard the testimony. He saw the witnesses. He knows the case. He recommends impeachment in this case. Time is limited. I can not go into detail. I can not take up every phase of the case. I shall only take up one of the articles of impeachment, and that is dealing with the misconduct of the judge in the handling of the Russell-Colvin case. The other articles will be taken up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning].

We charge Judge Harold Louderback, United States district judge for the northern district of California, with improper judicial conduct in this case, with the commission of misdemeanors as contemplated in the Constitution, and which warrants his impeachment by this House and standing

Now, what are the facts in the Russell-Colvin case? This case is the key to the other cases which will be discussed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning].

The Russell-Colvin Co. was a copartnership, engaged in the stock-brokerage business in the city of San Francisco. In March, 1930, they got into financial difficulties. Their condition was taken up by the appropriate committee of the Stock Exchange of San Francisco, and it was decided that their membership in the stock exchange must be rescinded. You will remember during the period of 1930 the market was panicky. The matter was delicate. If not properly handled, it could disrupt the market; it might precipitate a run on the banks. The creditors, the partners, and the stock exchange, and all persons interested agreed that the firm should be placed in receivership; that an application should be made to the United States district court for the appointment of an equity receiver; that it should be economically and efficiently administered and expeditiously liquidated. So they agreed on the auditor of the stock exchange who had examined the books of this concern and was familiar with its condition as the receiver, and all parties in interest joined in an application to the court for the appointment of this gentleman, Mr. Strong, as the equity receiver for this firm, and after some discussion Mr. Strong was appointed, placed under a $50,000 bond, and qualified as receiver. Now, please get this: In the order appointing Mr. Strong receiver it was provided:

Further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said receiver be, and he hereby is, authorized forthwith to take possession

* * to employ accountants, attorneys, and counsel, and to make such payments and disbursements as may be needful or proper in the preservation of the assets of the defendants.

Bear that in mind, because it becomes important. The judge, after appointing the receiver, told him to return after he had qualified. It was late in the evening when he qualified. He returned the next morning. Then the judge asked him, "Have you made arrangements for the appointment of an attorney?" And he told him he had: that he had appointed a Mr. McAuliffe. The judge threw down his pencil and said, "I knew that would happen. Why didn't you come back last night?" He said. "I was told it was too late." He said, "I want you to appoint John Douglas Short." He said, "I have appointed Mr. McAuliffe."

I will not go into the details of the conversation, because my time is limited.

At that time the judge said, "I want you to appoint Mr. Short. Do you know that I will control your fee and that I can make your fee $10,000 or I can make it $80,000?" And that did not work. Then he ordered the receiver to go away and think it over for three days, and ordered him not to consult counsel. Here were the customers coming in for their securities, creditors bringing in their claims, orders on the exchange demanding attention, executory contracts to be decided on, and the receiver ordered by the judge to do nothing, to consult no attorney, but to "think the matter over" as to the appointment of Mr. Short. The rights of the litigants meant nothing to the judge. He was only interested in the patronage in the case. Mr. Strong went back the next day and asked the judge to permit him to consult counsel. There were several conferences the next day, and the judge repeatedly tried to force this man Short on him. The receiver would not have Short. He had selected McAuliffe. Strong was appointed on the 11th, and on the 13th the judge pulled an order which had already been prepared, dismissing the receiver for "cause," took him by the arm, took him to the door, and said. You are fired."

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there in regard to the competency of McAuliffe?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. McAuliffe is conceded by the judge to have been qualified in every respect; is conceded by everyone in San Francisco and by the bar to have been qualified, while Short was a law clerk, getting $50 a week at the time.

But, Mr. Speaker, if that is all there was to it, while the judge might have been guilty of highly improper judicial conduct, we would not have to come to you here and ask for his impeachment; but this is just the beginning. That left the firm without a receiver; left them absolutely open; and the judge tells the committee that he was very anxious to have the right kind of man appointed receiver and the right kind of man appointed for counsel, and what does he do? That night, in the lobby of the Hotel Fairmont, he is sitting with his friend, Sam Leake, and he said, in substance, to Sam Leake: "Sam, I am looking for a receiver." He said: "It is a brokerage firm; it is a big case. Can you recommend one?" Sam said: "I will think it over, and I will have one for you to-morrow." Just then a gentleman passed in the lobby, and he said: "There is the man. Come over here. Mr. Hunter, Judge Louderback; Judge Louderback, Mr. Hunter." The judge admits he did not know the man, but he remembered then that he was a juror in his court. Mr. Hunter then told him he had been receiver some years ago in another matter. He appointed Mr. Hunter as receiver. He had not known him before that time. As a strange coincidence, Mr. Speaker, the same Mr. Short, though unknown to Mr. Hunter, was appointed counsel to Mr. Hunter and received some $50,000 in fees.

Now, suppose that were all there was to it. Mr. Speaker, again I say that the conduct of the judge might have been improper and injudicial, but now we come to Mr. Sam Leake. Sam Leake is the fixer for Judge Louderback; he is the contact man, an elderly man with a most colorful and varied career. He served as postmaster during Cleveland's administration. He became editor for one of the San Francisco big papers. He later became addicted to liquor and went down and down—his own admission. He then took up healing, mental healing, and is now in the business of healing and says he makes his living from it. He calls himself a "metaphysical student." He treats sick people by absent or other treatment. He has an office in San Francisco. He lives at the Fairmont Hotel.

Every one of the receivers which the gentleman from Tennessee will mention—strange coincidence, the receiver, his attorney, or some member of the family—is a patient of Sam Leake, who receives fees or gratuities from them.

Mr. Leake originally recommended Short, and when that failed the first time he recommended Hunter and in that way brought about the appointment of Short. The judge permitted himself to become the tool of Leake.

Now, what is the privity between Leake and the judge? The judge was anticipating a civil action to be brought against him. He did not want to try that action in San Francisco. The judge had been a resident of San Francisco all his life. In order not to have this expected civil action tried against him in San Francisco he established a fake residence in Contra Costa County. Time does not permit me to read the cases on the law, but the law in California as to residence is clear and definite. The matter of residence has been passed upon several times by the highest court of appeals. There must be actual residence, together with intent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What was the nature of the civil suit the judge was anticipating?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It was a domestic action, a matrimonial action.

The judge established this residence in Contra Costa County. He moved from his home in San Francisco to the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco. He moved to a room in the Fairmont Hotel, not in his own name but in the name of Sam Leake. He was not registered at the Fairmont Hotel. Had he registered, according to his own admission, his fiction of his residence in Contra Costa County would have been disclosed and his purpose defeated.

Mr. CRAIL. What city is that in?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. San Francisco. The judge would give a check to Sam Leake and Sam Leake paid most of the monthly bills in cash to the hotel. This becomes extremely important, Mr. Speaker, under the decisions in California, because if his residence in San Francisco at the hotel had been known it would have destroyed absolutely his fictitious residence in Contra Costa County; and I am going to give you the citations on this. The purpose of the arrangement with Sam Leake is stated by the judge himself. You will find it on page 342 of the hearing. The judge says this:

Then, after a month or two, I found that the separation was probably permanent. In the meantime, I had gone over and had established my legal residence with my brother, with legal residence, voting and registration of my machine in Contra Costa County; but I realized that in actually doing my work when I was in San Francisco and crossing the bay that it was quite a burden and wear. And so I continued on there at the hotel. I asked Mr. Leake:

asked Mr. Leake:
"Have you any objection to my remaining in this room and letting it stay as it is," because—

Now, this is the judge talking-

"registration is an element upon which to predicate residence."
"And I wanted to maintain residence in Contra Costa County.
And I assure you, gentlemen—

Said the judge-

"I believe the only reason why that suit was not instituted was because I had that residence; because under the California law Mrs. Louderback would have had to contest it in Contra Costa County, and she thought it would be of advantage to her to have it tried in her own county."

And the judge himself, sitting as a Federal judge, under the conformity act would have to pass on questions of residence, on change of venue, on questions of jurisdiction of the Federal court, under the very act which he himself in conspiracy with Sam Leake was evading.

We are not interested in the domestic troubles of the judge except as they affect his judicial conduct. He was under obligation to Sam Leake in the continuing conspiracy to conceal his actual residence at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco; and, as Sam Leake aided him, he, the judge, in turn permitted Leake to make appointments of receivers and attorneys, thereby displaying—as is stated in the majority report—indifference to the rights of litigants in receivership cases.

When I asked Sam Leake on the stand, "Where does Judge Louderback live?" he said, "I do not know; in Contra Costa County, I think." And then later on, when word got around that we had subpensed the chambermaid and the clerk of the hotel and the auditor of the hotel, then he told us the story about the room, but he did not tell us all of the story.

So we have Sam Leake covering up the judge, and the judge misusing and abusing his judicial powers to benefit Leake and his friends.

What does Sam Leake get out of it?

Douglass Short, after he was appointed and after he received the first payment of the $50,000, writes a long and involved letter to his father-in-law, in which he says in substance.

Father-in-law, you have been awfully good to me; you made a gift to my wife and to me some time ago, but I do not want that gift, and inclose herewith my check for $5,000.

Conceding that he wanted to give the gift back, the gift only amounted to $3,500, but Short sends him $5,000, and at the same time this same father-in-law, Mr. Hathaway, gives Sam Leake $1,000.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. Is it not a fact that he also said he would expect to pay him for some further favors later on?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Later on, of course; very much like the Mitchell sale of stock.

Mr. Hathaway said he took Sam Leake's note for the thousand, and on the stand testified that the note was no good and that he never expected to realize on the note or get his money back. He thereafter gave Sam Leake $200 more. So Sam Leake got from Short, indirectly it is true, after the first payment of the fee was made to Short, something like $1,200 that we know of. Sam Leake in turn accommodated the judge to the extent of covering and concealing and being a party to the conspiracy of Judge Louderback to violate the law of the State of California, both the election law and the law as to change of venue.

Now it is going to be suggested by some of my colleagues: "Well, he did not avail himself of it, did he?" That makes no difference. If my colleagues would only be good enough to read the law—they are all good lawyers—read the decisions of the courts of California as to residence, they would find that the registration in Contra Costa County violated the political code of California and that the conspiracy to conceal the residence in San Francisco could only be effected and consummated by the conduct of Sam Leake in concealing and hiding the actual residence of Judge Louderback.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Laguardia. I yield.
Mr. Browning. But he did avail himself of it in that he admits that he used the conspiracy to serve his purpose.
Mr. Laguardia. Exactly; it did serve the purpose. It scared away the commencement of the action.

Mr. Speaker, a reading of the testimony will disclose that creditors and litigants had no confidence in the court. So greedy was this particular judge in grasping for cases where | receivers were to be appointed that shortly after he took office the other two judges of that district enacted a rule whereby all such cases were to be assigned to the three judges by means of a lottery—a sort of drawing whereby each of the three judges would draw two out of every six cases, taking his chance whether it was a "big" case or just a small bankruptcy. Such a system, made necessary by Judge Louderback's conduct, is not only unbecoming and undignified, but conducive to lack of confidence in and loss of respect for the court.

The testimony will show that lawyers of standing, attorneys of record in cases before the judge frankly admitted the futility of seeking to protect their clients' interest when a matter of fees for favorite receivers was before this

This is all in the testimony. What is more, it is the knowledge of the bench and bar of San Francisco. This judge has completely lost the respect and confidence of the

In the Russell-Colvin case to which I referred, the judge stated before the committee that his reason for acting arbitrarily was that he was eager to obtain a man as receiver in whom he had confidence and an attorney for the receiver who was fit, qualified, and competent. Yet we find that he discharged the receiver agreed upon by all concerned and all parties in interest. It must be remembered that this particular case was a matter of public concern in San Francisco at the time. Yet he appointed as receiver a man picked by Sam Leake and as his attorney the judge's original choice, also selected by Sam Leake. Now what happened? After the equity receivership had gone along for some time it was apparent that the stock brokerage firm could not continue in business. This too was precipitated by the judge's unjudicial conduct in tying up everything for two days while endeavoring to force Mr. Short as attorney.

When some of the creditors realized the actual condition of the copartnership they petitioned to place the copartnership into bankruptcy. Then what do we find? That this $50,000 attorney, with the consent of the judge, goes out and hires another attorney to fight the bankruptcy proceedings although the firm was then hopelessly insolvent. Another $5,000 taken from the assets of the creditors. And in this they were abetted and assisted by Judge Louderback. Why? Because if they had gone into bankruptcy the receiver's fee would have been fixed in accordance with the law and the attorney's fees would have been fixed perhaps by another judge. Another instance of how the judge disregarded the interests of the litigants in receivership matters, as so well stated in the majority report. I repeat, the firm was then so hopelessly insolvent that although they sought to fight off the bankruptcy petition it would surely have gone into bankruptcy had not the receiver and his attorney resorted to improper practice, and to use the words of the receiver himself, "They (the creditors) were bought off as good to get rid of those particular claims." This cost the estate something like $5,775 in addition to the $5,000 paid to the attorney who was supposed to be a specialist in bankruptcy.

Lest there be any misrepresentation made on the part of any of the members joining with the majority report who brand this judge as a secoundrel and yet would keep him on the bench, I want to point out that the greater part of the assets of this estate was purely securities belonging to individuals which the firm held in trust. But when it comes down to the creditors of the firm, gentlemen, you will find that they received but a small percentage of their claims. Most of the work was simply the identification of securities belonging to customers of the firm.

I repeat, these were simply returned to the owners. It was listing of these securities that makes the estate look as if it were of great amount and that the receiver and his attorney rendered great services. A casual inspection of a report of the receiver and his attorney on which they based their claim for compensation shows that it was padded, artificial, and ciary ought to impartially investigate an impeachment pro-swollen, in order to give some color of justification for the enormous fees granted them.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. How much did this man receive?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In cash?

Mr. RAGON. I do not know.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The greater percentage of the assets, as I have stated, were securities held in trust, amounting to over $400,000.

Mr. BROWNING. How much did the receiver get?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. About $50,000.

Mr. DYER. There was no complaint that they received any more than that Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes; there was sufficient complaint, and the attorneys were blackjacked into silence.

Mr. DYER. Is it not in the record.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes; it is in the record. The gentleman has not read the record.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN].

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee has discussed this case in executive session on a number of occasions. Judge Louderback himself appeared before the committee here in Washington. He subjected himself to the cross-examination of all the members of our committee; and the Judiciary Committee voted 13 against impeachment and 5 in favor of impeachment.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. Just briefly. I have not much time.

Mr. TARVER. The judge, however, refused to subject himself to examination by the committee in San Francisco among his own people.

Mr. BACHMANN. I understand that was on the advice of his counsel; and the judge not being satisfied with what his counsel advised him there, came to Washington and voluntarily appeared before the committee.

Mr. DYER. And the committee did not ask him to testify. Mr. BACHMANN. No. He came here on his own volition. Here is the set-up in this case: The chairman of the Judiciary Committee appointed five Members on a subcommittee to go to California to investigate Judge Louderback. The members of that subcommittee were the chairman, Mr. Sumners of Texas, Mr. Dominick, Mr. LaGuardia, Mr. Dyer, and Mr. McKeown.

When the time came for the subcommittee to go to California, due to the election, some of the Members could not go and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning] was substituted in the place of one of the other members of the subcommittee. So the committee that went to California to investigate Judge Louderback was composed of Chairman SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. LaGuardia, and Mr. Browning.

When they got to California—let me give you a picture of what occurred. I do not want to cast any reflection upon any member of that subcommittee; but the Members of this House ought to understand just how this committee proceeded to investigate Judge Louderback. When they got to California the chairman of the committee. Mr. Sum-NERS of Texas, occupied a seat high upon the judge's bench; down at the counsel table appeared the two prosecutors of the committee, on one side of the table Mr. LaGuardia and on the other side of the table Mr. Browning. Now, this was the set-up of the three members of the committee that went out there to impartially investigate the facts concerning this judge.

I do not mean to cast any reflection upon my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia], and far be it from me to say anything that would reflect in any way on my good friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning], because I have served on the same committees with him during the past eight years and I know him well, and both of them are fine gentlemen; but the House should know what happened. The Committee on the Judiceeding and not in the first instance proceed to prosecute. They were appointed for the purpose of investigating Judge Louderback's conduct.

Let me show you how bitter this prosecution was. I want you to turn to page 191 of the record of the hearings and listen to what occurred between counsel representing the judge and one of the prosecutors of the committee:

Mr. LaGuardia. I think this, gentlemen, would be a good time to adjourn.

Mr. HANLEY. Is that just simply to get some newspaper notoriety or just simply for effect? Can't we go along here as long as we started and try to get something out of it?

Mr. Sumners. Of course, we assume that counsel is presenting his case. I don't know about the element of newspaper notoriety.

his case. I don't know about the element of newspaper notoriety. There doesn't seem to be very much evidence of that here.

Mr. Hanley. We have heard so much about it, we read so much about what is going to come off, it is getting a little boresome.

Mr. LaGuardia. I think it appeared in the papers long before I introduced my resolution in the House. That's how I got it.

Mr. Hanley. No; it is not how you got the resolution. You know that's not correct, and you know it is not true.

Mr. LaGuardia. If you say that's not true, you are a liar.

(Reporter's note: The space between Mr. LaGuardia and Mr. Hanley closed very rapidly at this point.)

Mr. Sumners. Mr. LaGuardia.

Mr. LaGuardia (to Mr. Hanley). Don't tell me that is not true, because I won't take it from you or anybody else.

Mr. Sumners. Mr. LaGuardia, you sit down or you will get out

Ir. SUMNERS. Mr. LAGUARDIA, you sit down or you will get out of the court room.

Now, that was the attitude of a member of the Judiciary Committee sent out there to impartially obtain the facts upon which to base an impeachment proceeding against a Federal judge. He did not sit merely as a member of the investigating committee but as a prosecutor, and then later sat in judgment as a member of the Judiciary Committee and voted for Judge Louderback's impeachment.

I tell the Members of this House, you can read this record, you can read the judge's statement and all the evidence, and there are no grounds upon which to base an impeachment of Judge Louderback. He is not accused of accepting money; he did nothing criminal. He may be charged with some irregularities. Every Federal judge might be charged with a few minor irregularities. They are all human. But there is no evidence presented to the Judiciary Committee in this record upon which to successfully base an impeachment proceeding.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BACHMANN. For a brief question.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is it the gentleman's idea that a Federal judge ought not to be impeached unless you can show he has accepted a bribe?

Mr. BACHMANN. Certainly not.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is there not such a thing as judicial

Mr. BACHMANN. I did not say that.

Mr. McSWAIN. You said he took no money.

Mr. BACHMANN. But there ought to be sufficient evidence upon which to base articles of impeachment, and I would like some member of the committee to point out to the House some evidence upon which to base articles of impeachment in this case that can be sustained by the record.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BACHMANN. I can not. Mr. LaGUARDIA. You asked the question.

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not have time to take up all the facts that the gentleman from New York relies upon, but I want to discuss the question of Judge Louderback's residence. Here is a Federal judge with practically all of his time given to conducting court in San Francisco. He unfortunately had some domestic trouble with his wife. Judge Louderback has a brother living in Contra Costa County, one of the adjoining counties, and with whom he made his place of residence when he and his wife separated. We are told by the gentleman from New York that because this Federal judge established his residence in another county he ought to be impeached. In other words, according to the gentleman from New York, Judge Louderback is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor for having established a residence in another county because of domestic difficulties, and therefore should be impeached.

That is one of the reasons why he wants to impeach the judge. He says the judge tried to cover it up. The judge merely lived at a hotel in San Francisco while he maintained his residence in another county with his brother.

Mr. STAFFORD. The judge occupied a room in the hotel while attending to his official work-

Mr. BACHMANN. That is correct. The gentleman from New York is seeking to establish that he maintained a residence there illegally, and therefore, should be impeached.

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not appeal to me at all. Mr. BACHMANN. That is one of the grounds upon which they want to impeach the judge.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman ought to go ahead with another speech on that side.

Mr. McKEOWN. We only have two speeches left.

Mr. DYER. We probably will not have but one more on this side, as far as I know.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CONDON] 10 minutes.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Speaker, I have read every word of this record from beginning to end. I have read very carefully the abstract of the charges prepared by my colleague, Mr. Browning, of Tennessee. I attended every executive session of this committee, and I voted against impeachment, but I did vote for censure.

If I thought there was one scintilla of evidence here that would justify the House of Representatives in sending managers to the bar of the Senate with impeachment charges against this judge, I would have voted for impeachment, because I do not want to be understood as approving many of the actions he is guilty of and which have come out in this investigation.

But, Mr. Speaker, when this House exercises its power of impeachment it exercises the greatest power that has been conferred upon the House of Representatives. Rarely in almost 150 years of its existence has that power been exercised by the House, and rarer still have there been convictions by the Senate.

But rarer even than that has it been exercised in the House of Commons, from which we derived historically this great power to impeach even the highest officer of the

I am very solicitous and anxious that this House shall never bring impeachment proceedings against any person unless there is a firm conviction on the part of the committee and on the part of the House that it has a reasonable chance to obtain a conviction before the bar of the Senate.

It is comparable to a matter that may be presented to a grand jury, where if the prosecutor does not feel that he has a reasonable chance to obtain a conviction before a trial jury he will not ask for an indictment of a person charged with crime.

There is nothing here—and I ask you to read the record there is nothing here, and you will not find anything in the evidence that will justify sending these charges to the bar of the Senate.

I do not for one moment question the conduct of the committee sent to San Francisco. I do not agree with the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bachmann] that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] and his associates were not entitled to proceed in the manner they did. They acted as the agents of this House to find out what the facts were, so that the Members of the House might intelligently pass on this important matter. I want to compliment them for the manner in which they carried out the instructions of the House.

I want to say that I paused a long while before I came to the conclusion I did, because I felt that we did not have the privilege of confronting the witnesses on the ground in San Francisco as did the members of the subcommittee, and because of that possibly they might have some more evidence than had appeared in the record. After we had discussed the matter, however, in executive session, and after an ample opportunity had been offered to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] to make out his case, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning] to make out the case on the charges that had been particularly placed in his care, I was forced to the conclusion that, however reprehensible the conduct of the judge may have been in certain instances, which bore no relation whatsoever to the charge that is mentioned in the Constitution of high crimes and misdemeanors, I could not in all conscience vote to bring impeachment proceedings in this House. But I did join in the unanimous vote of the committee that Mr. LaGuardia should have an opportunity to present his articles of impeachment here this morning, because I felt that in the last analysis the Committee on the Judiciary has no right to pass final judgment on matters of this kind, and that the House of Representatives, sitting in its sovereign capacity as the grand jury to decide whether or not impeachment charges should be filed against any Federal official, should pass on the record and the whole record, and that they should share the responsibility along with the members of the Committee on the Judiciary. So I say, Mr. Speaker, without going into the details of the record, so far as the judge's conduct is concerned, because I presume that Mr. Dyer and Mr. McKeown will do that, as I said in the beginning, there is not anything in the record that will justify any Member of this House, in my opinion as a lawyer, to vote for impeachment, and vote for sending managers of this House to the bar of the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I believe anyone who can subscribe to either the majority report in this case or the minority report is obligated to vote for impeachment, because if Judge Louderback is guilty of the charges set out in the censure, in my judgment, he is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors sufficient to bring him before the bar of the Senate for trial.

Carrying further the statement in this case with respect to the appointment of receivers, I want to discuss for a few moments some of the cases that I think give a picture of the judge's mind and his attitude toward the litigants and toward friends of his in his court. To me the gravamen of his offense is the fact that he has preferred his friends and undertaken to look after their interests in his court in the appointment of receiverships in preference to the interest of the litigants who come to his court seeking justice.

As an example, I refer now to one Guy H. Gilbert, who has been used more or less by him as a professional receiver. Some 16 years ago he became acquainted with the judge when the judge was a candidate for the police court in San Francisco, and was one of his supporters. He later supported him for the superior court of that State, to which he was elected. About 1926 he asked the judge for some assignment as receiver to supplement his salary as an employee of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and when he resigned in March, 1932, he had been in the employ of that service for 34 years and his highest salary had been $255 per month. The judge first gave him an assignment in the State court as an appraiser of real estate. He did not go on the property. He did not do anything except to sign his name to the report, and he was given a fee of $500. The next assignment was in the Stempel-Cooley case, when he was appointed receiver of some apartment houses. He had never had any experience with real estate. He collected $12,000 in rents, and received a fee of $500. He appointed John Douglass Short as his attorney upon the recommendation of Sam Leake, and he went to Sam Leake for this instruction because he knew that Sam was influential

Then next came the Sonora Phonograph case, I think in 1929, when the judge's secretary called up Mr. Gilbert and told him that he had been appointed receiver in the Sonora Phonograph case. He went to Sam Leake immediately that night. He expected to appoint John Douglass Short his attorney, but instead he was given the information from some source that one Dinkelspiel was to be appointed. The people who were in charge of that concern continued to operate it and Mr. Gilbert was a mere figurehead, and admitted that he knew nothing in the world about that kind of business before. He drew the statutory fee of $6,800 for six months' service, and he did nothing in the case except to go down and receive the reports from these people who were running the business and had run it all of the time. Mr. Dinkelspiel was appointed attorney in the case, received for his six months' work $20,000, and there was not a single claim that went to litigation. All he did was to give a little legal advice in his office. That was an excessive fee, and it practically ruined the administration of the estate.

Next we find the Prudential Holding Co., which was a very peculiar case.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. How much was involved in this $20,000 fee? Whenever the gentleman says what the fees are he does not give us any information.

Mr. BROWNING. I am telling what the work was. I do not consider that the amount of money involved should fix the fee at all. He did not do $20,000 worth of work. There was collected in all about $350,000 by the receivers.

was collected in all about $350,000 by the receivers.

Mr. RAGON. What is the responsibility attached to it?

Mr. BROWNING. None at all. He did not have a law-

Mr. RAGON. Did he not have a bond?

Mr. BROWNING. No; he did not have any bond as an attorney. It was an ancillary receivership. He had no bond or responsibility except to give a little advice, and within six months he received this exorbitant fee, which I claim is unconscionable, especially under the circumstances that surrounded the case at that time

The next case was the Prudential Holding Co. It was a foreign corporation. The claim against it was by a foreign corporation, and the first notice that the officials of the Prudential Holding Co. had of the receivership proceeding was that Gilbert and Dinkelspiel showed up in their office and demanded possession of the assets of the concern. The attorney in the case said that was the first notice they had, but they found a petition had been filed on information and belief of an attorney, without any indemnity bond against the wrongful acts of the receiver after he took charge of the estate. They alleged in the petition that the concern had assets of $1,150,000 and it had liabilities of $1,100,000. The Prudential Holding Co. immediately resisted the appointment of this receiver, and they showed to the court that neither of the corporations was a resident of that district at all and, therefore, there was not any jurisdiction in that court, and yet the judge granted that receivership on a flimsy excuse, and appointed Gilbert as receiver and Dinkelspiel as attorney. They, of course, showed him plainly at the hearing there was no ground for receivership; but he prolonged action on it for a few weeks, and there was filed a petition in bankruptcy in Judge St. Sure's court, in the same district. When that was filed the only ground of bankruptcy alleged was the existence of the equity receivership. Judge Louderback went over into Judge St. Sure's division and appointed Gilbert as receiver and Dinkelspiel as attorney in the same case and then dismissed the equity proceedings on the ground that there was nothing to sustain it and tried to leave them in control of the estate. When Judge St. Sure came home, on the first hearing, he summarily dismissed the proceeding, and they filed a petition asking for it to be reinstated, and Judge St. Sure said in substance, "No. I will not hear you any further. This case smells bad from the very beginning," and it was dismissed, and they went out without fees.

Not being satisfied because his friends Gilbert and Dinkelspiel had received no fees, then there came along the Fageol Motor Co. case, which was a big manufacturing and assembling plant, with some $3,000,000 of assets scattered through four States—California, Oregon, Washington, and Utah—and they had sales agencies and assembling plants and service and other activities. They filed a petition, after they had had a conference of a week of all the principal creditors and parties in interest, and decided if they could | get an equity receivership they could stave off their debts until they could work out of their predicament. They put in three days agreeing on a man for receiver. They picked a man who knew every phase of the automotive manufacturing and sales, and nobody disputed that he was qualified. They went in a body to the judge's chambers and took their petition and asked him, through his secretary, to give them a hearing on the granting of the petition. They said to the secretary, in effect, "We have agreed upon a man who is qualified and we want to have a hearing that the judge may understand what our position is." That was at 12 o'clock noon. His secretary said, "He is busy now, but come back at 1.30." They went back at 1.30, and she said, "You will have to come back at 2.30; the judge has not returned, at which time he will hear you." At 2.30 they came back and they passed the judge in the hall, walking away, and they went in and asked her what about the hearing, and she said the judge had appointed Guy H. Gilbert receiver and Dinkelspiel as his attorney some time ago.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. I agree that there has been a multiplicity of receiverships and excessive fees granted, but does the record show that the judge was the beneficiary of any part

Mr. BROWNING. Let me tell the gentleman this: Does he conceive of any moral ground upon which a judge can grant favors to his friends and not be a beneficiary? He is as chargeable with favors to them improperly given as he is to

Mr. GLOVER. I believe he ought to be censured for it.

Mr. BROWNING. Censured? Censured? Of course, if he is guilty of that, he ought to be impeached, and I believe the gentleman from Arkansas would impeach him if he were convinced of that.

This man Gilbert was called in by these parties. They undertook to dismiss their petition because they said they could not do anything with him in as receiver, but he qualified before they had time. They had never heard of him, and decided if they could not get an agreement out of Gilbert they were going into bankruptcy. He agreed to meet them the next morning. They came in, and he threw up hands and agreed, if you will just leave him and his attorney in authority and give them a nominal fee, they would step aside and let the creditors run it. That is exactly what they did. Dinkelspiel took $6,000 and Gilbert about the same, and they stood aside, and these people employed men to do the work of the receiver, and they said to Gilbert, "You know you are not competent," and he admitted it, and the judge knew it at the time he appointed him, and he did it because he wanted to do him a favor instead of looking after the interests of litigants who came into his court.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes. I yield briefly.

Mr. MILLER. Over the period of time of these requests for receiverships, how many receiverships were pending in the court, in order that we may get an idea of whether he was appointing his friends to serve in all such matters?

Mr. BROWNING. The information that came to us was there were about 12 in his court, as I remember it; that is, equity receiverships, and these are the ones that we made a

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, his conduct in selecting personal friends who had nothing on earth in the way of information or managerial ability that they could contribute, and the facts showing that they were merely set up as dummies to keep other arrangements from coming in, I insist that any such conduct as that is reprehensible and it is an utter disregard of his obligation as a court to look after litigants who come into his court. He took his preference to favor friends instead.

Now, there is one other case that I want to mention if I have the time, and that is the Lumbermen's Reciprocal care of his friends instead of taking care of the litigants in an estate that is entrusted to his keeping.

This was an insurance company. There was some opinion that the receivership should be in Federal court, in order to try to protect the funds in favor of the holders of policies in California, the parent company being in Texas. They did not want them to come in and get the assets that belonged to local policyholders.

So a Federal receivership was considered. Then the State commissioner, under the laws of California, went out and took charge of the assets, and sent one of his deputies up to advise the judge that they were perfectly willing to not contest Federal receivership if he would appoint the State commissioner of insurance as the receiver and the proceedings to go forward in the Federal court because they could thereby use their force without extra compensation and save the assets in the administration. Instead of doing that, when the lawyers got up there to ask for a receiver they were handed a slip containing the names of three for re-ceiver and given to understand that Samuel Shortridge, jr., was to be the receiver in that case; that is, that that was the wish of the judge; the secretary conveyed that information to them. They selected him. It developed that he had, in advance, been notified that he would be appointed receiver and that he and the judge had agreed on an attorney, Mr. Woodworth.

Immediately the commissioner, who had taken charge of everything under the law, and whom the court later held had exclusive jurisdiction of the matter, contested this receivership and it was fought through to the bitter end. No one can read the record of the judge's conduct in that case without reaching the inevitable conclusion that he used every means in his power, that he used every device he could, to assist those two men in holding control of those

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield.

Mr. SPARKS. Is it not a fact that under the California law the State commissioner of insurance is the one entitled to be receiver of an insurance company when an insurance company becomes defunct?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; and he took charge of it four days before this petition was filed, was acting under his exclusive authority, and everybody had notice. The claim on which the petition was based was declared null and void before the judge granted the receivership; and he knew it at that time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. BROWNING. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The remarks thus far have been based on the receivership. What does the record disclose as to the general conduct and course of the judge in the discharge of his official duties otherwise?

Mr. BROWNING. The record is made up principally of the receiverships, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi. The other conduct is purely incidental.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield. Mr. MICHENER. After a very thorough investigation by the committee of which the gentleman is a member, as a matter of fact the committee was unable to find any fault except those set forth in the record which covered the re-ceivership. Is not that true?

Mr. BROWNING. No; that is not quite correct. We could have gone into other matters, but we understood that his official conduct as disclosed by these receiverships was what the House wanted and we rested on that. We did not have any local police or detectives' assistance to go on. We just had to do the very best we could ourselves.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. What was the attitude of the Bar Association of California toward his conduct?

Mr. BROWNING. They asked for this investigation, and it was made at their request. They furnished us two very excellent gentlemen to sit with us at the counsel table, and Association. It carries out this very idea of trying to take they undertook to be of all assistance they could in the matter. The bar association requested the investigation, and they helped us make up the record. They have made no other expression, so far as I know. I do know what their attitude is, but it is not in the record.

Now, when this case was appealed by the commissioner of insurance, this lumbermen's reciprocal case, the court of appeals reversed Judge Louderback and said there was not any jurisdiction in his court; that the commissioner of insurance had exclusive jurisdiction; that the receivership was without warrant of law and should not have been granted: that it should have been left exclusively to the State commissioner. When he started to obey the mandate of the court he put in his order that the assets should be turned over to the Federal receiver within 30 days, provided that no appeal was taken from his allowance of the fees to the receiver and his attorney. That is the kind of an order he made and entered on the minutes of his court in response to the mandate of his own superior court. He admitted himself it was wrong. Later on he saw what a terrible mistake he must have made, but I am giving you this to show you the picture that was in his mind.

I am thoroughly convinced that he was interested more in the fees that were going to his friends than he was in preserving the assets.

Later on he permitted them to turn it over on stipulation. Appeal was taken from the allowance of the fees. The court cut them about half in two. It allowed small fees to the receiver and his attorney on the ground that they possibly did not know that it was wrong for them to take charge of it: that they had put substantial labor on the case, and the court did not want to penalize them by letting them work for nothing.

Mr. ARNOLD. Has the bar association taken any action in this matter, or have any citizens of the county taken any action in the matter?

Mr. BROWNING. As I just stated to the gentleman from Maryland, I believe that the bar association initiated this investigation. They wrote a letter to the President of the United States urging that Congress or some one in authority investigate the conduct of this Federal judge.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is, the local bar association?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Is that in the record?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; that is in the record. Mr. CRAIL. That was by resolution, was it?

Mr. BROWNING. That was by resolution of the bar association which they sent to the President of the United

There is one other case I jumped over, the Golden State Asparagus Co. I apologize for the hasty way in which I have to pass over these matters, but it is occasioned by lack

The Golden State Asparagus Co., as I understand, operated an asparagus farm and a canning establishment in connection with it. They decided to go into receivership. They came to the court and requested the court, because of the peculiar nature of the business and the problems involved, that he permit them to appoint the receiver and suggest the attorney.

He said, "I will give you the receiver," and appointed a very efficient man whom they recommended. Then he said, "I will submit a list of attorneys to the receiver that he can pick from," and this was satisfactory to the litigants; but later on, instead of that he appointed Dinkelspiel. The record shows that the attorney did no more work than counsel had performed ordinarily in the operation of the company. These charges had been less than $1,000 per year. Yet for a few months' service Dinkelspiel was given a fee by Judge Louderback of $14,000.

The only real legal service rendered was by the attorneys before appointment of receiver in preventing a forced sale; and the judge denied their uncontested fees in toto. had objected to the exorbitant fee to Dinkelspiel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, impeachment matters are a very important responsibility that we have to deal with. Under the Constitution we are charged with the matter of bringing impeachment proceedings. Judges of the United States court and certain other civil officials can be removed by impeachment. The House of Representatives is charged with the duty of bringing the impeachment and if they do this, the impeachment case is tried by the Senate.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee would not want to recommend impeachment proceedings against anyone that, in our judgment, would not be sufficient to sustain the removal of the party from office by the Senate. It is not a question of whether a judge has acted properly in some matter or other; it is a question of whether he has done things that cause his office to be subject to criticism and cause him to be subject to severe punishment. The only way you can punish a Federal judge under such circumstances is to remove him from office.

The Judiciary Committee, consisting of 22 members, went over this case day after day and read and studied every line of testimony taken, and of the 22 members of the committee, 17 of them, headed by such members of long service here as ex-Governor Montague, Mr. Dominick, and others, came in with a report recommending to you that no impeachment be voted Reference has been made to the investigation in San Francisco. In my opinion and from what I have heard, this investigation was started by newspapers, or at least one newspaper in San Francisco that was waging a fight against the reelection of Senator Shortridge. Senator Shortridge's son had been appointed receiver's attorney in several cases by this judge. Lawyers, naturally, do not feel very friendly to a judge who appoints 1 or 2 or 3 members of the bar to a number of receiverships. They like to have them passed around. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not here settling the question of who should have been elected Senator in the last election. The people have passed upon that.

But this committee went to San Francisco; and, as has been stated on the floor here and not denied, of the three who went to San Francisco two of them did not act in their capacity as Representatives to find out what the facts were regarding this case-two of them occupied the positions of prosecutor and assistant prosecutor of this judge. The bar association offered to furnish such services for the committee. They did not accept the services of the attorneys that the bar association offered; at least there is nothing in all the hearings to show that any attorneys other than the two members of the commmittee asked a single question of a single witness.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to the gentlemen here who have served as judges, if you have a jury impaneled to hear the facts regarding a case against a person, you would not think it proper to permit two of the jurors to sit and bring out facts against the defendant, to ask questions, to prosecute, to cross-examine, and then go back and sit upon the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant. This is exactly what was done in this case. Others may say it is all right, but in my own judgment of fairness I can not consider this to be the proper thing.

I can not go over these cases, some half dozen receivership cases which the committee has picked out and based its criticism upon. They did not go into all the receivers that this judge has appointed. No; they picked out some half dozen to try to find some criticism, and the only criticism they have been able to bring here is that the judge showed favoritism in the appointment of some of these receivers or that he allowed them too much money.

Mr. Speaker, there is not one single charge in all the testimony in this record that this judge benefited one dollar, directly or indirectly, in connection with his official duties as a judge of the United States court in California.

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DYER. I would prefer not to yield right now.

Not one dollar is he accused of receiving, directly or indirectly. The Committee on the Judiciary during the time I have served there, which is some 20 years, has had a number of similar matters. Through a resolution is the usual way we get jurisdiction. The proper way is for some Member to stand upon the floor and impeach a judge, but nowadays they come with resolutions. The committee goes into these matters, and while our jurisdiction is only to say whether or not a judge should be impeached, we have gone a little far afield and have brought usually in the report in practically all of these cases a statement to the effect that we do not excuse or justify the action of the judge in this, that, or the other matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman join in the resolution of censure reported by the committee?

Mr. DYER. I joined in the majority report, which has

Mr. BANKHEAD. The report recommends that the judge be censured.

Mr. DYER. Yes; that is in the majority report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman imagine that the litigants in that court will receive any benefit in the future from a censure in the event it should be voted?

Mr. McKEOWN. If the gentleman will permit, I want to correct the gentleman by saying that the matter of censure is not in the resolution.

Mr. DYER. The only thing that is before the House and that we will be called to pass upon is whether or not we will impeach the judge. We do not vote on any question of censure, because it is not a part of the thing we have to do. We simply vote whether or not he shall or shall not be impeached. We do not vote on whether or not he shall be censured. Whether a judge is to be punished under the Whether a judge is to be punished under the Constitution is in the hands of the United States Senate and not in the hands of the House, and we do not become prosecutors until this House has voted impeachment, and then we have a right, or the House has a right, to go to the Senate and prosecute the case.

Now. I can not make reference to all of these cases, but they start out with what is known as the Russell-Colvin case. They make that number one. I think they consider that their strongest case.

Now, what are the facts? Mr. Strong was recommended by certain interests for receiver, and the judge, not knowing Mr. Strong, wanted him to appoint somebody that he knew as an attorney. The judge has a right to do that. The attorneys are paid out of the allowances made by the court in receivership cases. The judge is responsible for all the work of the receivers and attorneys for receivers. There is no one who will deny that.

So there is no criticism of the judge in appointment of receivers whom he may desire unless they commit some wrongdoing or waste the estate.

Is there any evidence here that one dollar of any estate has been wasted by any of the receivers appointed by this court?

The only thing that has been mentioned in the Russell-Colvin case, a stock-brokerage concern, was that there were excessive allowances and that the judge did not appoint a Mr. Strong as receiver.

The judge testified that a hearing was had on the allowances before they were made—a hearing before him in open court as to what these men should receive.

At that hearing there were lawyers engaged in the practice of law who had had experience in receivership cases. As a matter of fact the disbursements in the receivership matters amounted to some $464,491 in an estate of more than a million dollars.

These allowances were made after hearing in open court. Are you going to impeach a judge on that, when the allowances were made by him in open court?

I asked the judge this question: "Has there been any complaint against you by anybody with reference to any of these matters?" and he said he had not heard of any except when the election was coming on, and Senator

SHORTRIDGE being a candidate for reelection, the papers made an attack on Shortridge and the judge on the ground that the judge had favored the son of Senator Shortridge.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he indorses the report which says that-

The committee censures the judge for conduct prejudicial to the dignity of the judiciary in appointing incompetent receivers, for the method of selecting receivers, for allowing fees that seem excessive, and for a high degree of indifference to the interests of litigants in receiverships.

Mr. DYER. I am in favor of the majority report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman approve of this statement?—

And for a high degree of indifference to litigants in receiver-

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, who is always a very fair Representative, that I, as a Member of Congress, do not approve of the allowance of excessive fees in receivership matters. I think that receiver matters belong to the people and not as perquisite of the judge. I have criticised those things, and I think criticising them here in the reports of our committee where we have the grounds for them is very salutary and helpful and beneficial to the administration of justice, and for that reason I have joined in the reports of this character, but, gentlemen, to send the case of a judge over to the Senate for impeachment without one scintilla of evidence that he benefited in any direct or indirect way from any action of his would be simply wasting the time of the Senate and the money of the people, and I am sure that that is not our business here.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CRAIL. To ask the gentleman from Missouri if the committee took a vote on this censure matter?

Mr. DYER. I think they did.

What is the purpose and what is the effect of Mr. CRAIL. this censure?

Mr. DYER. The only effect of that is to notify, so far as we can, the Federal judges generally that they ought to be most careful in the appointment of receivers and attorneys for receivers, and to not make any allowances in any instance except those that are right and fair and proper.

Mr. CRAIL. If that is the purpose of it, then the effect would be to say, "You ought not to do that; but if you do it, it is none of our business."

Mr. DYER. We have said that it is our business indirectly, but we can not impeach for it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a moment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyerl stated that none of the litigants in this case made complaints. All of the testimony was given by litigants in

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a tremendously important matter, and I want the attention of the House in the last 15 minutes permissible to those who believe that the judge ought to be impeached. I make a very brief statement. I agree with the findings of the majority of this committee in its findings of fact. We are dealing with the Federal judiciary, and in this House we set the standard of Federal judicial conduct. We go about the country complaining about what Federal judges do. In the Congress of the United States we determine what the Federal judges do.

Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleagues of the majority who examined the witnesses in this case are truthful men. Here is what they find: They find that the conduct of the judge was prejudicial to the dignity of the judiciary. How? In appointing incompetent receivers.

This judge took a man who was merely a telegraph operator and put him to bloodsuck a wounded institution, and there is not a man who can stand on the floor of this House and controvert that fact. Of course he was incompetent, and the judge knew he was incompetent when he put him there. That is the reason why the Bar Association of San Francisco petitioned the President of the United States to send an agency, the only agency that could give relief, to inquire into the facts in the case. I have had a good deal of experience in these impeachment matters. We know as a matter of fact you can hardly get a lawyer to raise his voice against a Federal judge, on account of the power they have got, and whenever you find a bar association going on record and appealing to the President of the United States to send somebody there to inquire about the conduct of a judge, you may know as a matter of horse sense that that judge's conduct has been such as to bring reasonable, substantial doubt of his integrity. You can not make a bar association ask for an investigation of a judge when those are not the facts. This is what I say. The highest crime that can be committed by a judge on the bench is to so conduct himself on the bench that the people in that community are substantially doubtful about the integrity of the We go around and appeal to the people to respect the judiciary. I declare to you, men of the American House of Representatives, the only way you can make the people respect the Federal judiciary is to keep the Federal judiciary respectable. [Applause.] Do you mean to tell me that you can expect respect for a judge of whom it may be said that his conduct is prejudicial to the dignity of the judiciary in appointing incompetent receivers, and for the method of selecting receivers? The people in interest got together trying to save a going concern. They tried to make an engagement with the judge to discuss the matter with him, and he evaded them and appointed this man, utterly unfit for the job.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman believe that to be a high crime and misdemeanor?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It just depends on whom you are looking after.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I say it is.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman explain to the House—

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Just let me make my speech. I say that when a Federal judge on the bench in the eyes of the public demonstrates that he is more concerned in somebody getting something out of a going concern than he is concerned for the fate and right of the people who own that concern and its creditors, he is guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors. [Applause.] And may God spare this country so low a standard of official conduct as that! O my friends, this legalistic mind!

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I will yield.

Mr. CRAIL. The majority of the committee reported against the impeachment of this judge. What proportion of the members of the committee who were on the ground and had an opportunity to examine the conduct and demeanor of the witnesses and cross-examine them and judge of their character, reported in favor of impeachment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not like to go into that, but it happens to be that the three men who went there believe this man should be impeached. It may be their judgment was bad, but I base my attitude upon the findings of the gentlemen who filed the majority report. What do they say? What is the use of discussing these fees?

They say that the fees were excessive. How can they stand on this floor and argue that the fees are not excessive when they solemnly declare in their own words of censure that the fees were excessive? I do not like to get into a row with the members of my committee, but there is too much involved here. How can they say this conduct is all right when they solemnly find that the conduct of this judge is against the dignity of the judiciary? How can they argue that he appointed competent receivers when they say he appointed incompetent receivers? Here is the final word. This is your responsibility. This is not my responsibility. This is your responsibility in this solemn hour. Listen to these concluding words in their findings:

And for a high degree of indifference to the interest of litigants in receiverships.

What can be a high crime or misdemeanor if a judge on the bench guilty of a high degree of indifference to the interest of litigants in receivership cases is not guilty of such crime? Do you want us to prove that he is a thief in chains before we turn him out? What do you want, gentlemen? These are your words. I have great respect, but not for the wisdom of your recommendation. I agree with the correctness of your conclusions, but, gentlemen, we do not have many such judges as this, thank God. We will have more such judges as this if when the facts are before you you say you are willing to allow to sit on the bench a man guilty of allowing excessive fees and having a high disregard of the interest of litigants before him. What is he there for?

We go back to our people every two years. We elect a President every four years. All other officers are subject to removal by Executive order. There is but one protection under the Constitution of the United States for the people who are being ruled over by a judge like that, and that is you. That is myself. What are you going to do about it? Are you going to leave for life this man whom the people did not select, and whom the people can not discharge, and against whom they have no protection? Are you going to say to him, "You go ahead and do this way. It is all right. We think it is all right." Are you going to say to the American people, "There is no relief?"

Now, gentleman, this is an extraordinary power that a judge holds during good behavior; not during life, but during good behavior. Can any man read the report of the majority and say that is good behavior? Is it good behavior to highly disregard the interest of litigants? Is it good behavior for a man to grant excessive fees? But that is not the great crime, gentlemen. I lay this down as a standard, whenever the proven facts with regard to a judge's conduct, first, establish the facts, and then, if the reasonable and probable consequences of those proven facts are to bring to the people of the community where he lives, a substantial doubt as to his judicial integrity, he has committed the highest imaginable crime. Has this judge done it? Gentlemen, what are you going to do about it? Man to man, what are you going to do about it? Facing your obligation and your oath under the Constitution, what are you going to do about it? Are you going to complain about other judges doing what you approve of this judge doing? Are you going to make an example to the judiciary of this country?

In this trying hour in the life of the Nation, when we do not know what the future holds for us, in this hour when we know we must preserve respect for the judiciary if government stands, what are you going to do about it? Are you going to quibble about whether or not this man has been proven to have stolen some money, as some questions from the floor would indicate, was expected? Is that the standard? Take this man off the bench and write a high standard for judicial conduct in this country. Let it go forth this day from the House of Representatives that these judges, who are appointed during good behavior, must behave themselves.

I regret this very much, gentlemen. This is not a pleasant duty. It is your responsibility. We went to California as your agents. As has been explained, it was unfortunate that the entire subcommittee could not go. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Browning] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] assisted in the development of the facts in this case. They were assisted by two representatives of the bar association. Of course, the entire facts were not developed.

The difference in the conclusion as to the facts between the majority and the minority is not important. I rest my own attitude upon the findings of fact of the majority of this committee. I differ from them as widely as the East is from the West as to what those facts suggest. One is to take the judge and spank him on the hand and say, "Now, now, now, don't do it again;" and the other is to take him out. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, a division.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, a vote of "aye" is a vote for impeachment and a vote of "no" is against impeachment; is that correct?

The SPEAKER. An "aye" vote on the substitute of the gentleman from New York is a vote to impeach and a "no" vote is a vote against impeachment.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 183, nays 142, answered "present" 4, not voting 97, as follows:

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I was called from the Hall, but had I been present I would have voted "no."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my vote of "no"

and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the usual order I believe the resolution comes from the Committee on the Judiciary with reference to the appointment of managers.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would the committee be privileged to present a resolution to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. That can be done when the gentleman brings in the report from the committee.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14458, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Woodrum, Mr. Boylan, and Mr. Summers of Washington.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may have until midnight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL FOR 1933 AND 1934

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill H. R. 14769 (Rept. 2108), making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplementary appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933 and 1934, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana reserved all points of order.

TO PROVIDE A GOVERNMENT FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules for the bill (S. 417) to provide a government for American Samoa, and I want to see if we can not agree by unanimous consent on debate without the adoption of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 417 in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for two hours' general debate. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee, and he informs me that it was a unanimous report from the committee, and it is very likely that the requests for debate can be satisfactorily taken care of in the debate on the bill. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the debate be confined to one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider S. 417 in the House as in Committee of the Whole with one hour general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BEEDY. I knew of no opposition to the bill until a moment ago, when I was asked by the gentleman from Colorado for 10 minutes' time.

Members of the commission on the other side of the aisle are entitled to at least half an hour, and request has been made that I myself, as a member of the commission, take one half hour. If we are to give time outside of that, we may want to run into an hour and 30 minutes. We may not use all of the time, but I hope that the gentleman will modify his request so that we may have at least an hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, in view of that, I think we better go through with the rule, and I shall offer an amendment making the time one hour and a half. Mr. Speaker, I call up the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 378

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideraof the whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-tion of S. 417, an act to provide a government for American Samoa. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 1, line 7, strike out two hours" and insert "one hour and thirty minutes."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there is a large attendance of the membership here I think it proper to announce now that when we conclude the consideration of the bill respecting the government for American Samoa, it is the purpose of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], representing the Committee on Rules, to call up the so-called medicinal whisky bill, an amendment to the Volstead Act.

TO PROVIDE A GOVERNMENT FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, how is the time to be divided? The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] is entitled to half the time and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] to the other half of the time.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 417) to provide a government for American Samoa.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 417, with Mr. Morehead in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill is the result of a visitation to the Samoan Islands made in 1930 by a committee appointed by the Senate and the House, composed of two Members of the Senate and two Members of the House. The bill has already passed the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House. It was there amended by striking out the bill and rewriting it. If the gentlemen will read the report, so ably written by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], they will see that the bill carries out the recommendations made by the commission. The commission spent approximately two weeks in the Samoan Islands. In addition to the two Members of the Senate and the two Members of the House on the commission there were three chiefs of the island. As I say, the commission visited the islands in the fall of 1930 and spent approximately two weeks holding open hearings, and every man in the islands who wanted to be heard was given a hearing.

The commission unanimously made a report, and on that report and the findings of the commission is based this bill. It provides for citizenship, a bill of rights, an executive department and the judiciary, the ownership of land, and so on. The people who own the Samoan Islands are Polynesians. The land is held communally, controlled by the head of the family; and the matai, the head of the family, is selected by the members of the family. The products of the communal land are held communally.

These people are a wonderful people. This Government has had these islands of Western Samoa since 1900. They were ceded to the Government, and since that time they have been under the control entirely of the Navy. President Roosevelt accepted the islands, and the question is often asked why we want them. In Western Samoa there is the greatest harbor in the South Sea at the island of Tutuila. That is the reason that America accepted the islands. These people have never been granted citizenship. There is no appeal from the findings of the governor of those islands, appointed by the Navy. I do not wish to be understood as criticizing the Navy, because the Navy has done a wonderful work in the Samoan Islands, but the people there are desirous of being made citizens. They are people there are desirous of being made citizens. entitled to citizenship. If gentlemen will read the report and the bill, they will find that under the bill a civil gov-ernment is given the people of Western Samoa, and it is left with the President to appoint the governor from civil life or from the Navy or from the Army. The bill provides for a court of appeal. At the present time there is no court of appeals in the islands of Western Samoa. The expenses under this bill of administering the laws in Western Samoa, with the exception of the executives named in the act, are borne by the citizens of those islands.

It is not like it is in the Virgin Islands, where the government supports the local courts and other local institutions such as schools and such things. The people of Samoa bear that burden. This act protects the Samoans in the ownership of their land, and prevents anyone who is not a full blood or part Samoan, owning or leasing land in Samoa, thereby preventing exploitation of the land as has been done in Hawaii. The act provides for a veto power by the governor, and the act has made no change in the legislative machinery of American Samoa. The legislative body of this island is what is known as the fono. The fono is composed of chiefs, selected by members of the family representative to a certain body of chiefs, and those chiefs select the ones who go to the fono and represent them. When the fono passes a law, the governor has authority to veto it, but under this act they have an appeal to the President of the United States. At the present time they do not have that right. This act provides for a governor, an attorney general, a chief justice, and a treasurer. Those are the only officers provided for under this act. The other officers will be appointed by and under the control of the fono, the legislative body of the Samoan Islands.

I wish to say that when this commission went there and spent approximately two weeks holding hearings, the report of the commission was unanimous. Hearings were held in the Committee on Insular Affairs in the House of Representatives and the report on this bill was unanimous, with the reservation that there would be some amendments. A resolution was reported to the Rules Committee for a rule, and I am advised that that rule was unanimously granted.

I wish to say in closing, were it possible for you to have seen and known these people as the members of that commission saw them and learned of them, there is no question in my mind but what you would pass this legislation. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to myself. Mr. Chairman. Members of this House are tired and worn with the cares and responsibilities of an extraordinary session of Congress. Giving of our strength and drawing upon our fund of patience in our best-though it may be feebleattempt to meet the problems which confront us, we are further depressed by continued attacks upon Congress by the press, by the undermining influence exerted by the theater, by loose talk upon the street corners, and, alas, too frequently by thoughtless remarks even of our own Members. In the midst of this depression and these discouragements through which we are trying to find our way, it seems at times as though the dark cloud would never lift, and that we should not see the light, but somehow the Ruler of Nations, who chastens the sons of men because He loves them, has in store His richest rewards, which He will bestow in His own good time.

Let us be assured that whatever our troubles, whatever our problems, seemingly insurmountable though they be, we have just as much wealth in this country to-day as we had in September, 1929; we are still a young and virile Nation; there is still the will to find a way out of the wilderness and our Nation will discover it at the very moment when the prospect is darkest.

In this difficult hour I am glad to bring into this fetid Chamber a breath from another world, a cooling breeze, as it were, from islands in the South Seas, inhabited by people who have found the way to social happiness as no so-called great nation with which I am familiar has ever been able to discover it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts just asked me, "Mr. Beedy, who are these Samoans? What are they?" Let me now try to tell you. The inhabitants, about 10,500 in number, of the Samoan Islands in the South Seas, are Polynesians. The origin of the Polynesian race is shrouded in mystery. Nobody knows where they came from, but the best theory is that centuries ago they came out of the heart of Asia and trekked their way to the Pacific coast. I call them the vikings of the South Seas, because these people made a voyage of exploration, which it seems to me is unparalleled in the history of the world. When they had come to the Pacific Ocean and were looking eastward, they noticed from season to season that birds took their way across the ocean in seasonal flights.

Carving out their hollow log canoes and putting in their scant supplies, they ventured out upon this unknown sea, feeling confident that where those birds had gone they should come to a landing place and so they set forth upon their voyages of exploration. They soon came upon the Fiji group. Sojourning there for a while they observed that the birds took their flights yet farther to the east and to the north, and again venturing on uncharted seas, with no compass but the stars in heaven, they put forth again in their open dug-out canoes, and ultimately accomplished a landing on the Samoan group and later on the Hawaiian group. The Hawaiians, I may say in passing, are Polynesians and brothers of the Samoan people. Not satisfied with that, these brave people of the South Seas went farther, and in their open canoes they at length accomplished a landing upon the shores of South America. There they discovered the coconut and the yam, which they took back across the ocean with them and planted in the South Sea Islands. This, to me, was a revelation, for I had always assumed that the coconut was indigenous to the South Sea Islands. It was well that they transplanted this very useful fruit, for it is not only an important means of livelihood but the sole means of revenue in many of the South Sea Islands. This is especially true of Samoa. The copra, which is the dried meat of the coconut, is the one thing of value which these Samoan Islands produce.

A valuable oil is extracted from this dried meat of the coconut, which is used as a base for the manufacture of the most excellent toilet soaps. Eastern Samoa produces a copra crop ranging from 1,000 to 1,500 short tons per annum, bringing in an annual income in the neighborhood of $100,000. Outside of some $6,000, which is realized by the natives from the sale of souvenirs to visiting tourist ships, this is the sole income of the Samoan people.

Originally the Samoan group was one. Three nations-Great Britain, Germany, and the United States-attempted to assist in their government through consuls.

Undoubtedly due to outside interference internecine strife resulted, and the Samoan people, brave and warlike when their rights are infringed, fought and vied with each other. But, though they were brave in war, they longed for peace, and the day in 1899 came when, out of the dissatisfaction arising from this tripartite rule, a treaty between the three great nations resulted. By its terms Great Britain yielded her rights in the group to Germany and the United States, while Germany agreed with the United States that the dividing line between the possessions of the two nations in this group should be the one hundred and seventy-first degree of west longitude.

Seven small islands in the eastern group west of the one hundred and seventy-first degree west Greenwich constitute what is now American Samoa: Tutuila, Aunuu, Ofu, Tau, Olosega, Swains, and Rose Island. Swains Island is inhabited by a hundred people only. Rose Island is a coral atoll. The largest island in the group is Tutuila, which embraces an area of but 40 square miles.

Thank God, there is not in these islands any wealth to excite the cupidity and greed of the so-called more civilized

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman tell us something about the educational status of these natives?

Mr. BEEDY. I am coming to that in just a minute.

The climate is more or less trying to the white man. While the temperature over a range of years has not exceeded 93° F., or fallen below 72°, yet from December to May there are some intensely uncomfortable days, due to the excessive humidity. All these islands lie low upon the ocean surface. They are volcanic in origin. Around them through the years the coral insects have builded the reefs over which the merchant trader may not come with his ships.

The one thing of value in the islands to the outside world is the beautiful harbor of Pago Pago. It is the crater of an extinct volcano into which the ocean has found its way. Entering this harbor one sees on the shore of what might be termed a huge elliptical bowl perhaps a mile and a half long by three-quarters of a mile wide at its widest point our naval station and the feles which mark the village of Pago Pago.

Under the limitation of armaments treaty, as you know, no islands in the Pacific Ocean may be fortified. These islands of American Samoa are not fortified. I can not say that they would be of great use in time of war, but this harbor of Pago Pago is the most valuable harbor in the South Seas to ships in distress in time of peace. It serves as a refuge from the violent storms and tremendous hurricanes which are prevalent in this quarter of the world.

These islands are located 4,150 miles from our west coast as the ship sails. Hawaii is about halfway to the Samoan group. Thence one sails south by west about 2,100 miles or more, and practically 600 miles below the equator.

In 1899 the people of eastern Samoa, longing for peace and speaking through their chiefs, said: "We recognize in the United States of America a peace-loving Nation. We understand that the people are Christians, as we are; that they are also a just people. Therefore, we desire to give these islands to the United States, because we feel that when the American flag has once been raised here we shall enjoy that peace which we so desire." In 1899 Capt. Benjamin Tilly, in command of a United States naval ship, sailed into what is now the harbor of Pago Pago, raised the American flag, and began to build the present naval station at

From that day to this no violence, no war has swept this little group of islands, and the hope of their people in this respect has been fulfilled.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield. Mr. TABER. I am interested to know something about the cost of this proposed government to the islands themselves, how they are going to be able to meet the cost, and what the cost is going to be to this Government; also whether or not it is going to be a desirable thing to shift the government over to a civilian.

Mr. BEEDY. Of course the gentleman wants to know something of costs involved, and if I or some member of the committee did not give it to the House, we would be derelict in our duty. I am coming to it. First, I want you to know the people, because the power we propose to give them should be considered in the light of the character of people who are to be vested with it.

In the first place the Samoans are predominantly Caucasian in type. The color of their skin resembles a beautiful bronze of copper. The men particularly are of impressive physique. Stevenson, who had the wisdom to go to Samoa for the peace and quiet of his later years, and who lived there until he died, tells us that the Samoan men are the finest physical specimens of the human race with one exception, namely the Marquesans, who inhabit a group of islands to the south.

They have an innate dignity, a poise, and a natural grace of bearing which bespeak noble lineage. Back somewhere in the strain was noble blood; and I measure my words to you when I say, without disparaging any other people, that I never was more impressed with the innate worth of a people, nor have I ever more keenly sensed my responsibility in attempting to represent my country aiming to deal kindly and justly with a more lowly people.

Every member of this commission in making recommendations and attempting to draft a bill under which the Samoans might live had this ultimate objective in mindthat we interfere just as little as possible with their customs and civilization; that we keep our hands out of their affairs just as much as possible and give them a measure of power consistent with their development and their life.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman please make a note of the information he desires? Later I shall hope to devote a few minutes to answering questions.

Because this is a world of dollars and cents it becomes important to see what this bill means to us in dollars and cents; and let me say it is the work of many weeks of careful study.

If anybody thinks that the commission which visited the Samoan Islands went on a junket, I wish he might have been with us every moment, because there was never a moment in our working days, even when we were on the sea, that we were not busy with the study of the people and their problems. Hearings were held for four days in Honolulu, where we found a group of about 100 young Samoans. Immediately upon the conclusion of the hearings in Honolulu we sailed for Samoa. In the course of hearings held in various places in the islands we listened to upwards of 70 witnesses. These hearings were open to everybody regardless of station. Because of work on our report, which was continued even by night, we were able to announce our conclusions at once, and we sailed immediately on our return to the United States.

For nearly 30 years this country has failed to recognize the gift of eastern Samoa to the United States. The Samoans have been disturbed by our apparent lack of appreciation. Not until 1902 was the slightest gesture of acknowledgment made, when President Roosevelt issued a proclamation acknowledging the cession of eastern Samoa by the Samoan chiefs. But no formal acceptance of them was ever made until by resolution passed in the Senate of the United States in 1929.

I understand that the occasion for that resolution was trouble which had arisen in Western Samoa. Western Samoa, still German Samoa, but administered now under a mandate from the League of Nations, is governed by New Zealand. In the 30 years we have governed American Samoa the people have been taught English. In the schools, which are graded up to the eighth grade, children are not only taught English but writing, arithmetic, geography, and the fundamentals of a common-school education.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. What language do they speak?

Mr. BEEDY. The older people speak the Polynesian language, but the coming generation also speaks very good English.

Mr. DICKINSON. And your testimony was taken in what language?

Mr. BEEDY. In Polynesian; and an interpreter was used. For 30 years Samoan children have been going to these schools, and the Samoans have received nothing from this Government for the support and maintenance of their educational institutions. The Samoan children love to go to school. They besought us to provide funds for a higher education, but upon the theory that a general higher education would be of questionable value in Samoa, we denied them. What do you do with boys and girls who have a higher education in a country where there is no industry? The only thing these boys and girls can do in Samoa is to help with the general work on the family lands and harvest the coconut or the copra crop. If you educate them beyond their needs, they become unhappy and restless; but in these 30 years of their attendance at schools young men have come to ask what kind of government we have been giving them. Well, let us see what kind of government it has been. They have been governed by a naval captain. He embodied the executive, judicial, and the legislative; he combined the three functions. He wrote a pronouncement or a decree and that was law.

True, the Samoans have been permitted to gather in their fonos and present their requests to the governor, but with the years they have asked for things of which the governor disapproved, and as they said, "Our petitions have again and again been thrown into the wastebasket. We appreciate all that the naval government has done for us, but we want some real power in our fonos."

Here I must not omit to say that the United States Navy in the government of these people has done, perhaps, as great a humanitarian work as it ever did or ever will be able to do. There is only one great blot upon the escutcheon of the Navy government which illustrates something of the effect of a tropical climate upon our race. A former Governor of Samoa, a United States Navy captain, injuriously affected by his long service in Samoa, exercised poor judgment. He had one of these Samoan chiefs arrested, preferred charges against him, court-martialed him, and without a jury trial had him hanged within 24 hours.

Fear of some other untoward event—and there has been unrest in eastern Samoa of late—impelled the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], who was born in the Hawaiian group, and whose grandfather was an early missionary in the South Sea Islands, to introduce the resolution which passed the Senate in 1929, and in pursuance of which the commission referred to by the gentleman from Texas went to these islands.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield for a question at this point?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the gentleman know that a strong effort is being made now on behalf of the natives of the island of St. Thomas to go back to the former government under which they prospered, and there is a strong effort being made to bring influence to bear on the President elect in favor of going back to their old form of government?

Mr. BEEDY. You can not make any comparison between the Virgin Islands and this group, General. We know the Virgin Islanders became unhappy under what they called Navy rule and they wanted a civil government. The request was granted and it is true that the change has not proven altogether satisfactory. But the problems of the Virgin Islands are not the problems which confront us in Samoa. They are not to be compared.

Gradually through the years there has developed in the minds of the younger Samoans an idea that the government they are getting is not consistent with the spirit of the institutions of the United States. They therefore said to our commission, "We demand nothing of you, but it seems to us that we ought to have some right to make our own laws." They said, "We live in a tiny group of islands, apart from the civilized world. We are children in experience. You commissioners come from a great Nation. You are wiser in experience than we. You are our Christian brothers. You will do nothing to harm us. We appreciate this opportunity to tell you what we would like, but if it is not good for us, you will tell us and we will accept your judgment."

The present Navy government is the most autocratic in the world. It gives the Samoans no citizenship status. It denies them the right to make laws to regulate purely local problems. It gives them no appeal to a higher court when they seek to litigate their rights. It places them under the supreme control of a Navy officer.

The opposition party, composed principally of the younger men, and known as the Mau Party, asks that we grant them American citizenship above all else. This we provide for in the pending bill.

They ask the right of making their own laws in a fono representing the island group and made up according to their own customs. All acts of the fono, however, they agreed should be subject to the governor's veto. The pending bill makes such provision.

They asked for a right of appeal and we provide for appeals to the District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii.

We provide for a treasurer, who shall take the place of the naval officer who at present takes charge of the island government's funds.

We provide for them an attorney general, upon whom we impose the duty of sitting in counsel with the fono, helping in the draft of their laws, and who must forward to this Government copies of every law that is passed and a complete report of the proceedings of the fono.

To take the place of their present secretary of native affairs, who has served as a prosecutor as well as a judge in criminal as well as civil cases, we provide for a chief justice to be assisted by two native chiefs who now sit as judges in the village courts.

We have devised as simple a government framework as possible. Its cost is not to exceed by $18,000 a year the cost of the present Government. It is almost impossible for me to tell you just how many dollars the government in American Samoa is now costing. That cost is covered in the general naval administration. We maintain a naval station there with varied activities, including a naval hospital. The health problem has been dealt with by the Navy in a most excellent manner. Naval surgeons give their services to these people, but native nurses have been trained and now serve in the hospitals.

Now, the first thing we want to do is this: The commission believes we owe the Samoan people the obligation of giving them an organic act as we have the people of every other insular possession of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. HARE. . I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. Now, I think I ought to take five minutes to answer questions, but right now I want to say two things. In the first place, we decided that it was absolutely essential to guard against the possibility of foreigners coming into Samoa and acquiring land from the Samoan people. Their land is almost their sole possession. We want the Samoans to keep their land. That has been the policy of the Navy government. It is the policy written into the pending bill.

We have seen what happened in Hawaii. The Hawaiians have lost the lands. We want to save the Polynesians in Samoa from any such loss.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it necessary to have section 4 to coordinate with the rest of the bill?

Mr. BEEDY. Section 4 is the citizenship section, which is the one thing the Samoans must have if they are to be satisfied. They now have no citizen status in the world.

They feel this very keenly.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine answered definitely that sections 4 and 5, if deleted, will leave the bill imperfect. They are the only two sections that relate to citizenship. As the gentleman knows, that is the principal opposition to the bill. Those who are opposed to it are opposed to the granting of citizenship and that is the basis of my opposition. I wonder if that provision can not be stricken out and still give these people what they ought to have.

Mr. BEEDY. I am sorry, but we might just as well do nothing at all about the bill as to refuse them citizenship. The bill leaves to the local authorities the power to determine the qualifications for Samoan citizenship, with the limitation that nobody can become a Samoan citizen who is not an American citizen. So, with the bestowal of citizenship the bill also insures these limited rights of government. You will see that the bill of rights which is proposed is not as broad as the bill of rights in our own Constitution. They are not yet ready for trial by jury, and we do not propose to give them that right. I repeat, we have endeavored to erect a mere framework of government in the proposed organic act. We have dealt only with essentials to the people of Samoa as we see and understand their needs.

Their civilization is almost purely communal. The family owns the land. The family group consists of anywhere from 50 to 100. As the young folks marry, they bring home the new husbands and the new wives. For each new couple a new fele or house is built in the circle of family feles under the palm trees. Work on the plantation begins in the early morning; and when the sun is high in the heavens. the men come back from the coconut groves to rest until the cooler hours in the early evening. Further work is done in the late afternoon and then the family gathers for the evening meal, after which they gather in open circles about their fires to sing and dance into the late hours of the night. And in Samoa no household starts its daily work until the Matai, the chief of the family group, offers prayers to the Christian God: and no household ever retires for the night until the Matai again offers prayers to the Christian God.

These people are not polygamous, they are monogamous, and the strictness with which the marriage tie is observed is a splendid example to the civilization of the world. The respect of children for old age and the respect of the grown people for their elders is also highly commendable.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not see how we are going to add anything to the happiness of these people by the provisions of this bill. If we protect them in their property rights and leave them with their communal government, I believe they will be much better off than if we put a government over them which they do not need and probably do not want.

Mr. BEEDY. There is no question but that the most difficult task for a great nation to perform is to attempt to do something through government to help somebody else. But we are proposing to give them what they asked for with limitations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lozier].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I have requests on this side for 35 minutes of time.

Mr. HARE. I do not see how it can ever be granted.

Mr. BEEDY. I was afraid of that. I was afraid that I would keep taking up time until I would deprive somebody else of it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I would like to have somebody explain just what property laws are to be established. It seems to me that they have solved the property question rather interestingly.

Mr. BEEDY. We have left it just as it was. All the title is in the family.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Wilson].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I favor the passage of this bill providing a government for American Samoa.

My purpose now is to call the attention of the House to the provisions of the bill approved by both branches of the Congress providing for the purchase and use of American materials and products manufactured or produced in America by American labor, in the execution of all Government contracts wherever the United States has jurisdiction. This includes American Samoa.

I am also delighted to make known to the author of this bill, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], and to the Congress, that by a combination of chemical skill from the State of Maine and natural resources in the State of Louisiana, white paper suitable for all purposes may now be manufactured from southern pine in commercial quantities. This has been definitely proven and settled as a result of experiments carried on under the direction of the Southern Advance Bag & Paper Co., of Hodge, Jackson Parish, La., and the Advance Bag & Paper Co., of Howland, Me.

This has been called an industrial miracle. It had been heretofore contended and conceded generally that craft paper was the only commercial product in that line that could be produced from pine grown in the Southern States. But now from this natural resource in Louisiana, skilled chemists at Howland, Me., have shown that white paper of the highest quality in commercial quantities can be produced. It will be available for use in every Government department and in all Government contracts.

I wish to exhibit samples of the products referred to and the first newspaper printed on white paper manufactured from Louisiana pine, and to announce that that means great progress for the South and wonderful use of its natural resources, not heretofore known.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WILSON. I yield. Mr. GREEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. In our State there is also one of these paper plants to which the gentleman refers, where long-leaf pine is now being converted into very good pulpwood for use in manufacturing

Mr. WILSON. The pulp and paper business is an important and leading industry in Louisiana. I hope we can establish and continue a national policy whereby the money now sent outside the United States for white paper and other paper materials will be retained and used for the purchase of products produced at home by our own people in our own industries and on our own farms.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the thanks of this House are due the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS] for a study of the question of a government for Samoa, and the result of their work after a visit to those islands. At the time they went to Samoa the Government was nonpartisan. It was handled by the Navy Department. The words of their report are that they unanimously agree to recommend to Congress that it shall grant American citizenship to the inhabitants of American Samoa, with as little interference as possible with local customs.

The subject to-day is establishing a new government for an old race of people. What has been presented has all been sentimental. Not one word have I heard to indicate how those people are going to be taught to finance themselves. We have had an experiment for the last four years in the Virgin Islands. It is asserted by the proponents of the pending bill that the Samoans do not like their present government. They want some change, and, of course, they want citizenship. In the Virgin Islands the same plea was made; and about four years ago, for a population of about twice the size of the Samoan Islands, 20,000 people, a government was proposed and has been put into effect. As I understand the census figures, there are approximately 10,000 people in all the islands that are known as American Samoa. From the same source the figures are given me for the Virgin Islands, St. Croix, 84 square miles, population 11,413; St. Thomas, 28 square miles, population 9,834. No one has read the bill to us yet. It will be read, of course. It provides that they will have a governor and a judge of the supreme court and an attorney general. They have three judges now. They are going to have what is tantamount to a supreme court. They ask us to impose on these 10,000 people practically a state government—full machinery for a full state government for 10,000 people.

I do not know what representations were made when that same thing was proposed for the Virgin Islands, but I know what the result has been. In the report of June 30, 1932, the governor says:

A question often asked is why should the United States Government continue to make appropriations for the support of the Virgin Islands. The annual Federal appropriation for the Virgin Islands is about $400,000.

That is exactly what the result would be if this bill provided that government which they are trying to set up in Samoa, except that in the Virgin Islands it is divided between two islands approximately 40 miles apart, by which they have quick communication by airplane, but they have no airplanes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. There is no comparison between the Virgin Islands and Samoa, as a radical people. The United States pays most of the local expenditures in the Virgin Islands, and this act does not provide for that in

Mr. EATON of Colorado. This act does not provide for the exercise of the taxing power to produce a cent by their own government. It leaves it entirely to the Samoans, and if they want to do it, they may. After four years' experience in the Virgin Islands, they have now set up various commissions. You will find the same commissions on both islands. Some have a principal official at St. Thomas and an assistant at St. Croix. They have a health commission; they have a hospital commission; they have a road commission; they have a fire commission; they have a building and street commission; they have a cemeteries commission; they have a department of public works; they have a judiciary department; a department of public welfare. The head of that department made 1,020 visits and conducted 1,092 interviews, according to their report; that makes an average of less than 3 per day. This is a perfect government that you have prepared here.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. But there is no similarity between the two. If the Congress would quit appropriating money for them, they would not have all these commissions in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman is right. There is no dispute about that; and if I can not interfere with this Congress starting to appropriate money to send over to Samoa, two or three hundred thousand dollars a year for all of these commissions, so as to bring these islands up and give them a perfect system of roads from one place to another, whether over the ocean or over coral, I am at least going to point it out here to-day to you.

Now, how much do you think they are going to pay the great governor of these islands? Ten thousand dollars per year. They are going to pay him the same salary they pay now to the Governor of Hawaii, the same salary they pay now to the Governor of Puerto Rico, the same salary they pay now to the Governor of Alaska, and because they have half as many people, almost twice as much as we pay the Governor of the Virgin Islands; but I am told a man should not be asked to go over there without giving him at least $10,000 a year. That money is going to be paid by the United States.

Mr. BEEDY. Most of the offices the gentleman speaks of in the Virgin Islands they have also in Samoa, but they pay all those expenses themselves. The Samoan people, by a process of poll tax, raise the money to support their own local institutions. They will continue to do so under this

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. As I understand it, the reason for presenting this bill is that the Polynesians are unhappy with their present government. Now, for the life of me, I do not see why our committee did not consider our own unhappiness with our Government and offer to teach the Samoans to arrange some way as we arrange here in the United States to take care of our own unhappiness. Let them have some franchise rights over there; let them choose the man or the group they want to be in power instead of coming to the United States, some 4,500 miles away and holding the United States responsible as the head of a great insular government with palaces and palazzios, and all those things that go to keep great the "face" of the Polynesian people.

I have the greatest respect for those people. There have been some great men over there in that race. They know their business in the islands well enough to at least take care of themselves so that a great group of 10,000 people are on these islands after all these years.

I see the gentleman representing the Philippines here. He must smile as he hears us talk about a government for Samoa. He comes here asking us for a bill to give the freedom to the Philippines, to which they are entitled, and which they are going to have some day. May I ask the Resident Commissioner [Mr. Osias] what the population of the Philippines is?

Mr. OSIAS. Thirteen million. Mr. EATON of Colorado. Thirteen million. That gives me an illustration for comparison. To pass this bill would be as wise-you might just as well say you are going to give me in my office as Representative of the first district of Colorado a first janitor, an assistant janitor, a clerk, a file clerk, a stenographer, an assistant stenographer-a setup comprehensive enough to run the United States Capitol. That is what I am trying to point out to you and that is what I want to leave with you. You are proposing governmental machinery sufficient for a State, to govern a population of 10,000, who already have the full protection of the United States but have persuaded our emissaries they would be happier if they had a change. I shall leave the effect of giving citizenship to this Polynesian group to those of you who know most about immigration matters, but I am opposed to it, and I think I am not the only one opposed to it. I am opposed to this grant of power to this people at this time. I think it is a mistake, with all due respect to those gentlemen sponsoring it, and recognizing the pleasure they have had in making a full constitution for a nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Maine yield me time to ask the gentleman from Colorado a

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands one-half a minute.

Mr. OSIAS. In view of the reference that was made to me, I do not want to be placed in the position of appearing that I am not grateful for the independence legislation this Congress gave the Philippine Islands. I am.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. We know how the gentleman

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I find myself in disagreement with these distinguished gentlemen, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Williams]; but we do not disagree on one proposition, and that is that we ought to do everything reasonable for these poor people in the South Seas. What I am opposed to is taking American citizenship and flinging it halfway around the world, flinging it out to a group of people who are absolutely unqualified to receive it, who can not espouse it fully, who do not need it as a prerequisite to their happiness, and who can not maintain it honestly. This will bring trouble to them and bring trouble to us.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, what is the significance of American citizenship in an island? I do not catch what it means. What is its value? What does it bring in; what does it take away?

Mr. JENKINS. I am not stressing that. The gentleman did not get my point. What does American citizenship mean to these people? For instance, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy] stressed the point that these people are now happy, that the ruthless hand of the money-maker, the grasping, greedy hand of the American, for instance, has never reached out there. If these people are so much happier than we are, what is the use of our contaminating them by giving to them the most priceless heritage we have?

Mr. GILBERT. They can come into America at any time they want to if we extend citizenship to them.

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; without hindrance at any time. I do not object to that. I have been a restrictionist on the floor of the House all the years I have been here, but I am not the kind of a restrictionist that would keep desirable people from visiting our shores.

I have always contended that when we fling out Americanism to the four corners of the earth we cheapen it. We granted American citizenship to the Puerto Ricans, and what has been the result? There is no place in the world where I have ever been that an American is so unpopular as he is down there. I remember when I was a member of a committee visiting there we went to the University of Puerto Rico. The student body numbered some 1,100, and practically all of them apparently indicated that they were not in tune with American ideals, and they showed conclusively that what we had done for them was not appreciated and that they did not appreciate the American citizenship we had given to them.

With members of the committee we went down to the Virgin Islands and took them, in a more or less formal way, the information that we had conferred American citizenship upon them. They received us loyally, and I felt sorry for them, just as the gentleman has felt for these Samoans. But American citizenship to the people of the Virgin Islands has not helped them, financially or otherwise. They come back and bring us all sorts of stories of political discord and bitterness and factionalism. Samoa would be better off if they were under more or less of a protectorate by the United States. They do not need citizenship, and neither do they need a cumbersome political government. They need the warm, sympathetic help and safe protection of America. But we should not bind ourselves to guarantee to them full rights of American citizenship.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; I yield to my distinguished chair-

Mr. HARE. Dissatisfaction among American citizens is rather general now, is it not?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; of course it is; and it is unfortunate that is the case in a lot of places, but what is the use. as my good friend from Maine has said, of our contaminating ernment that they can not espouse loyally, that they can not handle, and with which they ought not to be inflicted?

I am favorable to doing everything for these people that we can do, and the thing that should be done for them is not to begin at the top and load them down with the political obligations or political power or to give them visions of a new government for themselves such as George Washington fought for. But we should begin at the bottom. They ought to be given protection. Why should we give them citizenship and deny citizenship to the Filipinos who are just a little farther away from us?

Why involve ourselves in all these foreign propositions when it is not necessary? For instance, suppose an American citizen found himself in New Zealand. Here is New Zealand Samoa right against this American section of Samoa. Suppose a controversy arose between American Samoa and New Zealand Samoa and we are involved away down there on the other side of the world over giving citizenship to a little handful of people that need sympathy and need protection, and that is all they do need at this time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hooper].

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly interested to-day in discussing the cost of giving to the people of these islands this skeleton of government. If you care to reduce that amount in committee you can go ahead and do it; but I have been very much impressed with the story that the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Texas, whom we are going to miss greatly in this House in the next two years, brought back from these islands.

I want to address myself to the matter of citizenship. From what I have learned from the information these gentlemen brought back from their pilgrimage to these islands. these Samoans are as fine a Christian people as you will find anywhere throughout the world. They are people, although remotely, of the race that sits in the House of Representatives. They are Caucasians. Those who have been tracing back the ethnology of this race for a long time past agree that they have come from the plateaus of Central Asia and are of Caucasian stock.

There are no Al Capones among them. There are no criminals among them. There have been no murderers among these people for many, many years past. They want American citizenship, and that is about all they do want from us; and it is a very small boon, it seems to me, for us to give them when we have conferred citizenship upon the people of the Virgin Islands, when we have given citizenship to the mixed people of Puerto Rico, and when we find in every great city of our country people of the yellow race and brown race and the red race and the black race who are citizens of the United States.

There are only 10,000 of these people. They are a rapidly vanishing race. If it means anything to them to have conferred upon them the privilege of American citizenship. I think we can well waive our racial prejudices and scruples and give it to them.

Do what you want to do in this matter as far as the cost of this experiment in government is concerned, but it does not seem to me that the Members of the American House of Representatives or the American people generally ought to be very squeamish about conferring American citizenship upon a people of such fine physique and such fine equipment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. If we pass this bill, are they going to have prohibition down in Samoa the same as they have in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands?

Mr. HOOPER. I do not know anything about prohibition in these islands, and I wish my friend from Wisconsin would let me proceed with the few remarks I have to make.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. On the Pacific coast we are very much interested in citizenship. We have to bear the brunt of that, and the Filipinos we have here now we want these poor unsophisticated people with a whole lot of gov- to ship back home, and we do not care for any more.

Mr. HOOPER. If the gentleman wants to raise that question with a Filipino delegate sitting beside him, I may say that the Filipino people are not essentially of the Caucasian race; they are Malays; they are people of the brown race; and I want to emphasize here what has been emphasized before, that if you want Caucasians, these people are Caucasians; they speak the same language, with slight variation, from Hawaii clear down to New Zealand; and I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon that the people of the British Empire look upon the Maoris, the people of New Zealand, as among the finest of the native races they have anywhere through the far-flung reaches of the British Empire, and have given them British citizenship.

It seems to me that if these people out there, humble and quiet people, desire the boon of citizenship, if they wish to take their place among Americans as American citizens, it is very little for them to ask and something we can readily

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time and I ask unanimous consent that the clerk read the committee amendment in lieu of the original Senate bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that this request will mean that we will consider the House substitute section by section and not as one amendment.

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Further reserving the right to object, may I ask a question? Do I understand the gentleman to mean he is going to ask for the consideration of the matter which begins on page 33 of the bill which we have before us?

Mr. HARE. Yes; beginning at page 33 and extending to page 59.

Mr. JENKINS. That is the amendment that was voted out by the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. That is the committee amendment; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "Samoan organic act."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

This is a bona fide motion. It is deplorable in these days of misery and despair, with unemployment existing among millions and millions of our American citizens, that the people's tribunal, the House of Representatives, in the few remaining days of the session should be spending hours of its time considering the pending bill with the idea of taking care of the people of a foreign land.

Particularly is the passage of this bill indefensible, in view of the fact that this very Congress has taken a position to divest the American Government of possessions which formerly came to our Government in about the same manner as those included in this bill. We did not give the Philippine people anywhere near the privileges extended to the people of Samoa under this bill.

This is getting the nose of the camel under the tent, and in the future the overburdened American taxpayers will be called upon to pay tribute in order to take care of these foreign people and pay large salaries for a multitude of officeholders, made possible by the enactment of the legislation.

I am surprised to find a few of our good Republican friends supporting this legislation. This legislation can properly be sponsored and supported by the Democratic majority, which has had control of the House of Representatives, actual paper and working control, for two years, and a working coalition in the other body for more than two years. Why? Because when we study the last Democratic administration all the way down the line we find that foreign nations and foreign nationals came first, and in many of the platform pledges in the campaign last November we found that it was a case of foreign nations and foreign nationals first and the American Nation and American nationals second, not only with reference to taking billions of dollars of the American taxpayers' money under the last Democratic administration and handing it over to the foreign nations, even after the armistice. We also now observe from news dispatches following the conferences of representatives of foreign debtor nations with the Democratic President elect that it is going to be another administration of taking care of the foreign nations first and the American Nation second.

I expect in the not far distant future the Democratic administration will support a program to reduce, in whole or at least in part, the war debts which foreign nations honestly owe us, nations whom we saved from extinction, including the Republic of France, who was too poor to pay $20,000,000 this year on her honest debt to us, notwithstanding the fact that she had already been reduced over $4,683,000,000, and yet a few weeks later she had the money to lend $14,000,000 to a foreign nation from whom we had saved her. Yet in the name of economy, in the name of balancing the Budget, we are asked to reduce benefits to our disabled American war veterans, who fought and bled on the battlefields of this Republic in her war against the enemy which she recently lent $14,000,000.

Oh, I sincerely hope that when the roll is called the great majority of the members of the Republican Party, which stands for a protective tariff, which stands for protecting the rights of America and American citizens first and foreign nations and foreign citizens second—the great Republican Party, which stands for an adequate national defense to preserve our American Government and protect our people—will be found in a large majority voting against this simon-pure Democratic plan of taking care of foreign peoples first at the expense of the American people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition, as I desire to be heard against this bill.

Mr. Chairman, when the time comes I intend to vote against this bill, and I intend to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out its enacting clause as the easiest and most expeditious way of killing it.

This island is more than 4,000 miles west of San Francisco. This is a long way to send American boys to defend hand-made Americans who have never seen the United States. I am not going to ever vote again to send American boys across the sea to fight so-called American battles. I have cast my last affirmative vote on that question. I will vote to let them whip the hell out of any nation that tries to invade our country, but our country is the United States.

It was never intended by the United States that this island should serve any other purpose than to be merely a naval base. I am following my friend from Oregon, General Martin, on this question. I think he knows as much about it as any man in the House. I think he has good judgment on this question, and I am not going to vote to make these people Americans and to set up a large bunch of high-salaried officers and put them in positions over there, where eventually all their possible follies and mistakes must be paid out of the tax money of the American-born people of the United States. After they are made Americans we become responsible for their every act and deed. They could scatter over the countries of the Far East and embroil themselves with every kind of foreign entanglement and then expect us to transport armies across the Pacific to defend them. It is simply unthinkable. It is absurd.

I am surprised that this bill is going through here, greased, without any opposition apparently. It seems to be sliding along on roller bearings, and that is just the way most of the bad propositions go through the House. They are not given careful consideration by Members who study legislation closely.

I was one of the few men who voted against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. I was one of the few who predicted what would happen under it-that there would be big banks, like the Dawes bank, that would get help in $70,000,000 hand-outs whenever they wanted it, and the little banks that really serve the people, the very lifeblood of the people, would go under.

I predicted when I opposed that bill that it would eventuate in the United States Government's owning busted railroads, and that is exactly what you are going to bring about in the United States: and it is the worst thing on earth that could happen, for the United States to go into the railroad business. You would be held up here every day for some kind of legislation to do something for the railroad employees of the country.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. Can the gentleman name one small bank with full and adequate security that has been refused a loan by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes: I am not going to embarrass any bank, but I will give you privately some names. I know of a citizens' national bank that has some of the finest men as officers in the world upon its board of directors, and on account of three years' continuous drought and the continued depression it has been carrying farmers who were down and out, who needed help, and it asked for the sum of a little measly $140,000, and it has had its officers here for several days trying to get help that would save thousands of people interested in that section, but they can not get it. Oh, yes; Charley Dawes can get $70,000,000 at a whack for his big bank, with big officials behind it, and then when it gets this tremendous fortune in cash it goes under. I knew that these things would happen and that it would have an army of high-salaried employees, and I voted against it. And I am going to vote to kill this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out the enacting clause. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schafer) there were 23 ayes and 31 noes.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When the Apostle Paul invoked his Roman citizenship it gave him certain rights in the court that he did not otherwise have. Now, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Maine. I am asking in all seriousness, What does the term "American citizenship" imply on an island like Samoa other than the right of immigration to continental United States? The question has been raised in debate by the gentleman from Texas about sending our boys down to protect the islands if they are American citizens. What greater responsibility will we have by reason of that than we now have? Would we not have to send our boys there now?

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman is correct. The islands belong to us, and if there should be an attempt to seize them by other nations we would have to make up our minds whether we desired to let them go or to keep them. We are responsible for the islands and the people whether they continue as wards or whether we make them citizens.

The citizenship phase presents a matter for classical discussion rather than a practical problem, because there are not a score of Samoan men and women in the islands who have money enough to get to American shores, and if they came here they would not live here.

Mr. GILBERT. Outside of immigration, are there any rights conferred with American citizenship like there used to be in olden times when the invocation of citizenship carried with it many rights other people did not have?

Mr. BEEDY. That is a pretty broad question. If I understand it. I think the only rights that these people would acquire, if we grant them citizenship, would be the right to participate in their own government. They do not expect to gain anything in the way of immigrating to this country. They do not want to come here. They want to be called American citizens. It is a theoretical proposition more than a practical one.

Mr. GILBERT. Then I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], who opposes this, What is the practical objection to that feature of it?

Mr. JENKINS. American citizenship in one place is American citizenship in another place. Of course a citizen of Oregon can not go to California and vote; there are certain requirements that must be lived up to in each State: but a citizen of the Samoan Islands, if you were to give them American citizenship, would have the same rights in the streets of London as a citizen of Ohio, Oregon, or any other State would have, and the American flag would be behind him and would protect him, regardless of the fact that he can not speak English, regardless of the fact that he can not espouse our constitutional form of government. If we give citizenship to him, he is an American citizen every place and at any time and under all circumstances, and that is what I am against.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman from Kentucky must realize that this is nothing but a naval base, and here it is proposed to go in there and set up an expensive government. Why not let the matter go on as it is?

Mr. GILBERT. I recognize that this country, through its commercialism, has absolutely destroyed the most beautiful islands in the world, the Hawaiian group, and I do not want that repeated; but if the gentlemen of this committee have protected these people in their own islands, I am for this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

ISLANDS INCLUDED WITHIN AMERICAN SAMOA

SEC. 2. The islands acquired by the United States of America under the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide for accepting, ratifying, and confirming the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 20, 1929, and the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution extending the sovereignty of the United States over Swains Island and making the island a part of American Samoa," approved March 4, 1925 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1431), shall be known as American Samoa.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to be speaking all the time, but I want to bring your attention to the fact that I think this is a very important measure, and I speak particularly to those who have not had time to investigate the matter. We are about to vote on something that we have never done before. We have never flung American citizenship so far away as we are about to do now. The question has been asked, Why compare these Samoan Islands with the Virgin Islands? It has been implied that we made a mistake in giving citizenship to the people of the Virgin Islands. If we made a mistake in giving them citizenship, we will make a colossal mistake in giving citizenship to Samoa. In the Virgin Islands the basic language is English. The people down there are Danish and English. Of course the majority of the people are colored, but they have been brought up under a form of government akin to our constitutional form of government. They are closely associated down there with Puerto Rico. The Virgin Islands are practically within view of Puerto Rico. We took Puerto Rico under circumstances where we were compelled to take care of her, and we gave her people citizenship several years ago. Puerto Rico has a population of 1,500,000. She has colleges, banks, and is modern in every way. Some maintain that we made a mistake at that time, but there is no comparison between Puerto Rico and Samoa. The Virgin Islands are close to our shores; their people are modern. They have cities and farm sites, much as any country. St. Thomas, on the island of St. Thomas, has one of the most beautiful harbors in the world. A century ago this port was one of the busiest in the West Indian country. St. Croix, the second largest of the Virgin Islands, has two beautiful modern cities. Our own great Alexander Hamilton was born in this section of the world and spent his childhood on St. Croix, and was as much a citizen of St. Croix as any person ever born there. When he came to America at the age of 15 to attend college, he left the only home he ever knew. His mother lived and died there, and her body is buried in a little country cemetery on St. Croix.

I do not think we made a mistake in giving citizenship to the residents of the Virgin Islands; but if you have any qualms of conscience about having given citizenship to the Virgin Islands, which are at our very door, with the same ideas of government that we have, what would you think about voting American citizenship to people clear around the world, away down there as a little dot in the middle of the Pacific Ocean?

You have denied citizenship to the people of the Philippine Islands, who have had able Representatives here in our Congress for years, who are now a strong organization with fine educational and banking institutions, and espousing our form of government. Do we want to embroil ourselves into every controversy that may arise in that country, just out of a little desire to do a fine thing for a few people? The thing we ought to do is to send them a few missionaries if necessary and send them somebody down there as an auditor to audit their business and take care of them, and see to it a good port is kept free for our ships when they travel the south seas. We had the Virgin Islands under the control of the Navy, and many of the people down there want to be returned to that form of government. Under Navy control their rights to own property is protected. Their lives are protected, they are granted every privilege for education that they should have. Nobody has ever accused the Navy Department of tyranny or oppression.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that the English language is the language spoken in Samoa, and that there is no comparison between the people of Samoa and the people of the Virgin Islands?

Mr. JENKINS. It was brought out clearly by the gentleman from Maine that they did not speak the English language; that the testimony taken by your commission was taken in another language.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Oh, of the older ones, but all of the younger generation speak the English language as well as the gentleman does.

Mr. JENKINS. I am glad to hear that. Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JENKINS. I yield.

Mr. BRUMM. Several members of the committee mentioned the fact that these people do not want to come to the United States. On the face of it, of course, that is ridiculous, because nobody knows what they want to do. However, I would like to ask the gentleman, was not the testimony in this session before the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which the gentleman and I are both members, with regard to the Virgin Islands, that a large percentage of them are flooding into the United States as fast as they can come, right now? Was that not the testimony?

Mr. JENKINS. I think so. At least the testimony was given by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] that they took the testimony of 100 at Hawaii. Now, here is the proposition I want to leave with you to-day. If we defeat this bill we do not do any harm to those people. They have our form of government down there fully protected by our Navy. They are happy, and the testimony of all these gentlemen is that they are much happier than we are. The Volstead Act, according to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] has not reached down there to contaminate them or to help them either. What is the use of involving ourselves when we have enough trouble, when we have so many propositions to consider at home? What is the use of taking up the time of this Congress to reach away out there, because you hear a little voice and there is a chance to show a little sympathy? You can sympathize with a thousand people in two hours after you leave this Capitol who do not have enough to eat. We owe them the obligation that one American owes another. Our first care should be for our own. What is the use of going away out yonder into the south seas? This bill will contribute nothing to the happiness or economic advantage of Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I wish to say it is not sympathy. It is the recognition of doing right, and this Nation owes it to those people. We accepted the island as a gift 30 years ago, and this is the first time we have attempted to do anything for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I yielded back 21 minutes of the general debate, and I must object.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I have been giving this bill considerable study to-day and prior to this time. I am in doubt as to whether it is the proper time for us to venture on a measure of this kind if we ever do. It has been brought out by two very intelligent addresses, and I compliment those two gentlemen for the most excellent manner in which they have made this investigation, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS]. They have brought back some valuable information, but I do not believe the information that they bring us justifies the great experiment that we are going to make if we pass this bill.

I tried to get recognition a moment ago to ask the gentleman from Maine about how much this bill would cost us in the beginning. I do not think anybody knows now. I know that in the passage of this bill you will bring an additional burden of taxation upon the people of the United States, which they are not able to bear. It has been said there are about 10,000 people on this island. It is undeveloped. It has been stated that one of our people could not go there and live. It is not desirable. If it is not desirable for habitation and those people are there and satisfied with their condition, why is it that we want to further burden our American people with further taxes to go into an experiment of this kind? As soon as this bill is passed, as soon as they are made citizens of the United States, we become directly responsible for them. That is away in the distance for us. I have seen the last war that I want to see. I want to say to you that you are here authorizing a government to be set up there, with power to legislate, and to create binding obligations upon territory that belongs to the United States, for which our Government would be held respon-

Further, I want to say that this is a dangerous time for us to venture into new territory. This action in the Far East might be very much misconstrued. I believe that those men who are advocating this are doing it with the very best of purpose, but what will other nations think of us? What will they think our purpose is? It has been said by one of the gentlemen that he would not favor education for those people; that it would not be helpful to them, and that they could not utilize it. He says that all they do in the morning is go out and shake the coconut trees and pick up the coconuts. If that is all they have to do, and if that is all they can do and education would not develop them so that they could advance, I say to you we ought not to go into this experiment now and spend the taxpayers' money in order to help people which education would not help, and that we could help very little by this action.

I believe this bill ought to be defeated. This is not the time to do it. We can maintain it as it is now. They say they do not want to come to the United States, but you are making them citizens by this act. There is nothing that can keep you from letting them come to the United States if they want to. I say to the outgoing administration, to one of the officials, Mr. Doak, that he has done the best service for this Government that any man has ever done in the Cabinet since he has been there, in keeping our Government free from those who are not ready for citizenship in this country. We are ready now to pass a deportation bill for those opposed to our Government, and I think it will be necessary to pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

In my judgment there is more trouble and grief and expense wrapped up in this little bill than in any other bill that has come before this House in many days. I was a member of the Naval Appropriations subcommittee when we had not only the government of American Samoa but the government of Guam and the Virgin Islands before us for consideration. All of these possessions were under the Navy Department. The expenses in connection with the management of the Samoa possession were and are practically absorbed by the administration of the Navy Department out of expenses that would need to be made anyway. The island of Guam, with a population a little more than twice the population of American Samoa, costs us annually approximately $35,000 under Navy Department administration.

The Virgin Islands, to which reference has been made this afternoon, were under the Navy Department until about two years ago. Now they are under the Department of the Interior. I happen to serve on the Interior subcommittee, so I have had experience with the handling of the Virgin Islands under both committees that have had charge of them and the opportunity of observing the work under the Navy Department and the Interior Department.

It is costing us to-day over $300,000 a year to administer the government in the Virgin Islands from this great distance; a territory with a population about equal to the population of Guam, where we spend $35,000, and not greater than the population of any one of many of the small counties in almost any State of the American Union. This was likewise true under naval administration, because of the projects that were carried on under a system in either case where all the activities of an American State are maintained. The Virgin Islands population is constantly trying to push more and more off onto the Government of the United States. In American Samoa there is a population equal to about one-half of the population of the Virgin Islands.

The Samoans are a happy people. They are not asking for this legislation. They are not equipped to assume the kind of government to which our people are accustomed. If we pass this bill, in my judgment, we shall open up American Samoa to exploiters who, in my judgment, if the truth be known, are the ones back of whatever sentiment there seems to be for the passage of this measure.

We ought to retain our possession in Samoa for the purpose for which we acquired it. Let it be under the Navy Department. If we transfer it from the Navy Department and set up an independent government, not only shall we be doing the wrong thing by the people of Samoa who are happy to-day and who, through the years will develop into a more responsible people individually when their interests possibly can be cared for better by themselves. Until then to extend the provisions of the pending measure will be to invite appropriations from the Federal Treasury for the government of the Samoan possession that will not be less than $100,000, $200,000, or $250,000, within another five years. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the motion.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. TABER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri has not been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy], in opposition to the motion.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. TABER. There has been no discussion, Mr. Chairman, upon the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beery] to discuss the motion. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I was aware that I could have made a point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, but I have always purposed, in the case of any legislation with which I am connected, that I will never take the attitude of trying to crowd anybody out or cut anybody short, but will give every opportunity to present opposition views. I respect the views of those who oppose me.

I do not want this committee to get the wrong idea of this proposed legislation. I insist that you ought not to place the people of Eastern Samoa in the same category with those of the Virgin Islands or with Guam It is not a fair comparison and no man who understands the situation would make it.

It is a pity for the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] to stand up here and say that he believes men interested in exploiting these islands are behind this bill. There is not anything in the islands to be exploited. The one refreshing feature of the whole problem is that there is no wealth in the islands to arouse the greed of any capitalist.

This bill does not change the obligation of the United States Government, as I see it, in any degree. These islands are ours. They have been ours for 30 years. We are responsible for them. We are responsible for law and order in them. We are responsible for their people. Inasmuch as we have granted citizenship to the people of every other group of our insular possessions, with the exception of the Philippines, which have been granted independence, why should we withhold citizenship from the Samoans? Why make fish of one people and fowl of another?

Now, let us understand the situation. We are not opening the door to any great expenditure of money. We are not opening the door to any trouble. I would not by my vote increase the possibility of sending any of our men across the Pacific to engage in war. There is no added possibility of any such thing in this bill. It is a shame for these suggestions to be made. It is not fair to these people.

If you do not want these islands, give them back to the chiefs who presented them to us 30 years ago, but if you keep them do not deny their people the same privileges you have given other groups who did not give their islands to us, but whose islands we purchased at the cost of millions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If we give citizenship to these people and make them Americans and then Japan or any other nation were to go over there and impose on them, the gentleman would want American boys to go there, 4,200 miles across the sea, to whip the stuffing out of any nation that went there for that purpose.

Mr. BEEDY. We would have to do it to-day just the same, I may say to my friend. These islands are ours, and we are responsible for the people living on them.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is a difference now, because they are not American citizens. This now is merely a naval station, and that it should remain. We must not involve American citizens 4,200 miles away from home.

Mr. BEEDY. I do not yield further. There is no ques-

I repeat we have these islands. We are responsible for law and order and for the safety of every soul in them; we have been thus responsible for more than a quarter of a century. There has been no trouble in that time, and this bill does not increase the possibility of trouble there.

Mr. BLANTON. We Americans ought to stay at home and attend to our own business. This bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. BEEDY. This bill provides a measure of justice which we owe the Samoan people. After a prolonged delay of 30 years this Nation ought to be big enough to rise to the occasion and meet its obligation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is charged with dynamite and | T. N. T .- tons of it-and we ought to strike out its enacting clause.

Mr. DYER and Mr. JENKINS rose.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I made the motion to strike out the enacting clause, and the gentleman from Maine has taken five minutes in opposition to the motion. I do not want to debate the motion further, but I do ask for a vote, and make the point that if anyone asks for further time, we are entitled to a vote now upon the motion.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] does not want to speak in favor of his motion and I do, am I not entitled to five minutes under this situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes. Mr. BLANTON. Suppose that we make them Americans, and they set up all this expensive government down there and they begin to build commerce buildings like the one down here on the Avenue costing $20,000,000, and they begin to build a several million dollar supreme court building, and they begin to involve us with Far East countries, will we not be responsible for it?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; but they are not going to do that, of course.

Mr. Chairman, let us be serious about this matter. My good friend the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] would have you believe there is no possibility of any trouble on account of the citizenship of these people. Let me read you one section on page 35:

Any person of full or any part Samoan blood who was an inhabitant of American Samoa before the effective date of this act, was residing outside of American Samoa or was engaged in foreign travel on such date, and is not a citizen, subject, or national of any foreign country, if he desires to be a citizen of the United

And so forth, may do so.

Suppose one of these fellows is down in Sumatra or out in South Africa or in Norway or in Sweden or in Siberia or Japan or England or wherever he may be, if he is not too far to write a letter back home to these people, he can become an American citizen without any formality, and where is our responsibility then?

Does this not give responsibility to the American Nation to look after such a person wherever he may be? It is preposterous. It is absolutely unreasonable to take the time of this great Nation of ours and this Congress of ours at this time to pass a piece of legislation that will take us 4,500 miles into the South Seas, that most of us do not know anything about and most of us do not care very much about. and put up the American flag and establish an American government and American responsibility.

I say to you that now is as good a time as any to beat this measure. Let us all vote in favor of this motion to strike out the enacting clause and send it back to the committee. Then the fine, sensible statesmen, the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Texas can bring in a bill here that will do exactly what we want done and keep American citizenship to ourselves.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS] asked me a question a while ago, and here is the question as I got it. He implied that these people may have some rights with respect to American citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, nobody has a right to American citizenship except a man born in America.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I did not intimate that. That was not the intimation of the gentleman from Texas. I said that this legislation was right. That is what I said.

Mr. JENKINS. All right; I accept the gentleman's correction. I will take it from that standpoint.

I want to continue this thought. Nobody has a right to become an American citizen except a native-born American, but aliens have the privilege of becoming American citizens, and this is a gracious privilege which we have extended to them. We have extended this gracious privilege to various people, but we have denied this privilege to the Filipinos. with whom we have been in close association for 35 years. We have denied this to them and they have not asked for it in the recent plan for independence. We have denied this privilege to the Japanese and the Chinese and the Indians from India and to the inhabitants of the Malayan Archipelago, and yet we reach out and find one little island where we have a little naval base and we want to give them American citizenship. We can give them everything they need, which is what they have now, and if they need any improvement in their government, let us give that to them. and let them be happy down there by themselves. Let us not load upon them the responsibility of American citizenship. They can not take it. They do not know anything about trial by jury, and that is very fundamental and the cornerstone of American civilization and American citizenship. They are not able to espouse trial by jury and they can not do this in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands, and some believe we made a mistake in giving them full American citizenship. I say to you that this is a right that we ought to circumscribe with safeguards and is something that should never be given except as a privilege, and let us not give it to these people until they are able to appreciate the privilege. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. After we make them American citizens, and they are living there about 4,200 miles west of San Francisco, we are too far away to know what they may do, or what kind of controversies they will embroil us in, and whatever they may do, we would be responsible, for they would be American citizens, and would have the right to demand of us protection, no matter how scattered they were over other countries. For when they become Americans they will have the right to go where they please. And we will be responsible for them. And for one, I am not willing to assume such responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEEDY) there were 72 ayes and 26 noes.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Morehead, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (S. 417) to provide a government for American Samoa, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. A motion by Mr. Blanton to reconsider the vote whereby the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will inform the Senate of the action of the House.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14562) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were read. The Senate amendments were agreed to.

MEDICINAL LIQUOR

two hours of debate. I ask unanimous consent that that be reduced to 40 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, there ought to be an equal division of the time, whether it be 40 minutes or 2 hours. I am one of those who is going to speak against the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The rule provides, in the general form, that the time shall be divided between the chairman and the ranking minority member.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is for it, the gentleman who introduced the bill [Mr. Celler] is for it, and the chairman of the committee voted for repeal last Monday, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is the wet leader of the House, hence under the rule no dry could demand any time in his own right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will pause a moment, I do not control the time, but I believe it is only fair that those who oppose the bill shall have one-half of the time.

Mr. BLANTON. We who oppose it are entitled to control one-half of the time. With that understanding, I have no objection. But we must have such a distinct understanding.

Mr. DYER. I will yield one-half of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that in the debate on this bill one-half of the time shall be controlled by the chairman of the committee, and one-half by a minority member, and that the time be divided equally between those for and those opposed to the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist that half of the time should be controlled by those opposing the bill, and I insist that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], who is against this proposition, be given the control of the time against it. He is a member of the committee, and he is entitled to it. If that provision for equal control of the time is put into the unanimous-consent request, I shall not object; otherwise I shall object.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to control the time, but further reserving the right to object, I feel this is a matter of tremendous importance, and that its disposition ought not to be attempted in 40 minutes, especially before a mere fraction of a quorum of the House. I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'CONNOR to the resolution: Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "two hours," and insert in lieu thereof the words "40 minutes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the amendment I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. Mr. BLANTON. I offer an amendment to the amendment to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the time against the resolution shall be controlled by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. BLANTON.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: At the end of the bill insert "Provided, That the time in opposition to the resolution be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept. Mr. DYER. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Tarver) there were-ayes 81, noes 7.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. This is an automatic call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees. The Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the amendment to the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 239, nays 65, not voting 122, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 14395, relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquors.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14395, with Mr. Cole of Maryland in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, with the understanding that the bill be incorporated in the RECORD at this point, I shall not object. It would not be printed unless this understanding is had. I want that understood.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be done without objection.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

H. R. 14395

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the third sentence of section 7 of Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the third sentence of section 7 of Title II of the national prohibition act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Subject to regulations, no more liquor shall be prescribed to any person than is necessary to supply his medicinal needs, and no prescription shall be filled more than once."

(b) Section 7 of Title II of such act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semi-colon and the following: "but no physician shall be called upon to file any statement of such ailment in the Department of Justice or the Department of the Treasury or in any other office of the Government, or to keep his records in such a way as to lead to the disclosure of any such ailment, except as he may be lawfully required (1) to make such disclosure in any court or in the course of a hearing under authority of section 9, Title II, of this act, or (2) to make such disclosure to any duly qualified person engaged in the execution or enforcement of this act or any act supplementary hereto"

(2) to make such disclosure to any duly qualified person engaged in the execution or enforcement of this act or any act supplementary hereto."

Sec. 2. Strike out section 8 of Title II of the national prohibition act, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 8. The commissioner shall cause stamps to be printed, the design of which shall be prescribed by regulations in accordance with the provisions of this act, and he shall furnish the same free of cost to physicians holding permits to prescribe. Each such physician shall affix one of said stamps to each such prescription written by him and shall cancel same under regulations to be prescribed in accordance with the provisions of this act. No physician shall prescribe and no pharmacist shall fill any prescription for liquor unless such stamp is affixed thereto. Every person who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, alters, counterfeits, or reuses any stamp made or used under any provision of this act, or with such intent uses, sells, or has in his possession any such forged, altered, or counterfeited stamp, or any plate or die used or which may be used in the manufacture thereof, or who shall make, use, sell, or have in his possession any paper in imitation of the paper used in the manufacture of any stamp required by this act, shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding two years. The effective date of this section 2 shall be not earlier than January 1, 1934."

Sec. 3. Strike out the first paragraph of section 2 of the act.

years. The effective date of this section 2 shall be not earlier than January 1, 1934."

SEC. 3. Strike out the first paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act, approved November 23, 1921," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 2. Only spiritous and vinous liquor may be prescribed for medicinal purposes. All prescriptions for any other liquor shall be void. But this provision shall not be construed to limit the sale of any article the manufacture of which is authorized under section 4, Title II, of the national prohibition act."

Sec. 4. Strike out subdivision (a) of section 5 of the prohibition reorganization act of 1930, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(a) The Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly prescribe all regulations under this act and the national prohibition act relating to permits and prescriptions for liquor for medicinal purposes, and the quantities of spiritous and vinous liquor that may be prescribed for medicinal purposes, and the form of all applications, bonds, permits, records, and reports under such acts: Provided, That all regulations relating to the Bureau of Prohibition in the Department of Justice shall be made by the Attorney General." by the Attorney General."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief in describing the provisions of this bill, which I am sure should commend itself to all Members of the House, regardless of their views on the subject of prohibition. It was indeed hoped that the matter might be considered free from any prohibition controversy. This bill has its genesis in the recommendations of the Wickersham commission. That commission in its report to the President made these suggestions and recommendations:

(a) Doing away with the statutory fixing of the amount [of liquor] which may be prescribed and the number of prescriptions [that the medical profession might issue for the sick].
(b) The abolishing of the requirement of specifying the allment for which the liquor is prescribed upon a blank to go into public files.

(c) Leaving as much as possible to regulations, rather than fixing details by statute. (P. 84 of the Wickersham report.)

When the Wickersham commission report came to the House it was accompanied by a statement of President Hoover, wherein he used the very significant phrases implying that the irritations and resentments of the medical profession in being circumscribed in this way in the Volstead Act should be removed.

The American Medical Association is behind this bill, which, in a word, lifts the burdensome restrictions from the doctors in the prescribing of medical liquor, taking the restrictions out of the statute and leaving them to regulations, the regulations to be promulgated by the Department of Justice through the Attorney General and by the Treasury Department through the Secretary of the Treasury.

In the testimony given before the House committee, Doctor Doran, in charge of prohibition enforcement in the Treasury Department, heartily subscribed to this bill and urged its passage.

Colonel Woodcock, of the Department of Justice, favored the bill and urged its passage, and said it would be an aid to enforcement.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ballantine, has submitted a communication to the committee commending the bill as being in the interest of economy, claiming there would be a saving of something like $110,000 per annum in the elimination of special bond paper prescription blanks and the substituting of small stamps to be affixed by the doctor to his own prescription blank.

The bill is sponsored by the American Medical Association, with a membership of 124,651 doctors; its legislative counsel, Dr. William C. Woodward, in testifying before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, stated that the American Medical Association is a federation of State medical societies. It has a State organization in every State and it is governed by a house of delegates made up of delegates representing the several State organizations. That house of delegates has repeatedly expressed opinions adverse to the limitations that have been placed by the national prohibition act, as amended, on the number of prescriptions a physician may write for his patients and on the quantity of alcoholic liquor that he may prescribe for them. This bill amends the national prohibition act to carry out those recommendations.

Permit me to analyze the bill section by section:

Section 1 (a) amends the national prohibition act so as to remove the present limitation of 1 pint per 10 days on the quantity of spirituous liquor that a doctor may prescribe for his patient and also removes the limitation of the time within which additional prescriptions may be written, but leaves to the administrative authorities the power to promulgate regulations on that subject. The bill, however, limits the amount of intoxicating liquor which a physician may prescribe to "no more liquor * * * than is necessary to supply his (the patient's) medicinal needs" and provides further that "no prescription shall be filled more than once."

Section 1 (b) amends the national prohibition act so as to remove therefrom the requirement that the doctor file with the administrative bureau a statement of the ailment from which his patient is suffering, but does require the doctor to make such disclosure in any court or in the course of administrative hearings and also to make such disclosure to any duly qualified person engaged in the execution or enforcement of the national prohibition act as amended. The national prohibition act, however, remains unchanged relative to the requirement that the physician keep an accurate record of the ailment of his patient and other data concerning the prescription in a book which he must keep in his office and which is subject to the inspection of Federal agents and local peace officers.

Section 2 eliminates from the national prohibition act the provision requiring doctors to write prescriptions for intoxicating liquors on forms provided by the Government, but requires all such prescriptions to have affixed thereto a Government stamp and provides penalties for forgery and misuse of such stamps.

Section 3 amends an "act supplemental to the national prohibition act approved November 23, 1921," so as to remove the limitations of 1 quart per 10 days on the quantity of vinous liquors which may be prescribed by a physician for a patient, the limitation of time within which additional prescriptions for such liquor may be written for such patient, and the limitation of 100 prescriptions per 90 days to a physician. The limitations in this regard are left to regulations by this bill.

Section 4 provides for the promulgation of the regulations heretofore mentioned in connection with sections 1 (a) and 3 of this bill.

These regulations are to be promulgated by the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury jointly.

The bill, it is interesting to note, follows the recommendations of Judge Kenyon, an ardent dry and a member of the Wickersham commission, who in his report, page 122, makes the following comment:

Physicians should be permitted, under reasonable regulations, to prescribe whatever liquor in their judgment is necessary for a patient. If a physician can be trusted to prescribe dangerous drugs, he can be trusted to prescribe liquors as medicines.

Doctor Woodward, legislative counsel, speaking for the American Medical Association before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, called attention to the fact that under the present law a physician can obtain normally not more than 100 blanks for use in prescribing intoxicating liquors during any period of 90 days. The law itself authorizes the issue of a larger number of such blanks but only in the event of extraordinary conditions, and in order to prove those extraordinary conditions the physician is required to make application under oath to the supervisor of permits for the additional blanks, stating why he needs them. If he bases his request for additional blanks on the existence of an epidemic, he is required to support his application by evidence of the local health authorities showing the presence of the epidemic. It can be readily seen, therefore, that in case of an emergency the physician might be without prescription blanks for some time before he could get an additional supply. This bill corrects that situation by leaving the authority to control the quantities which may be prescribed to administrative regulations, which obviously can be made much more flexible than the statute.

Doctor Woodward further testified—page 12 of the hearings—as follows:

The objection on the part of the American Medical Association, and, I think, of physicians generally outside of the association, is to the limitation on the quantity of liquor that may be prescribed for any one patient. You may search in vain for anything in any congressional hearing or in any court case, so far as I know, and nowhere will you find a scintilla of evidence to support the quantitative limits that have been placed on prescribing. They are arbitrary and, so far as I can discover, they are based on guesswork one advantage of regulations lies in the fact that they can be changed from time to time, if necessary, in order to meet conditions that develop. If under regulations it is found that one quantity is too large or too small, it can be altered.

Doctor Doran, Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol, testified before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee (pp. 18 and 19 of the hearings) as follows:

If that were removed from the statute and the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General given authority, as they now have the general authority, to deal by regulation with the question of frequency and quantity with respect to individual patients, it is my opinion that a satisfactory regulation—that is, satisfactory to the American Medical Association and satisfactory from the viewpoint of the Treasury, at least, in the administration of this law—could be drawn and abuses with respect to diversion would not arise. There is ample remedy under the act to curb diversion—the examination of the physician's office records, the authority to cite for revocation, and the inquiry that is possible under the revocation procedure sections is, in my opinion, ample means of curbing the unethical practitioner.

Doctor Doran further testified as follows:

Cases may arise undoubtedly where the 1-pint limitation as to spirituous liquor is onerous, due to the distance from the drug store, outlying rural communities, and with respect to the 1-quart limitation as to wine. In my opinion that might also be made the subject of exception by regulations, where a special showing might be made, the sole purpose being to take care of those occasional, outstanding, and meritorious cases with respect to quantity. But with respect to frequency, I believe that statutory limitations should be withdrawn—frequency as to any one patient.

Both Doctor Doran and Colonel Woodcock stated that the bill now before us would be an aid to enforcement.

Section 2 of this bill was originally proposed as an amendment to H. R. 10524, previously introduced by me. The instant bill is in effect identical with H. R. 10524 except for the addition of what is now section 2 of the instant bill. That provision was submitted to the Treasury Department for comment and recommendations in response to which the aforesaid letter signed by Hon. A. A. Ballantine, Acting | Secretary of the Treasury, was received, which letter reads as follows:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 9, 1933.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Celler: Your communication of December 15, 1932, relative to pending bill (H. R. 10524), regarding prescriptions for medicinal liquors, has been given careful consideration. I note that you are considering the following amendments:

1. Insert as the second section thereof the following:

"Strike out section 8 of Title II of the national prohibition act and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'SEC. 8. The commissioner shall cause stamps to be printed, the design of which shall be prescribed by regulations in accordance with the provisions of this act, and he shall furnish the same free of cost to physicians holding permits to prescribe. Each such physician shall affix one of said stamps to each such prescription written by him and shall cancel same under regulations to be prescribed in accordance with the provisions of this act. No physician shall prescribe and no pharmacist shall fill any prescription for liquor unless such stamp is affixed thereto.

"Every person who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, alters, counterfeits, or reuses any stamp made or used under any provision of this act, or with such intent uses, sells, or has in his possession any such forged, altered, or counterfeited stamp, or any plate or die used or which may be used in the manufacture thereof, or who shall make, use, sell, or have in his possession any stamp required by this act, shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding two years."

2. Renumber section 2 as section 3.

2. Renumber section 2 as section 3.
3. Strike out the old section 3, and insert as section 4:
SEC. 4. Subdivision (a) of section 5 of the prohibition reorganization act of 1930 is amended to read as follows:

action act of 1930 is amended to read as follows:

"The Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly prescribe all regulations under this act and the national prohibition act relating to permits and prescriptions for liquor for medicinal purposes, and the quantities of spirituous and vinous liquor that may be prescribed for medicinal purposes, and the form of all applications, bonds, permits, records under such acts: Provided, That all regulations relating to the Bureau of Prohibition in the Department of Justice shall be made by the Attorney General."

General."

At the hearing held last spring before the subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, the Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol favored the passage of the bill with the amendment set forth in section 4, which you have quoted, which in effect gives the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General joint power in the regulation of prescriptions.

The other amendment, dealing with section 8 of the national prohibition act, proposed by you, provides for the use by the physician of his own prescription blank in prescribing liquor for medicinal purposes. In connection with the use of the physician's own blank, there will be affixed thereto an official stamp which will be printed and issued to the permittee, as provided by regulations. The section also provides for a penalty for the forging or reusing of these stamps.

of these stamps.

These proposed amendments meet with my approval as they seem to be in line with the desires of the American Medical Association and are in accord with the general purpose of the bill. Incidentally, they will result in the saving of approximately $110,000 per annum to the Government when the present supply of prescription blanks is exhausted. There is now on hand a little over one year's supply of the present form, which would indicate that the effective date of the amendment should either be made subject to regulation, or specified in the bill as not earlier than January 1, 1934.

Very sincerely yours,

A. A. BALLANTINE, Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Nobody in the hearings, either before the House or Senate committees, appeared in opposition to the bill. I am reliably informed, although I have no exact knowledge on the subject myself, that the Anti-Saloon League is unopposed to this bill. They have not stated that they favored the bill, but Mr. Dunford, attorney for the Anti-Saloon League, was present, I am informed, at the Senate subcommittee hearings, and voiced no protest whatsoever against the terms of this bill. So we might reasonably infer that the Anti-Saloon League is not opposed to this bill. If I am in error perhaps someone close to that organization might enlighten me. I do not desire to misstate the fact in any respect. I presume nobody in this Chamber has received any communication from any "dry" organization, for example, in opposition to this bill. I thoroughly believe that. If I am mistaken perhaps someone will arise in his or her seat and direct my attention to such a communication of with so little whisky in the country if a limitation is not opposition or protest. Again I do not wish to misstate any fact

This bill leaves the States with utter freedom to act. Nothing therein prevents any State from prohibiting physicians to prescribe. We do not take the right away from the State of Georgia, for example, or Alabama or Kansas or Tennessee or Maine, in their proscriptions against doctors prescribing liquor. Any State can pass any kind of restriction it wills, within its police powers on the subject.

There are some States at the present moment precluding the right of doctors to prescribe medicinal liquor. I believe there are about 13 in number at this time. At the last election the States of Oregon, Washington, Arizona, West Virginia, and Montana joined 24 States earlier permitting the prescription of medicinal liquor by doctors. So I would suggests that the gentleman from those "doctor prescribing" States should follow the growing liberal sentiment in their States in the interest of lifting these irksome restrictions from doctors practicing in those States.

Colorado next June will permit physicians to prescribe. Indiana, I believe, last week voted the right to have dectors prescribe. Michigan and North Dakota changed their constitutions, enabling the legislature, when it wishes, to permit doctors to prescribe. In Idaho and Wyoming I understand there have been referenda favorable to a liberalizing of all laws on the subject of liquor-including medicinal liquor.

I hesitate to take any more of the time of the committee, except to state this: Under the present régime, a doctor must file his stubs and books and records, and the ailment for which the liquor is prescribed, if we go to him and he prescribes liquor. He must file that in a central office where the nature of the disease of the patient is open to the scrutiny and curious gaze of any underling in that department.

It is known that this has given rise to blackmail in several of the offices throughout the country, where irresponsible snoopers, knowing that a person, for example, suffered from syphilis, for which the doctor prescribed whisky, blackmailed the poor unfortunate person thus afflicted.

We do not take away the right to visitation on the part of Government officials, either of the Treasury Department or of the Attorney General's office, to go to the doctor's office and see what the doctor is doing-see if he is abusing his privileges—but the doctor need not under this bill transmit his records to the department, there to be gazed upon by the curious and idle.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BACON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that both Doctor Doran and Mr. Woodcock are in favor of this bill?

Mr. CELLER. Both these gentlemen testified they were in favor of this legislation and that it would be an aid to enforcement.

Mr. BACON. Furthermore, did they state how much it would save a year?

Mr. CELLER. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ballantine, stated it would save $110,000 a year. The Government now prints the prescriptions on very fine paper. on bond paper. This act would enable the doctor to use his own prescription upon which he will affix and cancel appropriately a stamp which the doctor would procure from the Commissioner of Prohibition. These prescriptions cost the Government something like $110,000 a year and this money would be saved by the adoption of this resolution. The prescription blanks are given to the doctors without charge. The stamps would likewise be furnished without charge.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. In writing this bill was any consideration given the matter of limiting the price of a prescription? The gentleman can see where the price will run put on the price. I think such a limitation should be included in the bill.

Mr. CELLER. I do not think it would be fair to the medical profession to put into the bill something as unreasonable as the cost of a prescription. I do not believe the doctor charges for the prescription. The doctor charges for his services. The prescription is incidental.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Under this bill the doctor may charge what he pleases. There is so little whisky in the country that the result will be the price will run up to such an extent that the average person will not be able to buy it.

Mr. CELLER. If there is little whisky now, what is to prevent more whisky from being made or imported? I do not think it would be well to amend the bill as the gentleman suggests, because it has the approval of all the departments in question, of the American Medical Association, involving 160,000 physicians throughout the country. I think any change might imperil the passage of the bill. Let us trust the physician. We intrust him with our lives; we can trust him not to charge unduly for his services.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I shall not object to the bill.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. Section 2 limits the prescription to spiritous and vinous liquors. Why was not malt included?

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman may remember the celebrated case in which the Supreme Court handed down a decision—the Lambert case—that there was no therapeutic value in malt liquor. I do not agree with it. I should like to have had beer included along with vinous and spiritous liquors, but I bowed to the superior judgment of the Ameriman Medical Association. Its house of delegates wrote this bill without the inclusion of beer.

Mr. GARBER. The food value of malt liquor is superior to that of spiritous and vinous liquors.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Does the gentleman know whether this bill in its present form has been approved by either the Department of Justice or the Treasury Department?

Mr. CELLER. Yes, indeed. The bill in its present form was approved by both these departments.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Where is there indication to that Mr. CELLER. There is incorporated in the report a letter from Mr. Ballantine, and the amendments he mentions were incorporated in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Have there also been included in the bill all the rules and regulations recommended by Doctor Doran, the Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol?

Mr. CELLER. Yes, indeed. The changes spoken of by Mr. Ballantine in his letter, which will be found on page 5 of the report, involve and embrace the very changes Doctor Doran advised and of which he said that unless they were in the bill he would not support it. He said that with those changes in the bill he would support it. Those changes have been incorporated in the bill.

The present severe limitations on the quantities of liquor obtainable on prescription and the requirement of records disclosing the patient's ailment discourage many doctors from qualifying to prescribe, and makes it impossible in many instances for doctors who have thus qualified to prescribe sufficient quantities for their patients. Many doctors who have thus qualified nevertheless are loathe to involve themselves in the irritating intricacies of the prescription procedure. Thus patients are often driven to illicit channels for their supply of medicinal liquors. The record shows that only a very small amount of pure legitimate medicinal liquors are diverted to beverage use, while the amount of illicit liquor used for medicinal purposes is believed to be large.

All that this bill does is to permit the physician to treat the diseases of his patients and to promote their physical well-being according to the exercise of his best skill and scientifically trained judgment, subject to such regulations as are found by the administrative officers to be necessary to prevent diversion of medicinal liquors to beverage use.

Finally, this bill, therefore, has the following advantages: First. It will aid in enforcement.

Second. It is in the interest of economy, as it involves a saving of $110,000 per annum in Government printing costs.

Third. It removes the irritations which now harass and cause resentment of an honorable profession.

Fourth. It will encourage the procuring of pure medicinal liquors by the sick from legitimate sources.

Fifth. It will not in any way adversely affect the enforcement of the prohibition on the beverage-liquor traffic.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include the present law paralleled with the changes this bill makes, and certain other excerpts I shall refer to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PALMISANO). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that will make saloons out of the drug stores of the country, and bartenders out of the druggists, and bootleggers out of the doctors. It is the worst measure we have had, worse than the repeal resolution, because the fathers and mothers in the States will stop it, and worse than the beer bill-even worse than that—because this bill legalizes the sale of whisky, by paying unscrupulous doctors $3 for every prescription. And some doctors would issue a thousand prescriptions a day.

The wets right now are running true to form. They have everything greased. This bill was introduced by a great wet leader from New York [Mr. CELLER]. The rule brought in here to make it in order was brought in by another great wet leader from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], the coauthor of the beer bill. It is most fitting that wets should have the honor now of having to preside over these deliberations as our Chairman a former bartender, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano]. He ought to have on a white apron to make the setting complete. And when you pass this bill you ought to put a white apron on every prescription doctor in the United States, for they will all be bartenders, selling whisky prescriptions promiscuously at $3 per pint.

The present law says that a doctor shall not prescribe more than 1 pint of whisky to a patient in 10 days. This bill takes off that limitation. Prescription doctors under this bill can prescribe as many pints of liquor per hour as he can find millionaires and other men with loose money and a terrible thirst to pay $3 a prescription for. This bill simply puts doctors and drug stores in the saloon business.

I have permission to parallel the present law side by side with how it will read when changed by this bill. Here it is:

PRESENT LAW

LAW AS CHANGED BY THIS BILL

Not more than a pint of spiritous liquor to be taken internally shall be prescribed for use by the same person within any period of 10 days, and no prescription shall be filled more

No more liquor shall be prescribed to any person than is necessary to supply his medici-nal needs, and no prescription shall be filled more than once.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the doctors are in favor of this proposed change in the law, for many of them are prescription doctors, and the prescription doctors speak louder than the others. They are turned loose, and they determine "his medicinal needs," and their conscience is their guide, and some of them have not any conscience any more. Naturally the doctors agree that "no prescription shall be filled more than once," because they get $3 for each prescription. And this bill gives the doctors this further "deuces wild with ace in the hole" provision, which you will find on page 2 of this bill, which I quote:

But no physician shall be called upon to file any statement of such ailment in the Department of Justice or the Department of such ailment in the Department of Justice or the Department of the Treasury or in any other office of the Government, or to keep his records in such a way as to lead to the disclosure of any such ailment, except as he may be lawfully required (1) to make such disclosure in any court or in the course of a hearing under authority of section 9, Title II, of this act, or (2) to make such disclosure to any duly qualified person engaged in the execution or enforcement of this act or any act supplementary hereto.

Mr. Chairman, it is simply ridiculous to pass a bill with | the above provisions in it. If there is one thing about the prohibition laws that has disgusted every decent citizen in the dry States, it is what they have personally witnessed respecting whisky prescriptions being issued by prescription doctors at $3 per, to drinking rounders who were never sick in their lives, except when they got too many prescriptions on one day from the saloon-drug stores. The thinking people at home are disgusted with it. And they are going to hold every Congressman responsible who votes for this bill, and thereby takes the bridle off of these prescription doctors and these prescription drug stores and allow them to run wild.

The provision in this bill about doctors putting a whisky stamp on each of their prescriptions is so amusing that it is downright funny. Why these prescription doctors will lick these stamps so fast they will not have time for anything else except to collect their $3 between each lick. Just take a close look at this stamp provision of the bill. It means nothing. Doctors will get these stamps by the thousands. They will lick them faster than they get them. And they will get $3 for each stamp, and will pay nothing for the stamps, and the Government will get nothing from the stamps. It is just a lot of useless words thrown together. Here it is, look at it:

The commissioner shall cause stamps to be printed, the design of which shall be prescribed by regulations in accordance with the provisions of this act, and he shall furnish the same free of cost to physicians holding permits to prescribe. Each such physician shall affix one of said stamps to each such prescription written by him and shall cancel same under regulations to be prescribed in accordance with the provisions of this act. No physician shall prescribe and no pharmacist shall fill any prescription for liquor unless such stamp is affixed thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself five minutes additional.

I see before me one of our distinguished colleagues who comes from the State that sent our extremely wet colleague, Mr. Horr, here from Washington, a splendid colleague who, as an expert, has practiced medicine for 30 years, and who has as many medical diplomas and who has served in as many hospitals as almost any other doctor in the country, our good friend, Doctor SUMMERS of Washington. He has trained in important hospitals in Chicago, New York, London, Berlin, and Vienna. I wonder if he would let me ask him a question. Do you mind, Doctor?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not know whether I can answer it or not.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask Doctor SUMMERS whether or not, after his long experience in hospitals, and after all of his experience as an old-line medical practitioner in this country, one of the old school, a regular doctor, he considers it absolutely necessary to prescribe whisky for anybody.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The medical profession is divided about 50-50 as to the necessity for the use of alcoholic liquors in the treatment of their patients. Personally, I found that the patient was much more anxious to have the prescription, in the earlier days, than the doctor was to prescribe it [laughter], and so, about 25 years ago I quit prescribing it absolutely, and found that something else, aromatic spirits of ammonia or strychnine or something of that kind would serve just as well, or better.

Mr. BLANTON. Then our distinguished expert friend on medicine considers it unnecessary to prescribe whisky?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; it is unnecessary, in my judgment, in the treatment of disease.

Mr. BLANTON. I see another distinguished doctor in the House-

[Cries of SIROVICH!]

Mr. BLANTON. Just a minute. I can not call on any doctor who claims that he can improve on God Almighty's formula for milk. I am speaking of a distinguished physician from wet Pennsylvania, a man who has practiced medicine in the State of Pennsylvania for 20 years, our distinguished colleague from Beaver Falls, Doctor Swick. I wonder if he would let me ask him a question.

Doctor, is whisky prescribed by good doctors to men afflicted with syphilis?

Mr. SWICK. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Not to his knowledge! So what our friend from New York, Mr. Celler, said about that falls flat to the ground and you see that there is nothing in his argument.

I want to say this, Mr. Chairman: I have lots of respect for some of the good bartenders, for some bartenders are good. There are lots of them who are honest. [Laughter.] There are lots of them who do not drink. Oh, they will sell the infamous stuff to other people and let them ruin their souls and go down to degradation and carry their families with them but they do not drink themselves. I know some of them who will pay their debts, I know some of them who are truthful, I know some of them whom you can depend upon; they have some respect for themselves and for their fellow man; but you show me a doctor who, in his office, when he knows it is not necessary, will take $3 from a man to give him a little old prescription for a pint of liquor just because he can get $3 from him and I say he is the most damnable and despicable piece of humanity that I know of.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman approve of that kind of a prescription doctor?

Mr. SCHAFER. No; and if the gentleman will support an amendment which I intend to offer, the doctor can only ring up $3 once in his till for a prescription. Mr. BLANTON. Oh, our New York friends in this bill are fixing it so that every millionaire who carries a flask on his hip, whose money was inherited from forbears whose pastime was clipping coupons, can get all he wants from the doctors by paying them $3 for each prescription, and paying the drug stores $4 per pint, but the poor devil who works and needs all of his money to buy meat and bread for his wife and little children can not get it at all. This is a rich man's bill, to give liquor to the rich and keep it from the poor. I am for prohibition and against all liquor, but God knows I would sooner vote for a bill that would give the same rights and privileges to the poor that you hand over on a silver platter to the rich.

Are you going to support a measure like this? The poor laborer who works on the streets for $4 a day, can he pay a doctor $3 for a prescription? No. Can he pay $4 per pint at a drug store? No. I know doctors in my own State who. to my own knowledge, have written up a bunch of prescriptions, signed their names in blank, and have let them stay in the drug store and people have gone there and bought pint after pint of liquor without the doctor ever seeing them or knowing them; but the doctor got $3 for every prescription, and the drug store got $4 for every pint that was thus sold. It is simply demoralizing. Do you want to turn them loose and let them issue any number of prescriptions they want per day for $3 a prescription and then let the drug stores fill these prescriptions without limit and charge the people $4 a pint? If you do, you do not realize the true sentiment of the people back home and you do not stand for American equality of rights and privileges.

It is claimed that Doctor Doran and Colonel Woodcock and Attorney General Mitchell are all for this bill. If they are, what of it? None of them are real prohibitionists. They are merely administrators of the law as they find it. No real prohibitionist is in favor of letting doctors issue whisky prescriptions at $3 per and drug stores to sell it at $4 per pint without limit. If they are for this bill, they are

I am not in favor of this bill. This bill ought to be defeated just like we defeated the last bill. You ought to strike out the enacting clause of this bill and kill it. And we must have a record vote on it so the people may hold responsible those who vote for it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cole of Maryland). The gentle-man from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can be classed as a fanatic on the liquor question. I voted for the submission of the question of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the States, but here a different question is presented. There are many reasons why this bill should not be enacted into law, and I want to discuss briefly some of those reasons which, to my mind, demand the defeat of this bill.

Under the law as it now stands the amount of whisky that may be prescribed for medicinal purposes is limited by law. If this bill is enacted, that limitation is removed and destroyed entirely.

The next proposition is that under the present law any physician—and I have as much respect for the medical profession as any man; they are just as honorable as any profession in our land to-day; I am not opposed to the bill because of any prejudice against the medical profession—is limited to 100 prescriptions in 90 days. In this bill that limitation is destroyed.

The next proposition is that under the present law the quality of medicinal liquor is defined, and under this bill all limitations are destroyed and anything may be prescribed. In other words, any liquor that comes under the definition of spirituous and vinous liquors may be prescribed.

When you enact this law you are taking the bridle off entirely; you are destroying all limitations and putting it in the hands of unscrupulous men, if there be any, in the medical profession. I am willing to leave the question to you as to whether or not it would be abused. You are taking off the limit entirely and allowing liquor in unlimited quantities.

I want to call your attention to the report on page 7:

The Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly prescribe all regulations under this act and the national prohibition act relating to permits and prescriptions for liquor for medicinal purposes, and the quantities of spirituous and vinous liquor that may be prescribed for medicinal purposes, and the form of all applications, bonds, permits, records, and reports under such acts: Provided, That all regulations relating to the Bureau of Prohibition in the Department of Justice shall be made by the Attorney General.

The question is at this time, as long as the eighteenth amendment exists and is a part of our basic law, the Constitution, and the Volstead law remains on the statute books, are we going to delegate the enforcement of that law to any set of men in this country? Are we going to take the bridle off? Let us wait. We submitted the question to the people. Let us not break the law down; let us not create more disrespect for the laws of our country than now exists.

The question will be presented to the people. If that law is repealed there will be ample time to make regulations, ample time to make these changes.

I have not heard, and I doubt whether any man has ever heard, of any person dying from the want of liquor to be prescribed. But that is neither here nor there. The question I am particularly impressed with is that by the enactment of this bill you remove every safeguard that exists under the present law. [Applause.]

You are giving to every physician in this country the right to prescribe intoxicating liquor to any person who can pay for the prescription in any quantity and at any time. The physician is the sole judge. Is it fair and proper to place this unlimited power in the hands of all physicians? Are there not some who will abuse it? Is it not the entering wedge for the repudiation of the present laws and the Constitution? To say that not all physicians will abuse the right is no answer. The question is, Will we not be giving this power to some of that great class who will abuse the power? No one has to make any report to anyone. This bill simply in its last analysis gives the power to a class of men to nullify our Constitution and our statutes. I appeal to you in the name of law and order to not pass this bill. Let the people act on the question that has been submitted. If the people in the manner as pointed out by our law and Constitution repeal the eighteenth amendment, then the necessary changes can be made in the statutes; but this House should not do by indirection what it can not do directly, and that is what will be done if you pass this bill.

I can not understand how any man can support this bill as long as our Constitution and the Volstead law remains unchanged by the people. I hope you will not act without reason and that you will not be a party to the passage of this bill and thus lend your aid to the undermining of the Constitution and the nullification of the same. One provision of that great document should be as sacred as any other, and, as for me, I shall not lend my aid to any movement or bill that tends toward nullification by placing the power in the hands of any set of men, no matter how honorable they or their profession may be, to set aside the law and make the question of obtaining liquor one of conscience and judgment of the medical profession. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a request for recognition of some one on this side. Forty minutes' debate have been allotted. Already 25 minutes of the time has been consumed, 10 by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], 10 by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler], and 5 by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Miller].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that by the action of the House the time was divided, 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York and 20 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DYER. I want to say in just half a minute that it is most unfair for one side of the House to consume all of the time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I only want one or two minutes. Personally, I do not believe any further time is desired in general debate upon this bill, and, so far as I know, on this side we are ready to vote. I ask the gentleman to facilitate the vote. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill and shall vote against the bill, but on behalf of the Maryland delegation I rise to say that we resent the reflection upon the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano] made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. [Applause.] The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano] has risen over great obstacles to a place of distinction and great honor, and the Maryland delegation is proud that he is one of it. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself half a minute. Personally I am a good friend of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano]. He knows that in the reference I made there was nothing personal and that I would not in any way reflect upon his standing here. We fraternize together and work together, and we get along splendidly, even though I am a fundamental dry and he is a fundamental wet. He is not ashamed of having been a bartender, but frequently mentions it himself, hence there was no impropriety or violation of friendship for me to mention that fact. To show that I am a good sport I yield two minutes of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano] so that he may have the floor and speak in his own behalf.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I had asked to have two minutes from the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler] so that I might tell the Members of my position. Yes; I have been a bartender and I never have denied it. [Applause.] I command the respect of every man, woman, and child in my district; and I say to you that my district, while I am of Italian birth, is not Italian in make-up at all. There are more Germans, Irish, Poles, Armenians, and colored people in my district than there are Italians. It is due to the respect that they have for me that I am a Member of this House. I have never denied that I was a bartender, and I want to say to you, my friends, that that is one of the reasons I am against prohibition. When I was a bartender I saw the evils and the good and I see the evils and the good to-day. Before prohibition I was threatenend with being killed because I would not sell a man a glass of beer who was under the influence of liquor. There was a young man 25 years of age in my family that was unable to obtain a glass of beer because of his youthful appearance. To-day young men, boys, and girls are different from what they used to be, and it is disgraceful to see them in the dance halls with bottles of liquor on their person. Young girls in the days before prohibition would not associate with a man who had a bottle of liquor. [Applause.] To-day unless you have a bottle of liquor they will not tolerate you. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Boland].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask Mr. Blanron's Exhibit B, my colleague from Pennsylvania, Doctor Swick, if he ever knew of doctors prescribing liquor for miners' asthma?

Mr. SWICK. Yes; I have. They have done that.

Mr. BOLAND. There is no question about it. At least I have brought out that fact. The question that seemed to worry me more than anything else in regard to this bill is how they arrived at the conclusion that 1 pint of liquor every 10 days for a patient was the proper prescription, and by what evidence they limited it to 100 prescriptions in 90 days. I believe it must have been guesswork on the part of laymen to tell doctors what was necessary for a patient, and I believe the law was entirely wrong in trying to conduct the business of the medical profession. I have a statement here from Judge Kenyon, who was a member of the Wickersham commission, an ardent dry, and he says:

Some of the physicians who have appeared before us made no Some of the physicians who have appeared before us made no objection to the restrictions upon physicians in the way of liquors as medicines. They differ as to the necessity for such use, but the majority of them resent these restrictions as to the maximum amount of alcohol that may be permitted to a patient within a given period, placed upon them by laymen who have no knowledge of the needs thereof, as do they, as a reflection on the medical profession. Physicians should be permitted under reasonable regulations to prescribe whatever liquor in their judgment is necessary for a patient. If a physician can be trusted to prescribe dangerous drugs, he can be trusted to prescribe liquors as medicine. medicine.

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. My time has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Swick].

Mr. SWICK. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Boland] about this report that he read, and suggest to him that the judge there mentions specifically "under reasonable regulations." Just what regulations are there under this particular bill?

Mr. BOLAND. The Attorney General and the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise principally for information. If there is to be any regulation it surely comes under section 8 of this bill. This bill, as a whole, if it passes and is signed by the President, becomes law at once, but the one regulatory section of it is not to become effective until January 1, 1934, within which time all the stamp provisions and the penalty for violation are in abeyance, and the door is wide open to wholesale abuses. Why was the bill left in such shape?

Mr. CELLER. The effective date of that particular provision was January 1, 1934, because they have supplies of prescription blanks now on hand, which would last until that date. That is, throughout the calendar year 1933, after which that type of prescription will be discarded and the doctor may use his own prescription with a stamp, which he must cancel, the stamp to be furnished by the Government.

Mr. BEEDY. And the present prescription requires a stamp?

Mr. CELLER. The present supply consists of prescriptions issued in triplicate. They are of bond paper of a certain weight and fineness, so as to prevent counterfeiting.

Mr. BEEDY. That form of prescription will not be effective under this law?

Mr. CELLER. That will be effective until the supply is exhausted, which will be January 1, 1935.

Mr. BLANTON. But there will not be any limitation on the number of prescriptions.

Mr. CELLER. Oh, yes; there will.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the third sentence of section 7 of Title II of the national prohibition act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Subject to regulations, no more liquor shall be prescribed to any person than is necessary to supply his medicinal needs, and no prescription shall be filled more than once once."

(b) Section 7 of Title II of such act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "but no physician shall be called upon to file any statement of such aliment in the Department of Justice or the Department of the Treasury or in any other office of the Government, or to keep his records in such a way as to lead to the disclosure of any such ailment, except as he may be lawfully required (1) to make such disclosure in any court or in the course of a hearing under sutherity of section 9. Title II. or in the course of a hearing under authority of section 9. Title III, of this act, or (2) to make such disclosure to any duly qualified person engaged in the execution or enforcement of this act or any act supplementary hereto."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schaffer: On page 1, line 7, after ne word "needs," strike out the balance of line 7 and all of the word

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, it is a very strange situation in which we find ourselves, with reference to the disposition of the time allotted for general debate on this bill. The Republican gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer] takes about three minutes of time, out of order, to bitterly denounce the fact that the Republican Members of the House did not have time yielded to them, and at the same time indicating that he did not want any time, and precluded Members who had bona fide amendments from having an opportunity to discuss those amendments as promised by the distinguished Democrat who had the disposition of the time for those in favor of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman, I am sure, does not want the impression to go that he requested any time of me. He said he had an amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. No. I had requested time from the distinguished Democrat of this House, Mr. Celler, who was the only Member who had time to allot under the general debate to those favoring the bill. However, the Republican gentleman from Missouri took up about two or three minutes of the time of this House, out of order, raising objections to the fact that Republicans were not yielded time, and in fact I, as a Republican, was promised time, and was precluded from getting that time by reason of the action of my Republican colleague, who obtained the time, which he used to state that he did not desire time. Now, so much for that.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, he did not say anything like that to me.

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, the gentleman is not the Mussolini of this House that he claims to be or intends to be under his procedure in disposing of the time for general debate. The gentleman from New York and not the gentleman from Missouri had charge of the time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a bona fide amendment. My opposition to this bill in its present form is not that it goes too far, as indicated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but that it does not go far enough. For instance, if a poor man with a case of miner's asthma or chronic bronchitis, as was called to the attention of the House by the distinguished Member on the other side, has to obtain medicinal liquor to keep from going into the care of an undertaker, if he consumes 1 pint he must go to his physician and pay a tribute of three or four or five dollars for a prescription for the second, and two or three or four dollars more for a prescription for the third pint, and so forth.

When we obtain a prescription from a physician for cough medicine to cure such ills as a cold, it is not necessary to obtain a new prescription and pay tribute to the physician each time the bottle of cough medicine has been consumed in order to get another. So I say this amendment is fair and is reasonable. If you want to take care of the poor, sick, common man who needs medicinal liquor and who does not have the funds to go back and pay toll to the doctor for a new prescription two or three or four or five times or more in order to keep from going into the hands of the undertaker, you should vote for this amendment. I ask that you Members think of the poor sick patients and vote for my amendment and give them some relief and not be in a position of giving the medical profession a great monopoly at the expense of the poor and unfortunate. The objection to my amendment, as apparently indicated by the distinguished Republican leader, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Dyer], to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Celler) there were—ayes 23, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the Chairman to say that the amendment was adopted, and after the Chairman had made that announcement the gentleman from New York called for a division.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I may say the gentleman from New York did not rise to his feet when he asked for the division. I admit he should have risen to his feet.

Mr. SNELL. The Chair can not recognize a man sitting in his seat.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand, but the gentleman asked the Chair for a division.

Mr. SNELL. I did not understand him to ask for it until the Chairman had announced the outcome of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler] was seeking recognition at the time the Chair was making the announcement of the vote.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to demand a division after the Chair had made the announcement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. Strike out the first paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act, approved November 23, 1921," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

following:

"Sec. 2. Only spiritous and vinous liquor may be prescribed for medicinal purposes. All prescriptions for any other liquor shall be void. But this provision shall not be construed to limit the sale of any article the manufacture of which is authorized under section 4, Title II, of the national prohibition act."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schafer: Page 3, line 14, after the work "spiritous," strike out the word "and" and insert a comma in lieu thereof, and after the word "vinous," in line 14, insert "and malt."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the section.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. I make the point of order that we may get a decision.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again state his point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The point of order is in line with a distinction that was very clearly drawn some time ago when another bill was before the House for consideration. The gentleman is undertaking, as I understand it, to incorporate with reference to provisions affecting spiritous liquors an entirely different type and kind of liquor, to wit, a malt liquor.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman was in the chair at the time the so-called beer bill was before the House. I introduced an amendment extending it to vinous liquors, and the gentleman properly held that the bill was limited to one kind of liquor and that I could not amend it by adding another.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am undertaking to be consistent.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is not what we have here.

Mr. SNELL. There are two kinds of liquor mentioned in this bill. The gentleman from New York seeks to add a third.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In the bill at the present time are spiritous and vinous liquors.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly astounded to find the Democratic leader, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] making a point of order against my amendment which would permit physicians to prescribe for medicinal purposes beer with an alcoholic content of about 4 per cent. Still the Democrats talk about bringing good beer back to the people! They do not even want a sick person to have a good glass of beer to aid in restoring his health.

The provision affected by this amendment permits physicians to prescribe intoxicating distilled liquors with an unlimited alcoholic content, and naturally fermented wine liquors with an alcoholic content up to 18 and 22 per cent. Yet this great Democratic leader, and the Democratic majority of the great committee reporting this bill want to deny a physician the right to prescribe a wholesome, beneficial, health-restoring glass of 4 per cent beer for medicinal purposes. A vast majority of the Members of this House have talked for beer. Now you have a chance to vote as you have talked.

It has been said that this amendment should not be incorporated because the Anti-Saloon League has not indicated that it should be. Rather strange that Members of the wet group of this House should look for the approval of the Anti-Saloon League before voting for this good amendment.

Oh, do not say it will be taken care of in the other body. Now is the time for all good Democrats to come to the aid of their party. [Laughter and applause.] Immediately, my dear friends, as promised in your platform, not a year or 2 years or 3 years or 5 years in the future, or perhaps when Noah may come back and build another ark.

I believe that my distinguished Republican colleague from that great city of St. Louis, of Anheuser-Busch fame, will rise up when the division and roll call is called for on this amendment and vote to permit physicians legally to prescribe a bottle or two or more of Anheuser-Busch 4 per cent beer to help restore the health of sick patients in St. Louis and other parts of the Nation.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will provide that it shall not come from Milwaukee but from St. Louis, it will be better.

Mr. SCHAFER. When this amendment becomes law I would suggest that the gentleman have his physician prescribe Milwaukee beer once in a while, for if he is sick he will find Milwaukee beer will hasten his recovery better than some others.

Mr. Speaker, if it is proper to permit a physician to prescribe intoxicating distilled liquors with an unlimited alcoholic content, if it is proper to permit physicians to prescribe naturally fermented wines with an alcoholic content of 18 to 22 per cent, certainly it is reasonable and proper to permit them to prescribe for sick patients a health-giving tonic, a body builder, a mind builder, a health restoring malt product with an alcoholic content of 4 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Does not the gentleman think a prescription costing $3 is a pretty heavy charge for a 10-cent bottle of beer?

Mr. SCHAFER. My amendment does not limit the prescription to one bottle of beer any more than the bill as reported limits the prescription to a bottle of distilled spirits or wine.

If the gentleman's illness was not so severe the doctor might prescribe a few bottles. If it was more serious and extended over a period of times, the doctor might find it necessary to prescribe a case or several cases.

Of course, medical judgment, the condition of the patient, the nature of the illness, and so forth would control.

There is no justification for opposing this amendment. I do not see why every wet and every dry who supports the bill can not support this amendment. This bill is not sacred, as some of the so-called wets claim it is when opposing any amendment to it. If we could only obtain a roll call, under the parliamentary procedure, the amendment would be adopted by an overwhelming vote. There is not a wet or a dry that could go before the people and say it is O. K. for a physician to prescribe intoxicating distilled liquor of any alcoholic content or 18 per cent intoxicating wine, but that it is wrong to prescribe beer with an alcoholic content of 4 per cent for medicinal purposes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, were I to consult my own wishes in this matter, I would gladly vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, but, as I said a moment ago, this bill has been very carefully and skillfully drawn by the American Medical Association, the highest medical authority in this country, whose State associations are nationwide. I fear if we add malt liquors to this bill, we may incur the opposition of the American Medical Association, particularly of its house of delegates that has heartily subscribed to the bill and has worked faithfully and ardently for it. I feel it might imperil its passage if we loaded it down with this amendment. Furthermore, as I said a moment ago, there has been no protest filed on the part of the Anti-Saloon League to this bill, and adding malt liquor might incur such a protest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not more generally accepted among the medical profession that malt liquor or beer has better medicinal qualities than alcoholic whisky?

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman that there is a goodly portion of the doctors who think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, is not this a reasonable amendment, because all doctors agree that beer has a sedative effect in the treatment of the sick.

Mr. CELLER. There is no doubt about it so far as I am personally concerned. So far as my limited medical knowledge goes, I agree with the gentleman about the efficacy of this particular amendment. But I dare not trust myself. I am out of my depth on medical matters. I rather rely upon the recommendations of the American Medical Association. I ask that the amendment be not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Celler) there were—ayes 89, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton: On page 3, line 19, after the word "act," insert the following proviso: "Provided, That physicians shall not charge a poor man for liquor prescriptions."

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. CELLER rose.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill or to the section of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on that. Surely the gentleman from New York is in favor of the poor man getting prescriptions for liquor the same as the rich man.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman from Texas knows that that is not the question involved in his amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of giving the poor devils in the gentleman's district a chance. I know that the gentleman has a sympathetic heart for the poor man; and if he would allow my amendment to be passed, it would be possible for the poor man to get a prescription once in a while.

I am against this bill in its entirety, because it is opening wide the floodgates of liquor and making it possible for the idle rich, with more money than brains, to get all the liquor they want, simply by paying an unscrupulous doctor $3 each for a batch of prescriptions every day, and then paying the druggist $4 and $5 a pint for all they want. But the poor man, who is not able to pay the doctor $3 for his prescription, will not be able to get any liquor at all. Of course, he will be better off without it. But he should have equal rights with the rich, so far as Congress-made laws are concerned; and if my amendment is passed, he will be able to get his prescriptions without paying $3 each for them. I hope the point of order will be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I only want to take a moment of the time of the House. I can not let go unchallenged the statement of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano] relating to the young people of this country.

If there is anything that I resent it is the unwarranted statement that is made time and again that all the young people of the country are drinking. I maintain they are still the cleanest and the brightest and the best young people that have ever come from the homes of this country, at any time, in any age. [Applause.]

But I want to call attention to this fact: Every system of control of the liquor traffic, whether it be by prohibition, State control, or control of the saloon, or whatever it be, is prohibition to the young people; and if they resent prohibition, they will resent the prohibition that will not let them buy in saloons. They will resent the prohibition that will not let them buy under State control, and I think it is about time that we should be fair in this matter, because every system is a system of prohibition to the young people. It is said they resent Federal prohibition. They could not buy in a saloon, they could not buy in a dispensary; and if they get liquor at all, they will have to get it from a bootlegger. It is about time we faced the truth. On behalf of the young people, I resent the unwarranted statements that most of our young people are drinking. Somebody ought to call attention to the fact that every method of control in civilized society is prohibition to minors. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Ohio in his remarks implied that I referred to all the young people of the country. What I contended in my remarks was that before prohibition no young people could get a drink in a legalized saloon, but, of course, there may have been some exceptions. The trouble is the gentleman from Ohio is not acquainted with the conditions prior to prohibition.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Let me say to the gentleman that for four years I was prosecuting attorney, immediately before I came here 14 years ago, and I do know conditions before prohibition. There were violations of the liquor laws then, and, in my judgment, conditions in this respect were worse then than now.

Mr. PALMISANO. That was in the great State of Ohio, where the Anti-Saloon League came from. In Maryland we received a representative of the Anti-Saloon League who came from Ohio—the gentleman who is prosecuting the bankers on the other side for taking money from the Anti-Saloon League and making no proper return thereon. That is what we get from Ohio; and later on we received another gentleman from Ohio who is now in the State of Maryland. That is the class of people that the gentleman from Ohio is talking about.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 1, after the word "spiritous," insert a comma and the word "malt."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cole of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14395, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed copy is not here, and the vote will go until morning.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14458) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Smoot, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Hale, Mr. Glass, and Mr. Copeland to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 466. An act for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co. The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 583. Joint resolution to provide for a change of site of the Federal building to be constructed at Binghamton, N. Y.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and the committee amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

UNITED STATES-GEORGIA BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read:

In the Senate of the United States.

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate, Senate Joint Resolution 223, entitled "Joint resolution establishing the United States-Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes," with accompanying papers.

LEASE OF POST-OFFICE GARAGE IN BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 88) having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2 and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "under the lease from March 23, 1931, but not in excess of"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

A brief summary of the amendments inserted by the House in S. 88 "A bill to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof," and the action taken thereon by the House and Senate conferees is as follows:

Amendment No. 1 changed the word "directed" to "authorized," so that the bill authorized the Postmaster General to readjust the rental and purchase options in the existing lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass. The House conferees receded from this amendment and the word "directed" has been replaced.

Amendment No. 2 merely inserted "the" before "purchase options," and the Senate conferees agreed to this amendment.

The Senate bill provided for an increase in annual rental of $7,500 from the date of the lease. Amendment No. 3 modified this provision by making it effective only from the date of the enactment of this act, and provided that the additional rental should not exceed $7,500 a year. The House and Senate conferees have amended this amendment by making the readjustment retroactive to March 23, 1931, which is two years after the date of the lease.

Amendment No. 4 limited the increase in the purchase options to not in excess of $75,000, the Senate bill having read "increasing the purchase options $75,000." This amendment was agreed to by the Senate conferees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, can the Speaker inform the House what the program will be to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is rather difficult. There are many conference reports that will come up and the Chair is going to recognize gentlemen to take up conference reports first.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Chair expect the deficiency bill to be taken up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It was reported out to-day, and it is expected that will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that the conference report as far as possible ought to be taken up earlier in the day when many Members are present, and that we should not wait until late in the evening.

The SPEAKER. It is the purpose of the Chair to take up conference reports to bring to a conclusion matters in difference between the House and the Senate. Three or four rules have been reported from the Committee on Rules. There are House bills on the Speaker's desk with Senate amendments, and it is the purpose of the Chair to recognize gentlemen who desire to concur in those Senate amendments.

Mr. SNELL. I am in entire accord with the position of the Speaker that the differences between the two Houses should be adjusted. I think we should be given notice of what bills they are, so that we may look them up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the Chair made reference to several rules. I think in the temporary absence of the majority leader the Chair will remember that it is quite probable that we will ask to call up, as one of the first things to-morrow, a rule respecting a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will that be brought up prior to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The majority leader is not present at the moment and I could not say definitely, but I wanted the gentleman from New York to have reasonable notice of that. It is a matter in which the gentleman from Michigan is interested.

The SPEAKER. It seems to be an emergency matter.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is. The first thing to-morrow will be the vote on the medicinal liquor bill.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

SUSPENSIONS

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the rule, six days during which suspensions are in order before the end of a session will begin to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary clerk advises the Chair that to-morrow is the first of the six suspension days.

REDEMPTION OF FARM MORTGAGES

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, we have been in this session of Congress now for nearly three months, and we have made very little progress toward relieving some of the problems that should have been dealt with in this Congress.

On June 16, 1932, I introduced a bill, H. R. 12674, to provide for the relief of farmers by making loans on lands now used for agricultural purposes, and for the purpose of redeeming lands on now existing mortgages, judgment liens, and tax mortgages.

The first section of that bill reads as follows:

That for the purpose of aiding farmers in any State who own lands in fee, which are used for agricultural purposes, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to loan out of the revolving fund hereinafter provided for to any farmer, making application for same, an amount sufficient to redeem the mortgage indebtedness against his lands together with any interest, taxes, or judgments that may be due against said lands, if said agricultural lands are on appraisement, as hereinafter provided for, found to be of a greater value than said mortgage indebtedness and any other liens, if any, against said lands.

We must have a loan sufficient to take care of the entire mortgage indebtedness of agricultural lands at a low rate of interest and for a long period of time. It is a matter of impossibility now for a farmer to redeem the mortgage on his land with the price of agricultural products as low as they now are. These mortgages were made in prosperous times when cotton was worth 20 cents per pound and other agricultural products about in equal proportion in price. Now they have declined in price at least 60 per cent, and it becomes a matter of impossibility for the farmer to support his family, pay his taxes, and attempt to redeem farm mortgages.

Section 2 of that bill provides as follows:

Loans shall be made only to the owners of agricultural lands, when the Secretary of the Interior has satisfied himself by examination or by appraisal of the property, that it is of a greater value than the outstanding indebtedness against it.

This section provides that an appraisal of the property shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior and the appraisal must show that the land that is mortgaged is of greater value than the mortgage indebtedness against it. With this safety provision in the law the Government could not possibly lose anything on these loans. But on the other hand, would soon have an increased income tax.

As long as the farmer is depressed as he now is, and has no purchasing power, it practically stagnates every other class of business. You can not have railroads and public works continually going on and have the entire agricultural world bankrupt and continue to go on.

Section 3 of the bill provides as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior shall make or cause to be made an appraisement of the lands of each person making application for a loan, and no loan may be made until the Secretary is satisfied that the land is of a greater value than the loan asked for and that said loan will be paid back at maturity.

This is a safety provision by the Government and will give the department accurate information of the value of farm lands on which a loan is asked. With this provision in the bill no abuses would arise from the lack of information as to the correct valuation.

Section 4 of this bill provides as follows:

Loans shall be made for a period of not exceeding 10 years, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior in each case, which shall bear interest at the rate of not exceeding 3 per cent per annum and payable annually and in 10 equal installments: Provided, however, that the borrower shall have the privilege of paying back all or any part of said loan after one year.

You will note this section provides for a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum and that the indebtedness be divided into 10 equal payments. I would be very glad to see this rate of interest lower than 3 per cent, and under this bill it could be placed at 1½ per cent if the Government could finance it with that amount of interest.

You will note that this section further provides that the borrower shall have the privilege of paying back all or any part of said loan after one year.

Section 5 of the bill reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior to secure said loans shall take a first mortgage on said property and pay off all indebtedness against said lands, and said first mortgage is hereby declared to be sufficient security and no other security shall be required.

Under this bill when the appraisal is made and the land found to be of greater value than the indebtedness against it, then the Interior Department would take up all the mortgage indebtedness, judgment liens, and foreclosures for taxes and then amortize that throughout a period of 10 years, and the Government would take the first lien for its security on the lands. It is readily seen from this provision that as soon as a payment was made the Government's security becomes better each year. When the land was one-half paid out the Government would have double the security that it had in the beginning.

Section 6 of the bill reads as follows:

"Agricultural lands," as used in this act, is land actually or partly in cultivation, or lands that are best suited for agricultural purposes.

This section broadens the act from strictly agricultural lands to lands that are partly agricultural and partly growing timber and which are suited for agricultural purposes. For instance, a man might have 100 acres of land with 75 acres in cultivation, and 25 acres would be in timber. This would not prevent him from borrowing to cover the entire amount of indebtedness on the entire tract.

Section 7 of the bill simply provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall make all rules and regulations for carrying into effect the purposes of the act.

Section 8 of the bill is the most important part of the bill, as it provides a method of financing these loans, and that has always been the question that has prevailed up to this date, the refinancing of these mortgage loans.

Section 8 reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue United States notes to the extent required to make the loans herein authorized. Such notes shall be legal tender for both public and private debts and printed in the same size and the same denominations and of the same form as Treasury notes, omitting the reference to any Federal reserve bank. He shall place said notes in the Federal reserve banks, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior, to be used for the purposes of this act. He shall issue a like amount of bonds bearing 3 per cent interest, payable annually, with coupons attached, and such bonds shall be due and payable in 10 years from the date of issue, subject to the right of redemption after 5 years. These bonds shall be deposited in the Federal reserve banks as the agents of the United States, in approximate proportion to the current assets at the date of the passage of this act, and the Federal Reserve Board, by resolution in writing, may direct the sale to the public of such portion of said bonds as it may from time to time desire. Such currency received for such bonds shall be exchanged for the notes hereby authorized to be issued, and they shall be returned to the Secretary of the Treasury for cancellation.

The Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. Congress, under this grant of power given it by the Constitution, several years ago provided for the issuing of money through the Federal reserve system. That act provides that before money is coined and put into circulation there shall remain in the Treasury a 40 per cent gold reserve or eligible paper. Section 8 of this bill provides for the latter part of that act by using eligible paper.

No one can say that the paper of the Government placed in the reserve would not be eligible. Under this plan the bonds would not be sold, but would remain on deposit as eligible security for the issuing of money on the first mortgage retained on the land, and all the bonds deposited to carry out the issuing of this much money. The Government would not pay any interest on these bonds while they remained on deposit, and within a 10-year period of time they would be paid out entirely by the farmers and the Government would not lose one penny of money in the transaction.

The Government has helped everybody else in the way of big business except agriculture. The railroads, the banks, trust companies, building and loans, and every other corporate institution, but the farmer up to this date has had no permanent legislation for relief.

Section 9 of the bill simply repeals all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act.

In order to further carry out my idea of the relief that should be given agriculture, on February 18 I introduced a bill which is H. R. 14704, which provides for a moratorium of five years on all mortgages held by Federal land banks of the United States and interest thereon.

Some of the greatest distress that the farmer is now having to go through with is being pressed on mortgages held by the Federal farm loan banks. There is no necessity in the world for this, because if the money was paid in now it would be reloaned on lands, and if the mortgage lien is good, there is no reason why a foreclosure should be had.

This bill contains only three sections, but it hits the spot and would give immediate relief to that class of farmers who are now needing it so badly.

Section 1 of the bill reads as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act a moratorium of both principal and interest is hereby declared for a period of five years on all mortgages held by the Federal land banks of the United States on agricultural lands.

This period of time would enable them to pay the mortgage and interest off without a loss of agricultural land.

Section 2 of the bill provides that the payment of the principal or interest of the mortgage may be made during this moratorium at the option of the mortgagor, and section 3 simply repeals all laws in conflict with it.

Under the present tendency of foreclosure of mortgages by Federal land banks, by insurance companies, and by other large moneyed interest, our best farm lands will soon be in the hands of corporations, and we will have corporation farming with farmers renting land from them.

This system is tending toward the English landlord system, which was so detested in its day.

Let us be wise enough in the coming session of Congress, called by our new President, to enact this legislation and give our agricultural people a chance to live.

REORGANIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the reorganization of Government departments appears to be decidedly more alluring as a campaign slogan than as a practical means of reducing expenditures. As a vote-getter it is something to be conjured with, but as a stark reality it has all the terrors of Banquo's ghost. If any doubt was still entertained upon the subject by any of its votaries, they must have been effectively disillusioned by the action of the majority in the House of Representatives on January 19, last, when it turned down the entire Hoover program for grouping, coordinating, and consolidating executive and administrative agencies of the Government according to major purpose as set out in the President's message of December 9, 1932.

HOOVER PLAN KILLED

Ever since Herbert Hoover entered the Cabinet some 12 years ago, he has been an advocate of assembling and recasting Government functions according to "major purpose." His carefully matured plan, which had been gradually crystallizing for a decade, went by the boards without the courtesy of any real consideration by the Congress. No one claimed perfection for the President's plan, but that it had much of solid merit does not admit of doubt. His scheme of reorganization did not differ materially on principle from that indorsed by every committee, official and otherwise, that has studied the problem in the last 25 years, but a caucus had decreed its doom upon considerations quite apart from its merits or demerits.

REORGANIZATION IN RETROSPECT

Before proceeding to discuss the Executive orders with their far-reaching transformation of the existing set-up of the administrative and executive structure of the Government, it might be well to look at the problem in retrospect with a view to appraising more accurately the soundness and validity of the President's proposals.

That there has been need of a general overhauling and reorganization of the vast Government machine has been apparent for at least a quarter of a century. One bureau after another has been tacked on here or there from time to time with little regard to fitting it into its appropriate place. No rule or principle seems to have developed in Congress to guide it in this respect. As illustrative of this utter lack of a fixed principle in the grouping of activities, the placing of the Public Health Service, the Supervising Architect—a great construction agency, and the Bureau of Prohibition Enforcement in the Treasury Department may be cited. Clearly, none of these have any relation to the Treasury, which was originally created as a purely fiscal agency. Other incongruities equally absurd from the standpoint of a practical business administration might be enumerated, but little is to be gained by mere recital.

An historical study of how some of the bureaus came to be placed as they are would be illuminating as showing how little heed has been paid to principles of sound organization from the standpoint of securing the most economical and effective administration. As things are, it takes an expert indeed to know to what source to go when in search of specific information or aid that some Government bureau is prepared to give.

Particular activities or functions have been shunted to departments in defiance of common sense because their sponsors disliked the head of the department into whose organization they would most logically fit; others have become stepchildren in unhappy surroundings because the department head was a pet of some Senator or Representative; and still others were just hung on or chucked in with no thought of scientific placement, or perchance because quarters could not readily be made available in the establishment where they naturally belonged.

Once placed they have for the most part remained, no matter how far removed they may be from the major purpose of the department in which they find themselves. With astonishing regularity and a persistence that would be worthy of the highest praise in a good cause, division chiefs and department heads fight like wildcats to retain what they have. This explains more than anything else the tremendous difficulty that attends every effort at reorganization. Then, too, the moment a change is suggested the personnel affected become alarmed and start a backfire that is too often decisive of the issue. Standpatism is the natural state of the group, and anything that is apt to disturb long-established routine or make necessary new alignments is resisted to the bitter end.

EXECUTIVE EFFORTS AT BEORGANIZATION

Cleveland and Roosevelt made feints now and then at reorganization, but it remained for William Howard Taft to make a determined fight for reorganizing the Government structure with a view to putting it on a sound administrative basis. His messages to Congress are replete with suggestions and plans. He secured large appropriations from Congress and created a commission that went exhaustively into the subject, but in the end his really heroic effort came to naught because of the do-nothing policy, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, of the inertia of Congress.

Taft regarded the proper grouping of Government services as "a matter of fundamental importance."

It is only after a satisfactory solution of this problem-

Said he in his message to Congress on January 17, 1912-that many important measures of reform become possible. Only by grouping services according to their character can substantial progress be made in eliminating duplication of work and plant and proper working relations be established between services engaged in similar activities. Until the head of a department is called upon to deal exclusively with matters falling in but one or very few distinct fields, effective supervision and control is impossible.

The exhaustive studies made under Taft became the heritage of the Wilson administration, only to be forgotten. On December 20, 1918, Congress passed a law giving the President very sweeping power:

To make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as, in his judgment, shall seem best fitted to carry out the purpose of this act.

However, President Wilson was so engrossed with other matters of great public moment at the time that he had little energy left to devote to reorganization problems. Little was done under this law and it came to an end by its own terms "six months after the termination of the war."

But the matter would not rest. The Republican platform of 1920 declared—

We advocate a thorough investigation of the present organization of the Federal departments and bureaus, with a view to securing consolidation, a more businesslike distribution of functions, the elimination of duplication, delays, and overlapping of work, and the establishment of an up-to-date and efficient administrative organization.

Warren G. Harding made this plank a major issue of his campaign for the Presidency, and later caused to be set up the "Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government." Walter F. Brown, now Postmaster General, served as the personal representative of the Chief Executive and acted as chairman. On February 23, 1923, the President transmitted to the committee an "outline of the reorganization plan recommended by the President and the Cabinet." The committee conducted exhaustive hearings, and on June 3, 1924, submitted an elaborate report to Congress embodying most of the recommendations of the President and the Cabinet. Bills were introduced in both the Senate and House to carry out the proposals of the joint committee. The plan had the active backing of the President, but in the end came to nothing. The majority of the Cabinet had joined reluctantly in the report submitted by the President and privately had no hesitancy in condemning certain of the most important recommendations which were vital to any worthwhile reorganization of the Government set-up.

In view of the experiences of his predecessors, Coolidge choose not to tackle the problem. He contented himself with shaving appropriations, cutting down personnel, and creating the maximum of efficiency in the bureaus as he found them.

CAMPAIGN PROMISES

In the presidential campaign of 1928 both Hoover and Smith stressed the necessity for a drastic reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government. Hoover won, and in his message to the Congress at its first regular session following his induction into office, in December, 1929, called attention to the fact that departmental reorganization had been under consideration for over 20 years, and stated that—

It was promised by both political parties in the recent campaign.

After reviewing past studies on reorganization, the necessity therefor if substantial economies were to be realized, and laying down broadly the principles to be followed, the President continued:

With this background of all previous experience I can see no hope for the development of a sound reorganization of the Government unless Congress be willing to delegate its authority over the problem (subject to defined principles) to the Executive, who should act upon approval of a joint committee of Congress or with the reservation of power of revision by Congress within some limited period adequate for consideration.

HOUSE CREATES NEW COMMITTEE

However, the House had set up on its own account, in December, 1927, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and vested it with very broad powers to effect economy and retrenchment in Government expenditures. It had general jurisdiction of all consolidation and reorganization problems and was especially charged with the duty of abolishing "useless offices." Of this committee I had the honor of becoming the first chairman. Due to the importance of the work to be undertaken by this committee, special care was taken in the selection of its personnel.

During the first session in which it sat it reported and secured the passage of a number of bills which resulted in the elimination of some minor bureaus and the reorganization of others. Its most notably achievements were the transfer of the Bureau of Prohibition Enforcement from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice, and the consolidation of the Pension Bureau, the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and the Veterans' Bureau into the present Veterans' Administration. The first had for its primary purpose a more efficient and effective administration with only incidental economies. The latter has not only brought about vastly improved service and more uniform treatment of the veterans of all wars, but has resulted in very substantial economies. After one year of operation, the new administrator reported economies running well past the $12,000,000 mark. Encouraged by the success of these reforms, its chairman undertook to put through a bill creating a public works administration and introduced another to consolidate the War and Navy Departments into a Department of Defense. While a concentrated and well-directed fire has killed all possibility of either measure becoming law in the near future, continued pressure and agitation by friends of these bills have brought the prospects of favorable action measurably nearer. Similar bills were introduced in this Congress by myself, the present chairman [Mr. Cochran], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

THE ECONOMY ACT

In the first session of the present Congress the House created the select economy committee of seven, of which I was also a member. A similar committee was organized in the Senate. While these committees failed to effect any major consolidations or eliminations of bureaus, they did succeed in passing the "economy act," which carried savings and reductions of $150,000,000. The insuperable difficulties attending the attempt to reorganize Government departments by the legislative branch led to the inclusion of the Vandenberg-Williamson reorganization of Government departments bill as Title IV of the economy act. By way of preamble this title declares it to be the policy of Congress—

To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes; to reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under one head; to eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and to segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative or executive character.

POWER TO REORGANIZE DELEGATED TO THE PRESIDENT

The body of the act gives the President very sweeping powers to carry out the above policy by Executive order, but provides that any transfers, consolidations, or eliminations effected by the President shall not become effective for 60 calendar days during which Congress is in session. If within that time either branch passes a resolution disapproving of the Executive order or any part of it, such Executive order shall become null and void to the extent of such disapproval. It is of this latter provision that the President complains, but it is clear that without some such provision the President would be endowed with powers of so sweeping a character as to enable him to practically destroy activities which Congress might consider vital to the proper functioning of the Government. The veto of the President's action by one body without the concurrence of the other seems to me, however, to be unsound in principle and highly objectionable from the standpoint of failing to give reasonable effectiveness to the act. It is objectionable, too, in that it permits one body to undo what the Congress as a whole has sanctioned. Onehalf should not be permitted to become greater than the whole. I doubt that Congress can constitutionally delegate to one of its branches the power to undo what Congress as a body has authorized.

However, I do not share the views of those who believe the President should be given carte blanche authority to reorganize Government bureaus and departments without a veto power in the legislative branch, especially where this goes to the extent of permitting him by Executive order to eliminate activities that have been created by statute. To permit him to do so would be tantamount to authorizing him to repeal existing law. Congress can not, if it would, delegate to him functions which are clearly legislative in character any more than it can usurp duties which are essentially executive. The Federal Constitution forbids it, and such denial has been enforced repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States. In my judgment the powers now granted to the President are sufficient for all practical purposes and go as far as prudence will allow, although I think the law should be so amended as to require joint action of both the Senate and the House in order to set aside an Executive order issued in pursuance of the economy act. In my judgment Congress can reserve this authority to itself, and any action taken jointly will be effective without Executive approval.

It was under this act that President Herbert Hoover transmitted to the Congress his message of December 9 last. This message contained the most ambitious and far-reaching attempt ever made by an Executive in the history of this country to reorganize the executive departments, independent establishments, and commissions of the Government. Not only did it cause consternation in many of the Government bureaus, but it stirred up a hornet's nest among propaganda groups and certain Members of Congress. A flock of resolutions introduced by Members of Congress shortly appeared having for their purpose the disapproval of the whole or a part of the President's program. simply illustrates the enormous difficulty of accomplishing anything worth while in the matter of reorganization. Everybody is for it, provided always his pet bureau is not interfered with. But let it be noted that the American taxpayer is getting heartily tired of the frills of government, to say nothing of the innumerable regulations that dog him from the cradle to the grave. He is not overlooking the fact that the per capita tax in this country has mounted from $23 in 1913 to $84 in 1930, which represents an increase of 355 per cent. He is demanding a return to sanity in public expenditures and means to have it.

PARTY PLATFORMS

It will be recalled that the Democratic platform of 1932 promises "a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of the Federal Government." That promise was reiterated and reinforced by candidate Franklin Delano Roosevelt, now President elect, during the late campaign. I do not believe so large a saving is possible without drastic cuts in veterans' benefits. Certainly no such savings can be accomplished by reorganization of Government departments.

The Republican platform was equally emphatic, though less specific as to actual savings proposed. It declared:

We urge prompt and drastic reduction of public expenditures and resistance to every appropriation not demonstrably necessary to the performance of the essentials of government.

It also pledged efficiency and economy and the reorganization of Government bureaus.

As a first step in carrying out these platform pledges President Hoover sent to the Congress at the opening of the present session a Budget carrying net reductions for the fiscal year 1934 of $580,000,000, as compared with the fiscal year 1933. While no accurate estimate of the savings that might be realized as a result of the President's proposed reorganization is possible, it is clear that if it had been carried out in good faith and efficiently administered the savings would have run into large figures annually.

REORGANIZATION MESSAGE AND EXECUTIVE ORDERS OF PRESIDENT HOOVER

We now come to a consideration of the reorganization message of the President. It might be well to note in passing that the criticism leveled at the President in some quarters because he did not launch his program earlier is not justified, due to the fact that Congress did not grant the authority until June 30, 1932, right at the close of the last session of Congress. In view of this, the President has acted with great dispatch and unquestionably in the utmost good faith.

No useful purpose can be served by attempting a complete analysis here. It is worthwhile, however, to take cognizance of a few of the more important groupings and consolidations which are illustrative of the whole.

DIVISION OF PUBLIC WORKS

Of first importance was the establishment by Executive order of a Division of Public Works in the Department of the Interior. The creation of such a division or department has long been advocated by the engineering and architectural professions of the country and has been recommended by every committee on reorganization in and out of Congress that has considered the subject. From time to time lengthy hearings have been held and detailed studies made that have gone into every phase of the subject here and abroad. At the present time construction work is being carried on by

of the Government that spend hundreds of millions of dollars annually. Among the important nations of the earth we are practically the only country that has not centralized public construction, including the improvement of rivers and harbors, under one controlling head. England is an exception only in that rivers and harbors are under the jurisdiction of the board of trade. The manifest advantages that would flow from such centralized control must be apparent to anyone who has given the matter even casual study.

Such consolidation would have the very great merit of developing an expert corps of highly trained architects, engineers, designers, and draftsmen who would be available to every department of the Government. It would put an end to competitive construction by different departments and permit standardization of specifications for material and supplies and to some extent of designs and structural specifications, which are important items in economical purchasing and construction. It would make long-time planning possible and practicable so that work might be slowed up during periods of active demand for labor and speeded up in times of depression and unemployment. Unified control and direction would gradually develop an American structural design and architectural symmetry of the highest utility and beauty. Finally, it would enable Congress to visualize the construction projects as a whole when appropriations were asked, which in turn would result in a better balanced building program with respect to actual public needs. Now the head of a department carrying the greatest weight with Congress or who is the most skillful propagandist often gets more for his department than the situation warrants.

The President's set-up has one vital defect in that it does not bring in the construction work of the Veterans' Administration. The building program of this establishment is large and it would seem clear that if we are to have a division of public works the construction unit of this administration should be brought in.

REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The proposed reorganization of the Department of Commerce was also outstanding and on the whole sound in principle. That some of the transfers and consolidations, if again attempted, will be bitterly challenged and resisted by the bureaus effected may be safely predicted from past experience. The acrimonious debate which developed be-tween the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Hydrographer of the Navy at the hearings of the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government in 1924 is classic, and yet to an outsider who has studied the problem it would seem fairly clear that the consolidation of the Hydrographic Office with the Coast and Geodetic Survey would be in the interest of both economy and better service.

Other consolidations having to do with our merchant marine were suggested that not only would have resulted in large economies but which would have added greatly to the convenience of shipping. The time-killing annoyances which are now incident to the numerous Government agencies having to do with the clearance of vessels would not be tolerated for a moment in private business.

As an illustration of what the captain of a ship is up against every time he enters port, the following may be cited. First he encounters the Public Health Service at quarantine, now in the Treasury Department; anchorage directions are secured from the Coast Guard (Treasury Department) but under regulations of the War Department; his boilers and life-saving devices are inspected by the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection (Department of Commerce); another division of the same bureau helps sign off his crew; the Bureau of Immigration (Labor Department) inspects his immigrants; the Bureau of Customs (Treasury Department) registers entry of his ship: the Collector of Customs (Treasury Department) attends to the collection of customs on his cargo; the Bureau of Lighthouses or the Coast and Geodetic Survey (Commerce Department) must be contacted for any changes that may 10 or a dozen departments and independent establishments | and Geodetic Survey (Department of Commerce) and Great Lakes Survey (War Department) for charts of domestic waters; and the Hydrographic Office (Navy Department) for charts of foreign waters. When he leaves port he must back through most of these bureaus before he can sail.

> The proposed consolidation of the Great Lakes Survey and the Hydrographic Office with the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the grouping of the latter with the Naval Observatory, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, Supervisor of New York Harbor, and Bureau of Lighthouses in the merchant marine group under an assistant secretary in the Department of Commerce will go a long way toward putting an end to the delays and annoyances now experienced by incoming and outgoing vessels.

> Into the merchant-marine group would also go the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation (independent) and the Inland Waterways Corporation (War Department). With the thorough reorganization of this group and the services now in or to be brought into the Department of Commerce under the industrial and trade group and the service group there should not only be large economies but greatly added efficiency and, what is still more important, vastly improved services to commerce, industry, and the public.

REGROUPING IN DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR

Another transfer of profound significance sought to be carried out by the President was the removal of the Public Health Service from the Treasury Department, where it clearly does not belong, to the Department of the Interior, and the setting up in the latter department of a division of education, health, and recreation under an Assistant Secretary. This is a much-needed reform, but fraught with considerable political dynamite—so much, in fact, that Congress has never been willing to pass any of the numerous bills introduced from time to time dealing with the subject.

Since the President tackled it, it is difficult to see why he did not bring in the Children's Bureau, now in the Department of Labor. The work of this bureau is intimately connected with public health. By law it is required to investigate and report-upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children

Not only is the work of the bureau in large part a duplication of the work done by the Public Health Service, but it is intimately connected with the Division of Vital Statistics (Commerce Department), which was to become a part of the new set-up. The gathering of vital statistics is done in close cooperation with State and local health authorities and has for its primary purpose the solution of health prob-lems. The solution of health problems is also a primary purpose of the Children's Bureau. The Public Health Service is better qualified and equipped to solve these problems than any other Government agency, and perforce should supervise and control all Federal activities seeking to improve and protect the health of our people. It will be noted that the Children's Bureau deals with children of all classes, and not of the laboring class alone. It was not intended as a service for a particular group, but as a service for the whole people.

MERIT IN PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

It is unfortunate that the President did not take into his confidence those Members of Congress who have long worked on the problem. Had this been done some mistakes could have been avoided and his program saved. But whatever defects there may be in the plan of reorganization of Government departments projected into the congressional arena by the President's message of December 9, they are trivial as compared with the very great merit of the plan as a whole. For the first time since our Government was established a President has undertaken a complete revamping of our whole administrative structure, with a view to making it operate upon a functional basis, with like activities assembled, coordinated, and consolidated under a single head. have been made in lighthouse and other signals; the Coast In place of discarding the whole, Congress should have considered his program by Executive orders upon their respec-

It is a singular fact that in a country that has taken an easy world leadership in business and industry so little of generalship should have developed in working out a smoothly running and efficient business administration in the executive branch of our Government. Doubtless this defect inheres in large measure in the character of our Government, with its checks and balances and division of authority. Under our Constitution Congress alone can determine the activities in which our Government shall engage. The Congress has left little discretion in the Executive as to where such activities should be placed and too often has attempted to set up the whole structure, thereby making it wooden and inelastic. If our Government is ever to function satisfactorily, more leeway must be given to the executive branch to work out practical details of organization and business administration. Unless this is done it is inevitable that there will be much of duplication, overlapping, and incongruous assembling of unrelated functions.

Much of the duplication and overlapping that exist is due to the tendency to self-expansion by Government departments and bureaus. Ambitious chiefs too often reach out for new power and expand agencies out of all proportion to their original intent and purpose. This results in encroaching upon fields already adequately covered by some other branch of the Federal service. The activities of the Government are so vast that this insidious invasion is not always detected by committees of Congress.

The regrouping proposed by the President would have gone a long way in putting an end to these abuses. Once like activities are properly assembled and coordinated or consolidated, it will be much easier for the Committee on Appropriations to guard against undue expansion and duplication by curtailing appropriations so as to confine agencies to their legitimate functions as established by law.

SUPPORT OF TAXPAYERS ESSENTIAL

Sleepless vigilance and continued restraint on the part of the taxpayers themselves, however, are the final brakes that must be applied to hold down expenditures within reasonable bounds. As long as militant and well-organized minority groups are allowed to foist their pet hobbies upon the public by their incessant pressure and propaganda, just so long will the Government continue to expand into new fields. people must learn to protect their Representatives in Congress who refuse to be cajoled, driven, or frightened into supporting measures that have little relation to the proper functions of government or that cost more than they are worth in real service to the people. No one likes the prevailing depression, the falling of incomes, and the low commodity prices, but at least they have served to make the people tax conscious. Their insistent demand for reduced budgets and lower taxes is finding a response in every legislative body in the land. The reduction of the tax load will prove a powerful stimulant in the revival of business, reemployment, and higher commodity prices for the hard-pressed farmer. A less burdensome Government is one of the factors in the rehabilitation of our common country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when a Member rises and says he asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record it is construed that they are his own remarks?

The SPEAKER. It is.

MAPLE SUGAR AND THE TARIFF

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert some remarks of my own in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, Vermont is one of the principal maple sugar producing States of the country. The producers are farmers who depend on their sugar crop for a material portion of their annual incomes. Sugar making is a short-time activity covering the months of March and April, and is carried on when it is impossible to do regular farming work.

The principal competition comes from Canada, where sugar is produced at a cost much lower than is possible in this country. Importations from Canada have increased from about 2,000,000 pounds in 1923 to over 10,000,000 pounds annually at the present time. This competition has resulted in driving many farmers out of sugar producing. Less than 60 per cent of our maple trees are now in use and many splendid orchards have been sacrificed to lumber.

The tariff act of 1930 fixed a duty of 8 cents per pound on maple sugar and 5½ cents per pound on maple sirup. This rate offered a proper measure of protection. A considerable portion of our crop each year is used by tobacco manufacturers, especially by the American Tobacco Co. On July 25, 1930, a small New York corporation, backed by a big tobacco company, made application to the Tariff Commission before the rate fixed by Congress went into effect for a rate reduction, and the Tariff Commission, following an unworkable formula, recommended a reduction of the duty to 6 cents per pound on sugar and 4 cents per pound on sirup. This struck a hard blow at the farmers of the maple sugar producing States. It was a stab in the dark from an unseen but all-powerful foe.

The fact that the cost of producing a gallon of Vermont sirup is about $1.21 a gallon, while a gallon of sirup produced in Canada, with the tariff added, can sell in this country for 88 cents; the fact that last year there was a tremendous carry-over in the Vermont product estimated at 10,000,000 pounds; and the further fact that certain companies which usually purchased and marketed a greater portion of the crop did not buy in the usual quantities created a serious situation in the industry. The producers appealed to the State farm bureau federation to work out a solution and devise ways and means whereby some agency or cooperative could be organized to take the crop for 1932 and market it for the benefit of the farmers.

Five cardinal principles had to be taken into consideration in order to meet the problem:

First. Financing.

Second. Finding the right package or container.

Third. Getting the right product.

Fourth. Finding a market and opening an outlet for the merchandising of the product.

Fifth. Advertising.

The organization of the Vermont Maple Cooperative (Inc.) was effected and an arrangement was made for financing through local banks and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Springfield, Mass.

Through conferences with merchandising men of New England the idea was developed of using a bottle container properly labeled to show that it was 100 per cent pure maple sap sirup from Vermont trees, the advertising thought being to inform the public that the consumer is getting pure sap sirup of the proper quality and density. This met with instant success.

Carrying out the plan, a market was developed so that now the pure product is on sale in over 3,000 stores in New England and 400 stores in New York City.

The venture has been so successful that it was possible during the first year to pay off the loan to the Federal intermediate-credit bank and materially reduce the loan in the local banks. Officials of the Federal intermediate bank have advised that the financial affairs of the association have been handled to their entire satisfaction and the business has been operated on a sound financial basis. The Vermont Maple Cooperative (Inc.) has taken its place in the agriculture of the State in that it stepped into the breach, took the crop, and is marketing it for the benefit of the farmers. The farm leaders who conceived and backed the plan are entitled to the thanks and the loyal support of all producers.

I call the attention of the farmers of other maple sugar producing States to this successful experiment of the Vermont farmers. A concerted effort, however, should be made to restore a rate of duty that will give protection to a farm product, help the small farmers, and relieve them from the danger of Canadian competition, which is increasing by reason of the depreciated currency of Canada. These farmers | represent a class that needs all the protection that Congress and its agencies can give.

Tobacco companies and other parties interested in lowering maple-sugar rates can take care of themselves. The farmers can not. Help to these farmers means help to the agricultural interests of over 20 States and to a crop value that ordinarily runs into millions of dollars.

PARCEL POST-WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT CAN SERVE YOU

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address I made over the radio during the Home and Farm Hour February 16.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of the House Our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of the House of Representatives, has been making an extensive survey during the past year of all postal activities, and is now engaged in drafting recommendations to Congress which it is hoped will result in many improvements in the Postal Service, as well as a substantial decrease in the cost to the Government.

Of the 10 major departments of our Government, the Post Office Department comes in closest contact with every inhabitant of the Nation. The services of the postal organization reach every community, from the largest cities to the smallest villages, and, through the Rural Delivery Service, even to remote farm houses. These postal services include the transmission and delivery of letters, newspapers, magazines, books, advertising matter, and added from time to time.

These postal services include the transmission and delivery of letters, newspapers, magazines, books, advertising matter, and merchandise; the money-order system, the postal savings bank, the registry and insurance services, and the collection-on-delivery service. The original purpose of the Postal Service was the carrying of letters and newspapers. The other services have been added from time to time.

To-day I shall speak to you about the Parcel Post Service, what it is, and how it can serve you.

The Parcel Post Service was established on January 1, 1913. More recent readjustments of rates and increases in weight limits have further popularized the service. The people of the country, particularly the business men and manufacturing concerns, have been prompt to take advantage of these expanding postal facilities. The number of parcels of fourth-class matter increased from 250,000,000 during the fiscal year 1912 to over 1,000,000,000 during the fiscal year 1923.

The number continued to increase during the years 1924 and the fiscal year 1923.

The number continued to increase during the years 1924 and 1925. In 1925 Congress took out of the fourth class those parcels not exceeding 8 ounces in weight, which had previously been included therein, and put them in the third class. Consequently there was a less number of parcels mailed as fourth-class matter in the following years, the number in 1930 being 837,308,320. This does not mean that during that year there was a less quantity of matter mailed, since matter of the character taken out of the fourth-class was mailed as matter of the third class. Owing to present economic conditions and other causes, the number of parcels of fourth-class matter mailed during the fiscal year 1931 decreased to 765,661,536, and during the year 1932 to 616,531,806.

Beginning in 1913 with a size limit to parcels of 72 inches combined length and girth, and a weight limit of 20 pounds, increases have been made in these limits as the service grew. Now parcels measuring as much as 100 inches, combined length and girth, and weighing up to 70 pounds, may be sent by parcel post to any point weighing up to 70 pounds may be sent by parcel post to any point in the United States or its possessions, except part of the Philippine Islands, where transportation facilities are very limited.

United States and its possessions. Parcels are delivered and may be mailed on all of the 41,602 rural routes in the country. The parcel post reaches every community.

The methods of transportation used include airplanes, railways, motor vehicles, wagons, horseback riders, boats, and in Alaska sleds pulled by dogs. Parcel Post Service is also available practically to all foreign countries. More than 3,963,749 parcels were mailed to foreign countries during the fiscal year 1932.

Parcel-post rates are reasonable. Twenty-eight cents will carry 19 pounds 150 miles; 26 cents will carry a 2-pound parcel to the Philippine Islands, or half way around the world. A 70-pound parcel may be sent 150 miles for 84 cents. The schedule of rates on parcel post is based on the cost of handling only.

The methods used in the handling and transportation of parcel post are such that loss or damage seldom occurs. Insurance

On a 10-pound parcel, valued at $5, for any distance up to 150 miles, the total charge for transportation and delivery, with insurance against loss or damage, is 23 cents. The parcel post is a safe method of transportation. All parcels are carried in locked canvas bags, except a comparatively small number, the nature of which is such that individual handling is necessary. These bags, in addition to providing protection against depredation, protect the contents against damage in bad weather while being placed on or taken from cars at railway stations. All Convenient facilities for the mailing of parcels are provided in every community. In addition to the 48,159 post offices, there are 7,447 post-office stations located in the larger cities and towns. These stations are maintained for the convenience of patrons in transacting postal business, and most of them are located in the residential districts.

Carriers on rural-delivery routes accept parcels for mailing from their patrons. As an added inducement for the mailing of farm products the postage on parcels collected on rural routes, for local delivery, is 2 cents less per parcel than when mailed at a post office, and 3 cents less per parcel when for other than local de-

The use of parcel post provides farmers and residents of country districts a convenient, practical, and economical method of marketing seasonable and staple farm products. Many residents of cities have arranged with farmers to furnish them with eggs and other products at regular intervals by parcel post. In many instances the containers are returned when empty for reuse.

Standard, 30-dozen egg cases are mailable, and the postage on a full case, for delivery within 150 miles, averages less than 66 cents, making the transportation cost a trifle over 2 cents for a dozen eggs. Many storekeepers in the smaller towns, as well as farmers, ship eggs to commission houses in the cities by parcel post.

Delivery service is provided for parcel post in all cities and towns having carrier service, as well as on rural routes.

Due to the immense volume of parcel post and the distribution methods which are necessarily used, transportation and delivery of this class of mail can not be accomplished as quickly as of letters. When the utmost speed is essential, parcels should be sent special delivery or special handling.

The fees for special-delivery service, in addition to the regular postage, are 15 cents for parcels weighing 2 pounds or less, 25 cents for parcels weighing over 10 pounds and up to 70 pounds.

Special-delivery parcels addressed to patrons on rural routes are delivered at the house of the addressee, instead of being left at his roadside mail box, if the house is within one-half mile of the road traveled by the carrier. Postmasters are instructed to notify, by telephone or otherwise natures. The use of parcel post provides farmers and residents of country

Special-handling parcels are handled in transit exactly the same as special-delivery parcels, but on arrival at destination they are delivered on the next regular carrier trip, instead of by special messenger. SENATE

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1933

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, in whose hands are life and death, by whose power we are sustained, by whose mercy we are spared, we thank Thee for the endless renewing of life in the divine ordering of this wondrous world, for Thou art never weary in releasing us from the bonds wherewith we have bound ourselves. Help us, therefore, to walk in this new day free from the bondage of fear, and as Thou hast committed unto us our work so would we commit our care unto Thee. Open our eyes that we may receive new light, our ears that we may hear the voice of Thy love, speak peace unto our hearts that we may gain the victory o'er the things that press us down and o'er the flesh that doth so often encumber us, that we may hope all things and endure all things as messengers of Thy healing mercy to this troubled and distracted world. We ask it in the name of Him who is our peace, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar days of Thursday and Friday, February 23 and 24, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14395) relating to the prescribing of medicinal liquor, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had rejected, by striking out the enacting clause thereof, the bill (S. 417) to provide a government for American Samoa.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14562) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 88) to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof.

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes, with the accompanying papers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1044. An act authorizing the issuance to Cassie E. Howard of a patent for certain lands;

S. 4286. An act to authorize credit in the disbursing account of Donna M. Davis; and

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, on page 4912 of the RECORD of Friday, February 24, in the first column, I find the following:

The Presiding Officer. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Following that announcement, this statement appears:

Mr. Blaine. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I shall propose to the pending bill and ask that it be printed and lie upon the table.

I was not advised of the error in time to make the correction in the stenographic report of the proceedings yesterday. I want to correct the RECORD to the effect that while the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] had the floor he yielded to me to present the amendment which I sent to the desk and which I proposed or said I would propose as an amendment to the pending bill, and I asked that it be printed and lie upon the table. The Senator from Nebraska had the floor and yielded. I was immediately called from the Chamber and, evidently in the confusion that existed upon the floor and the general disorder, action upon the amendment which I had offered at an earlier date is shown to have taken place while I was present. I could not have been present at the time, because I was absent from the time I said I would propose an amendment, which I sent to the desk to be printed, through the kindness of the Senator from Nebraska in yielding to me for that purpose.

My only purpose in making the correction is to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment to the amendment, as announced by the Presiding Officer, was rejected. I enter a notice of my intention to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I propose the following unanimous-consent agreement and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Oregon proposes the following unanimous-consent agreement:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar, subject to the 5-minute rule, beginning with Order No. 1214, and after completing the call that the Senate then proceed with the call at the beginning for unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no

THE PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have a resolution on the table which I desire to call up. I think it will take no particular time to dispose of it, but I should like to have a chance to have the resolution considered.

Mr. McNARY. I did not understand the statement of the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I say I have on the table Senate Resolution 339, which is a resolution referring some data to the Federal Trade Commission for examination and report back to the Senate. It calls for no appropriation and only for information. It relates to the running of illegal oil in the flush oil fields of the West, including Oklahoma, Texas, and western California.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it. Mr. MOSES. Has the routine morning business been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not; it is just beginning. Mr. MOSES. Then may I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that, under the routine morning business, his being a resolution coming over from a previous day, it would

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire is not conversant, I think, with the nature of the request. I am asking immediately to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. MOSES. Immediately?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If I can have the resolution to which I have referred considered for just a moment, I shall have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oregon yield so that the resolution referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma may be read to ascertain whether or not there is

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may we not have the regular morning procedure? Can we not proceed with the presentation of petitions and the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, and so forth?

Mr. McNARY. My object is simply this: There are a number of Senate bills on the calendar which if passed to-day will be messaged over to the House and an opportunity will be afforded to have them brought up for consideration on the Union Calendar of the House on Monday next, which will be the last opportunity for the consideration

The request is made in the interest of the expedition of legislation and to accommodate most of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to see that done. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, Senate Resolution 339, submitted by Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma on January 20, 1933, as follows:

Resolved, That since Federal tax receipts will be decreased, balancing the Budget made more difficult, and a valuable and irreplacable natural resource may be wasted by the impending demoralization of the American petroleum industry, the Federal Trade Commission is hereby directed to report at once to the Senate of the United States the fullest information now in their possession covering the following-named topics and to further investigate and report at the earliest possible time to the Senate of the United States, if it is then in session, or to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, if the Senate is not in session, in which case the Committee on the Judiciary shall make such report a public document at once that it may be available for use of Members of the Senate;

the Senate;
(1) The cause of the recent cut in the price of petroleum and petroleum products;

products contrary to the normal operation of the laws of supply and demand;

(4) The base which determines the price paid the producer of petroleum and the ultimate price paid by the consumer of petroleum products and their relation;

(5) Whether the price of petroleum or petroleum products is determined by any corporation or group of corporations;

(6) Whether any groups through their evasion of State regulatory laws are tending to develop a monopoly in petroleum products: products:

(7) Whether any companies or corporations engaging in interstate business are requiring the repayment of loans by delivery of petroleum at rates fixed below their own posted prices or below the market price, thus breaking that market price and demoralizing the industry;

(3) Whether any person, persons, or corporation is guilty of purchasing, transporting, or disposing of petroleum or petroleum products produced or acquired in violation of State regulatory laws; and

(9) Whether unfair competition is being made possible by unfair charges on transporting petroleum or its products or in any process of refining or distributing them, enabling any corporation to enjoy an improper advantage over competitors who are not guilty of such practices.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the declaration in the beginning of the resolution in the nature of a preamble be stricken out, including all the language after the word "That," in line 1, down to and including the word "industry" and the comma in line 5, page 1, so that the resolution will be directory without the preliminaries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is satisfactory to me, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma modifies his resolution. Is there objection to the resolution as modified?

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, before the resolution is acted upon I ask permission to submit a statement following the printing of the resolution and likewise to submit a number of letters-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The resolution has not been agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution as modified was agreed to as follows:

Senate Resolution 339

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby directed to report at once to the Senate of the United States the fullest information now in their possession covering the following-named topics and to further investigate and report at the earliest possible time to the Senate of the United States, if it is then in session, of such bills. Hence I ask that the morning be not entirely taken up with routine morning business but that we may proceed immediately to the consideration of the calendar. for use of Members of the Senate:

- (1) The cause of the recent cut in the price of petroleum and petroleum products;
- (2) The reason for the drop in crude-oil prices in 1931;
 (3) The explanations of fluctuations in the price of petroleum products contrary to the normal operation of the laws of supply and demand:
- and demand;

 (4) The base which determines the price paid the producer of petroleum and the ultimate price paid by the consumer of petroleum products and their relation;

 (5) Whether the price of petroleum or petroleum products is determined by any corporation or group of corporations;

 (6) Whether any groups through their evasion of State regulatory laws are tending to develop a monopoly in petroleum products;
- (7) Whether any companies or corporations engaging in inter-state business are requiring the repayment of loans by delivery of petroleum at rates fixed below their own posted prices or below the market price, thus breaking that market price and demoralizing the industry:
- (8) Whether any person, persons, or corporation is guilty of purchasing, transporting, or disposing of petroleum or petroleum products produced or acquired in violation of State regulatory
- laws; and

 (9) Whether unfair competition is being made possible by unfair charges on transporting petroleum or its products or in any process of refining or distributing them, enabling any corporation to enjoy an improper advantage over competitors who are not guilty of such practices.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert at this point in the RECORD a statement explaining briefly the purpose of the resolution, and I also submit a number of affidavits and letters and photostatic copies of data to accompany the resolution and to be transmitted to the Federal Trade Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD, and the material referred to by the Senator will be transmitted to the Federal Trade Commission.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The indictment and punishment of any who are guilty of de-liberately wrecking the American petroleum industry through unjustified price cuts just when it was leading the way back to prosperity should be expedited by the passage of this resolution authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to thoroughly investigate this question. Regardless of how high placed or how wealthy the guilty persons might be, such an investigation should neither be postponed nor avoided. No alien enemy in time of war-could have done so much damage to the welfare of the whole American people or could have blotted out so much wealth as was done by the unwarranted slash in petroleum prices at the dictates of some unrevealed authority.

The Federal Government has both an interest in this investigation and a duty to further it. Those reasons may be briefly enumerated thus:

- (1) Income-tax receipts growing out of the American petroleum industry will be diminished by enormous sums through the practical ruin of hundreds of operators and by the serious losses suffered by still more because of this movement by which they have been forced to sell their oil at less than actual production costs.
- (2) The Federal income from corporation taxes will be equally reduced by the serious losses suffered by companies engaged in the production of petroleum.
- (3) Federal receipts from pipe-line taxes may have been seriously affected by the clandestine transportation of oil produced in violation of State regulation without proper reports being made as a basis for taxation.
- (4) The many Federal interests involved in the interstate commerce in petroleum and its products demand that the United States Government should ascertain the facts in order that any guilty of such violations might be properly prosecuted.

 (5) The antitrust laws forbid combinations in restraint of trade
- such as seem probable in this united movement to eliminate large
- such as seem probable in this united movement to eliminate large groups of petroleum producers to the advantage of those having the power to determine the price at which they purchase oil and also the price at which they sell its refined products.

 (6) Should the evidence show a conspiracy on the part of any group or groups responsible for slashing the price of petroleum, for encouraging tax evasion, or for practically subsidizing the evasion of State laws to the damage of Federal tax receipts, indictments under the conspiracy act should be made possible through transmission of this evidence to the Department of Justice and the appropriate authorities.
- (7) The Treasury Department should be provided with all the covering the first three items in this list, embracing the effect of income-tax payments, corporation-tax payments, and pipe-line levies in order that, should there be presumptive evidence of guilt, fullest information might be given to the Department of Justice in order that proper criminal action might be taken.
- (8) Evidence indicating violations of various acts governing interstate commerce should be referred to the Interstate Com-

- merce Commission for its study and report to the Department of
- (9) The Department of Justice should be requested to enter prosecutions if sufficient evidence is found to justify such action in regard to any violations of the laws previously mentioned and especially to prosecute under the conspiracy act any who have been guilty of entering any conspiracy whose result would be to affect Federal tax receipts, or to violate either interstate commerce laws or the provisions of the antitrust acts.
- No additional appropriation should be required at present to accomplish a preliminary investigation. The Federal Trade Commission should be able to obtain from the States of Texas and Oklahoma the facts which have been revealed in those States by official investigation. The Federal Trade Commission also probofficial investigation. The Federal Trade Commission also probably possesses already much information in regard to previous combinations in restraint of trade or to artificially depress prices of petroleum products. That information should be collated with data obtained from the Texas and Oklahoma investigations. If additional and more detailed inquiry should be necessary, the Federal Trade Commission may report to the coming special sestion of the Compress when a guardenequal expression with the compress when a guardenequal expression of the Compression of the Compressio sion of the Congress when a supplemental appropriation might be given proper consideration.
- Since responsible persons in the petroleum industry and reputable newspapers are publicly alleging the truth of these charges, a positive duty rests upon the Federal Government in making such an investigation as will establish their truth or falsity and determine whether one of the basic industries of the Nation is being deliberately wrecked for the enrichment of a few people and whether the Federal revenues are being further depleted at the very time when the stability of our credit depends upon our securing sufficient revenue to carry on necessary governmental activities.

Whereas the various efforts that have been made to restore prosperity and confidence, apparently based on the thesis that relief of special groups would relieve all other groups also, and that forced expansion of credit would raise commodity prices, have either failed or proved inadequate; and

REVIEW OF DISABILITY-ALLOWANCE CLAIMS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the Washington Post of to-day there appears an article having reference to the action taken by Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in directing that all disability-allowance claims be reviewed.

As further information on this controversial subject I request leave to have printed and appropriately referred, following these remarks, a letter addressed to me several days ago by Administrator Hines.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, Washington, February 14, 1933.

Washington, February 14, 1933.

Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Fletcher: This has reference to your telephonic communication of February 13, 1933, and is in response to your inquiries relating to the review of disability-allowance claims which is now being conducted.

On December 1, 1932, there was initiated, by administrative order, a review by the Veterans' Administration of awarded claims for disability allowance in order to place into effect standards for disability evaluation presently in use in the adjudication of such

On December 1, 1932, there was initiated, by administrative order, a review by the Veterans' Administration of awarded claims for disability allowance in order to place into effect standards for disability evaluation presently in use in the adjudication of such claims. The review now in progress was undertaken, according to the legal warrant conferred by section 5 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which provides in effect that for the purpose of administering, executing, and enforcing the provisions of the act the director (administrator) shall have full power and authority to make such rulings and regulations as are necessary or proper not inconsistent with the other provisions of the act. It is also specified by that section that regulations and provisions may be made for the nature and extent of proofs and evidence, as well as for the determination of methods for investigations, medical examinations, adjudications, and awards.

In the matter of your reference, generally, to the review of claims now being conducted it is felt that in the way of explanation of the reasons for having instituted the review it will be in order to discuss briefly the history of disability allowance and the problems which confronted the administration in the adjudication of disability-allowance claims. Thousands upon thousands of claims were presented for consideration immediately after the enactment of the amendatory act of July 3, 1930, and the necessity to secure prompt relief for veterans entitled thereto was immediately apparent; it was then obvious that if relief were to be afforded promptly it could be done only by means of the most expeditious adjudication of claims. Accordingly ratings were based upon medical data contained in reports of examinations which were of record and which had been, in some instances, secured months previously. Further, in the sole interest of dispatch, there were adopted standards for disability evaluation which were more fiexible perhaps than were justified by the experience of th nency of disabling conditions, but adjudications were based upon diagnoses and disability estimates previously made.

The necessity for the eventual adoption of more fixed evaluative standards and definitions of permanency of disability was recognized by the administration at the time the expedient measures nized by the administration at the time the expedient measures were temporarily resorted to, and it was then intended that as soon as the circumstances should permit a general review of awarded claims would be undertaken in order to place into effect criteria for rating which would be in consonance with the experience acquired by the administration following the passage of the amendatory act of July 3, 1930. At this time over 95 per cent of claims have been adjudicated, and it may be said that practical results have justified the previous conclusions of the administration in respect to the necessity for the ultimate reconsideration tion in respect to the necessity for the ultimate reconsideration of claims. Numerous claims which have been reviewed in regular course of adjudication have demonstrated that in many instances disabling conditions initially considered to be permanent were not in fact so, and that in some instances diseases or injuries have been found to be no longer present, or to have improved to an extent which has warranted reduction or discontinuance of awards. Paragraph 2 of section 200 of the act is held to warrant the rule for permanency which is now in effect, namely, that a permanent disability will be taken to exist when there is present a disability disability will be taken to exist when there is present a disability which, it is reasonably certain, will continue unimproved throughout the claimant's life. It is upon that definition of permanency that all adjudications of disability-allowance claims are now made. In consideration of your reference to the adjudication of claims pursuant to the review without reexamination of the veteran concerned, it is desired to assure you that it is the intention of the administrative order which initiated the review (a copy of which issue is inclosed for your information) that awards will not be discontinued in any case where the available evidence is not entirely adequate to support the action taken. In that direct connection your attention is invited to paragraph 5 of the inclosed issue. adequate to support the action taken. In that direct connection your attention is invited to paragraph 5 of the inclosed issue. You will observe that it has been provided that reexaminations are expected to be secured in any case where examination reports of record are clearly inadequate and where reexamination is considered to be essential to further adjudication of the claim; that is to say, where it is considered that the data of record are insufficient to satisfactorily portray the physical condition of the veteran and to enable accurate estimation of the extent of disability in any instance. The other provisions to which the letter of December 1, 1932, refers relate to cases wherein it is apparent that the application of presently effective standards for disability evaluation to conditions which are satisfactorily described will result in either increased or decreased disability ratings.

In the further matter of the questioned propriety of reduction

In the further matter of the questioned propriety of reduction of awards without reexamination it is believed that you will apof awards without reexamination it is believed that you will appreciate that the application of the rating principles now approved in presently effective regulations makes it necessary that the need for reexamination be determined according to the facts of individual cases, and it may be said at this point that it is expected that the officials and agencies of the administration, whose responsibility it is to conduct the review of claims, may be relied upon to exercise sound judgment and discretion in making the determinations required of them. It is not anticipated that reductions without examination will be accomplished unless (1) the file clearly indicates that a condition which qualifies under ductions without examination will be accomplished unless (1) the file clearly indicates that a condition which qualifies under the early rule for determining permanence, "reasonably certain to continue unimproved for an indefinite period" falls to qualify under the present rule, "reasonably certain to continue unimproved throughout the veteran's life," particularly with respect to those conditions which are susceptible to operative intervention; (2) the file definitely indicates that a disability in question can not qualify for a 25 per cent, 50 per cent, 75 per cent, or permanent total rating under the evaluative regulations were shown to be too elastic, especially so far as 25 per cent, 50 per cent, 75 per cent, and permanent total ratings had been developed by the use of less than 10 per cent ratings, applied to conditions which for the most part had heretofore not been definitely evaluated.

In providing for the review every precaution has been observed in the protection of the rights of veterans whose claims will be effected. The review will follow the order in which awards were effected. The review will follow the order in which awards were approved, and it is intended that claims will not be adjudicated without reexamination except where sufficient medical data is of record to permit adjudication. The right of any veteran to secure appeal of his claim or to have reconsideration of his claim, to which the present policies of the administration entitle him, will be in no wise jeopardized by the review. Further, in order to provide a stay of adjudication to permit sufficient opportunity for the submittal of additional evidence on the part of veterans and as an added safeguard to the rights of veterans now provided, the field offices have been instructed to discontinue no award pursuant to the review before the first of the second calendar month.

field offices have been instructed to discontinue no award pursuant to the review before the first of the second calendar month succeeding the month in which the termination is approved.

The attitude of veterans who are denied disability allowance is sympathetically appreciated, and you are assured that the administration is fully aware of the hardships which will follow the reduction of awards in some instances. The review of claims which is now under way, as well as such reviews of disability-allowance claims as have been conducted in the past, must be held to be warranted as a matter of sound administration, upon the proposition that it is in the interest both of the veterans concerned and of the Government to review claims whenever it may be necessary to see to it that the basic law and interpretations thereof are properly administered. Reconsiderations of inditions thereof are properly administered. Reconsiderations of individual disability-allowance claims have been had in the routine of adjudication as they may come to the attention of the field offices of the administration, either through the presentation of additional evidence or in other proper manner, and it is therefore proper to say that the review now under discussion constitutes no departure from established policy affecting the basic rights of beneficiaries concerned, and that it is in no sense unusual or extraordinary

In conclusion it is desired to assure you that it is the intention of the administration that no veteran who is found to have a permanent disability of 25 per cent or more and who meets the other requirements of the law need entertain any fear regarding the continuation of disability allowance to which he is entitled.

Very truly yours.

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

UNVEILING OF A CANVAS ON THE WALL

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, delivered to-day over a network of the National Broadcasting Co., at Washington, D. C., entitled "Unveiling of a Canvas on the Wall."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in RECORD, and it is as follows:

printed in Record, and it is as follows:

I am happy indeed to have this opportunity, again, of talking to thousands of my radio friends who, I feel sure, are listening in at this moment. I want to express my deep appreciation to the National Broadcasting Co. for giving this hour to the Farmers' Union the fourth Saturday of each month.

I also want to thank those who responded so splendidly to the talk I gave the fourth Saturday in January. We now have more than 1,500 who have volunteered to do organizing work in their own counties. There is scarcely a day that we do not receive results from these organizers. I take the position that any person who speaks to an audience, like the one I am addressing to-day, should give them bread instead of a stone; should give them milk instead of just foam. It is my purpose in each of my talks to give you information, to give you truth not available through the ordinary sources of securing information. If I can do this, I am not wasting your time nor mine, and we shall be drawn closer together as we meet each other, radio fashion, once each month. I am fully convinced we can not only become acquainted over the radio, but also build up a friendship approaching that of personal contact. So I come to friendship approaching that of personal contact. So I you to-day happy in the feeling that we are friends. So I come to

THE UNVEILING

The usual purpose at the unveiling of a great picture is to ex-

The usual purpose at the unveiling of a great picture is to expose to view the work of some great artist—a work that he has done with paint and brush. The unveiling brings to the eyes of those present a thing of beauty. It brings to them the pleasure and delight that we get from seeing beautiful things.

The picture that I shall unveil was not made with paint and brush. It was not intended by its authors to be exposed to public gaze. It was not constructed with the thought of making it a thing of beauty. I shall unveil an ugly, hideous, inhuman picture constructed by selfish, greedy, avaricious souls for the purpose of robbing their fellow men.

MONEY AND CREDITS

Tearing the curtain aside, we see the subject of this picture is "Money and Credits." So far as this particular picture is concerned the making of it began during the Civil War.

Examining the thumb prints on this picture, I can see it is the work of the slimy hands of the big bankers of the Nation.

BANKER PERFIDY

I see, as a part of the background of this picture, what Abraham Lincoln was up against in the trying days of his administration. Big bankers went to Congress in the early days of the war tion. Big bankers went to Congress in the early days of the war and put exception clauses into the currency Lincoln was compelled to issue. The exception clauses prevented this currency from being full legal tender for all debts, public and private. In the background of this picture, I see that this exception clause prevented the money Lincoln issued from passing at a hundred cents on the dollar. I see the soldiers of '61 accepting these bills at face value, but they and their families back home compelled to turn them in to the merchant and to those whom they owed at 50 cents on the dollar and even less in some instances. I see the big bankers of the Nation accumulating hundreds of millions of dollars of this currency at this depreciated value. Then after the war I see, in this ugly picture, these same bankers going to Congress and having their 50-cent dollars funded into Government bonds payable in gold dollars at 100 cents on the dollar. ment bonds payable in gold dollars at 100 cents on the dollar.

NATIONAL BANK ACT

I see these bankers, during this war period and after the war period, secure the enactment of the national bank act. The national bank act provides that national banks may loan the United States receiving for such loan a Government interest-United States receiving for such loan a Government interest-bearing bond. The Government will then print for the national bank an equal amount of blank national bank notes, the bank leaving the Government bond as a guaranty that the bank shall stay open ready to redeem such currency on demand. The officers of such banks make money out of these blank national bank notes by simply signing each bill at the place indicated. Under this act, the national bank, after lending the Government, has just as much money to lend out to its customers upon which it draws high rates of interest and at the same time the Government. draws high rates of interest and at the same time the Government draws high rates of interest and at the same time the Government sends them interest quarterly on a like amount of money.

To make this plain I give you my own experience. I was president of the First National Bank of Weatherford, Okla., some 20 years ago. One day I lent $25,000 of that bank's money to the Government in Washington. The Government issued a $25,000 bond, its note to my bank. I left the bond with the Government and received $25,000 in blank national bank notes which I signed and returned to the vaults of the First National Bank of Weatherford. I had just as much money to lend in and around Weatherford to farmers and business men as I had before I lent the Government that $25,000, and received interest every three months on the Government bond left with the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as from the bank's customers. I want you listening in on the Government bond left with the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as from the bank's customers. I want you listening in to know that when the last coupon on that Government bond has been paid to the First National Bank of Weatherford, Okla, the taxpayers of this Nation will have paid more than $25,000 in interest to the bank for my signing and making some money for the people to use. That is the national-bank system that I find in the background of this picture, a system that I concede the daily press of the country have the people believing is a sound system. It is sound for the bankers, but not sound for the taxpayers of this Nation.

CRIME OF 1873

In the background of this hideous picture I want to call your attention to the crime of 1873. England had gone off the bimetallic standard in 1816. Immediately she entered upon an extensive campaign to get other nations to do the same. It was emissaries of Great Britain working through the big bankers of this country who were largely responsible for the demonetization of silver in 1873. Our big bankers saw that it would be much easier for them to control the basic money of the country under a single gold-standard system instead of a bimetallic system in which both gold and silver were money.

This is a terrible picture I am unveiling and I want you to know that it is, exclusively, the work of the big bankers of this Nation.

FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The next part of the background of this picture to which I call your attention is the Federal reserve act passed by Congress in 1914. This machine was supposed to function in the interest in 1914. This machine was supposed to function in the interest of the common people. It was supposed to furnish an elasticity to the money and credits of this country that would respond quickly and adequately to the needs of the business and commerce of the Nation. In the background of this picture I see that the international bankers jumped onto the Federal reserve machine, threw the lever in reverse, and instead of elastic qualities being used to the advantage of the people it has been used against their interests. their interests.

DEFLATION

I call your attention to that part of the background of the picture where, immediately after the war the international bankers of this country, through the Federal reserve banks, beginning in May, 1920, demanded payment by the small banks of the country of what those small banks owed to the big banks and to the Federal reserve banks. As a result of these demands in less than 18 months nearly $3,000,000,000 of Federal reserve notes and national-bank notes were called in and canceled. In other words, these pirates of finance destroyed in 18 months $3,000,000,000 of the medium of exchange of this country.

I see in this picture that May 1, 1920, when deflation began, cotton was 40 cents a pound on the Cotton Exchange in New Orleans. Four months later it was 7 cents a pound, and to-day it is less than 6 cents. I see in the background of this picture on May 1, 1920, when the big bankers commenced the destruction of the medium of exchange of this country, wheat was $3 a bushel on the Chicago Grain Exchange. Four months later it was $1.40, and to-day it is less than 50 cents a bushel.

BANKS' POWER

In the background of this canvas I am unveiling, I want to call your attention to the strangle hold two big banking systems in New York City have on the business of this Nation. This will be a very brief summary of the situation.

I shall take the Chase National Bank first. Members of its board I shall take the Chase National Bank first. Members of its board of directors hold directorships in other institutions to the following extent: 18 banks, 12 insurance companies, 32 manufacturing corporations, 17 railroad companies, 19 public utilities, and 21 miscellaneous corporations. In turn, these banks in which directors of the Chase National have one or more directors have one or more directors in 104 other banks, 142 insurance companies, 360 manufacturing corporations, 234 transportation companies, which include some street railways, steamship and aviation corporations, 266 public utilities, and 569 miscellaneous corporations. We find the Chase National and its interlocking banks with a total of 2,023 directorships in other banks, in insurance companies. of 2,023 directorships in other banks, in insurance companies, manufacturing concerns, transportation companies, and public

A breakdown of the National City Bank shows they hold 7 directorships in aviation companies, 41 in other banks, 104 in miscellaneous companies, 44 in insurance companies, 102 in manufacturing corporations, 29 in transportation companies, 115 in public-utility corporations. A breakdown of each of these 41 banks shows that the group under the National City Bank holds 4,019 directorships in other banks, public utilities, insurance companies, transportation companies, manufacturing, and miscellaneous corporations

Investigation reveals these interlocking directorates, both in banking and industry, extend into foreign countries. It further reveals that it extends to every automobile concern with the exception of Ford. It shows it includes practically every railroad, steamship company, and aviation company in the United States. It includes practically every public utility in the United States. It includes a majority of the insurance companies of the United States. It includes every line of manufacturing. It reveals there is scarcely such a thing as an independent concern in the United States. Just a few big bankers completely control commerce, industry, and transportation.

I get this information from the testimony of Mr. John P. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor. This testimony was given Tuesday, January 31, this year before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, Senator George Norris, of Nebraska, presiding.

HOW BANK DESTROYS INDIVIDUAL

I want to call your attention to an incident in the background of I want to call your attention to an incident in the background of this picture that is typical of multiplied thousands of similar incidents. It is the story of a friend of mine in Oklahoma who through luck and a knowledge of oil geology really fell into great wealth. He has opened more oil fields in this country than any man in the country. This friend of mine told me a few months ago that less than three years from the day he took lunch with an international banker in New York City, they stripped him of over $30,000,000. The process was, first, financing through lending; second, financing by increasing his capital stock and the big bankers taking most of the increased capital stock; third, by surrentitiously buying other stock from minority stockholders until bankers taking most of the increased capital stock; third, by surreptitiously buying other stock from minority stockholders until they had controlling interest; fourth, after obtaining controlling interest removing my friend as president of his own company; fifth, and the last process, was selling to my friend's company worthless property owned by the international banker. That day when my friend took lunch with the international banker in New York City it was the old story of the spider and the fly.

THE PICTURE ITSELF

I have hastily called your attention to the background of the picture. Now, let us look at the picture itself. In the center of this background is the complete control by the international bankers of the "money and credits" of this country. As Sampson's locks were the source of his power, so the control of the money and credits of this country is the source of the power of the international bankers of this country. Sampson shorn of his locks was shorn of his power. The international bankers shorn of their control of money and credits will be shorn of their power and their interlocking directorates will cease to work when they no longer have the power to make a big crop of money or a small crop; when they are no longer the only source of credit for the people of this Nation.

I did not make this picture. The international bankers made

I did not make this picture. The international bankers made I have unveiled it and brought it to your view. If you like the condition this picture reveals, if you are contented for a few selfish, greedy, avaricious men to have control of the money and credits of this country, then turn from your radios at the close of this hour, put your necks in the yoke and wear it uncompletingly.

HOW ORGANIZE

If this picture is a thing of horror and terror to you, then at the close of this hour write to our national secretary, E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., and ask for instructions how you may become a member of the Farmers' Union of America and how you can organize a local of the Farmers' Union in your community. Around Hazleton, Pa., the farmers have self-organized in the last 30 days and now have 5 locals with 150 members.

We are the only organized group of farmers here in Washington working for the passage of the Frazier bill, S. 1197. This bill provides for the Government refinancing farmers at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent interest and $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent payment on the principal each year until the principal is paid. We are the only organization of farmers with headquarters here in Washington advocating the passage of the Wheeler bill, S. 2487, which provides for the remonetization of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. We are the only organization of farmers with headquarters here in Washington advocating the passing of such legislation as will get for farmers cost of production for that part of their products consumed in this country.

If you would like to see such bills as I have mentioned pass and become laws in this Nation, it is your duty to become a member of the organization that is promoting these measures. The Farmers' Union is the only farm organization doing this, with headquarters in Washington.

Farmers' Union is the only farm organization doing this, with headquarters in Washington.

I want you to know that the Farmers' Holiday Association has the same program of legislation as the Farmers' Union. I also want you to know that the Farmers' Holiday Association has done more to bring to the attention of the people and all official Washington the awful conditions of the farmers than any other organization in the United States. I want you farmers to know that every foreclosure sale controlled by the Farmers' Holiday Association has caused another Congressman or Senator to think just a little deeper on these questions than they had before.

A new organization has sprung up in Wisconsin, known as the Cooperative Milk Pool. Right now they are carrying on a big milk strike that surpasses anything the Holiday Association has attempted so far. All these organizations are an indication that the spirit of 1776 still survives.

If this Nation is saved, it will be because there are farmers who have the moral courage to resist the continued mistreatment of the agricultural classes of this country.

Among the things at which you have a right to complain are the following: You are made to work harder than any other group. On an average, the homes in which you live are not as good as the average of that of any other group. You get less for your labor than any other group. You pay higher rates of interest when you borrow than any other group. You pay higher rates of interest when you borrow than any other group. You raxes are much higher than those of any other group. As a group, you are treated as inferior to other groups. You could get a thousand illustrations of this last statement.

You are disgracefully treated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

You are disgracefully treated by the Reconstruction Finance

Individual banks and individual railroads often secure loans of many millions of dollars with the collateral offered the Government sometimes less than one-third of the amount borrowed.

when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation lends to a farmer, they require such an extortion of security as to, in most instances, absolutely make impossible the securing of a loan. The following letter is a sample of the way farmers are mistreated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This letter is from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation set-up at Helena, Mont., to Mr. Emory J. LaRoche, Madoc, Mont., under date of January 20, 1933.

Dear Sir: Please be advised that your application for a loan has had the careful consideration of our loan committee, and that it has seemed inadvisable to allow the loan in the amount for which you applied. However, they have approved a loan to you of $800 to be secured by a first mortgage on your 6 cattle, 2 horses, 7 tons of hay, 4,370 bushels of wheat in bin, your 1933 crops, and all machinery and equipment as listed by the inspector. It will also be necessary that you give us a first mortgage on your real estate. We will require that your wife join you in signing the note and mortgage.

Mr. Farmer listening in, I will tell you why you are mistreated this way. It is because you have refused to join your own class organization, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America. Let me, once more, appeal to you to write E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., our national secretary and find out how you can place yourself in a position where public officials will respect and recognize you. Write to E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., and ask him how you may become a member of the farmers' union.

For lack of organization, here is what has happened to you in the last three years. Farmers sold in 1929 farm products and received therefor a total of $10,100,000,000. In 1930 they realized from their sales a total of $7,800,000,000. In 1931 they realized from their sales a total of $5,500,000,000. For the year 1932 the continued and increasing shrinkage brought the total down that farmers received from the sale of their crops to $4,000,000,000.

TARIFF AND HIGH-PRICED DOLLAR

Our high-priced dollar and our high tariffs are forcing our manufacturers to build factories in the countries where money is cheap. Hundreds of manufacturing concerns in this country have either established branch factories in foreign countries or entirely removed their manufacturing plants from this country. The tariff is made to operate against the farmer.

In 1930 the cement concerns in the United States secured a tariff on cement when the year before practically every cement company in this country was making huge profits; some of them more than 100 per cent. A wheat exporter told me that before this tariff was placed on cement, in 1930, he exported large quantities of wheat to Belgium, taking in pay therefor Belgium cement. The tariff granted our cement manufacturers completely destroyed that wheat market. The point I want to make is that the tariffs are set up almost exclusively in the interest of the manufacturers and against the interest of producers of raw materials. It makes no difference whether those raw materials come from the farms, from the mines, from the forests, or from the oil wells of our country, this Government in its tariff bills has always discriminated against these producers of raw materials. The trouble has been that those who are in control of this Government have greater interests in foreign countries than they have in this. A friend of mine from San Francisco writes: "Our country will never get back to the road toward prosperity until our national affairs are controlled by men whose controlling financial interests are within America. At present, and for a number of years last past, our financial affairs have been governed by people who have all or too large a proportion of their investments in foreign countries. They proceed on the policy of "America last" instead of "America first, last, and all the time."

STATE LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

I am glad to learn that the Farmers' Union in most of the I am glad to learn that the Farmers' Union in most of the States where the legislatures are in session are making effective fights against legislation intended to make motor transportation more expensive. The railroads of the country are getting higher freight rates to-day than they were when farmers were getting $3 a bushel for wheat and 40 cents a pound for cotton. Motor and water transportation are the only two factors that have been able to in any way curb the greed of the railroad companies. I urge you members and others listening in to continue your vigilance in this matter. lance in this matter.

lance in this matter.

The long-awaited Coolidge-Smith-Baruch transportation report which was made public on February 15 is a source of much satisfaction to farm organization leaders here who had taken an active part in presenting the farm viewpoint to this committee. Among other things this report says, "Where competition with trucks and other methods exists, it will determine rates. In other cases rates must be regulated, but the basis of cost of operation under efficient management is a better guide than any attempt to preserve capital structures regardless of economic trends."

"Neither tax nor regulation should be applied for any purpose of handicapping the march of progress for the benefit of the railroads," the report says, referring particularly to motor vehicles. It further says, "One thing is certain. Automotive transportation is an advance in the march of progress. It is here to stay.

To further says, "One thing is certain. Automotive transportation is an advance in the march of progress. It is here to stay. We can not invent restrictions for the benefit of railroads. We can only apply such regulations and assess such taxes as would be necessary if there were no railroads, and let the effect be what it may."

I hope the farmer's friends in the various State legislatures will keep this idea in mind and oppose the many proposals to increase unnecessarily motor vehicle taxes and restrictions.

THE NEW DEAL

When I talk to you four weeks from to-day, Saturday, March 25, at this same hour, there will be a new man in the White House. There will be nearly 200 new faces in the House and Senate. I believe it means a new deal.

The Democratic Party in its plaform and by utterance of its standard bearers in the last election campaign solemnly promised us farmers that if their candidates were elected they would do two things for us. First, they promised to see that we would be refinanced at lower rates of interest and long-time payments of the principal. Second, that everything possible would be done to see that we received cost of production for our products. Its candidates were elected, and I consider they are under contract to do these things. to do these things.

It is the duty of the farmers' union to assist this new President and this new Congress to carry out and fulfill to the letter these two provisions of the contract. To that end I urge each State farmers' union to organize a delegation to be sent to Washington at the time of the opening of the special session of Congress. It is the last chance. If we get needed legislation, it will be in the special session or never. I appeal to you, I beg of you, to do this at once. Write to our national secretary, E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., for full instructions about how to select and raise the necessary funds for sending a legislative delegation from your State. sary funds for sending a legislative delegation from your State.

I am your national president, I am your hired man, doing my best to put over your national legislative program here in Wash-ington. I am now calling for help. I know you will not fail me. ington.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address by Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER, the junior Senator from Montana, over a network of the National Broadcasting Co. at noon to-day, on the subject of Remonetization of Silver.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience: I am very happy to appear on this program with Mr. John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union. Mr. Simpson, in my judgment, has been carrying on a great constructive work for the farmers of this Nation, appearing before committees of Congress and urging with all the earnestness in his soul that something be done to relieve your present situation.

with all the earnestness in his soul that something be done to relieve your present situation.

He has very kindly asked me to address you to-day upon the subject of my bill (S. 2487), which I introduced into the United States Senate over a year ago, to remonetize silver and to reestablish the money of our forefathers.

As I have recently spoken over the radio on this subject, I am not going to take up some of the aspects which I have already covered but several inquiries have come to me concerning various phases of the bill which I shall try to answer.

For instance, I have here a letter from a farmer in Iowa, inquiring how the remonetization of silver on a basis of 16 to 1 is going to help him pay his interest, taxes, and mortrage on his quiring how the remonetization of silver on a basis of 16 to 1 is going to help him pay his interest, taxes, and mortgage on his farm. That is a very pertinent inquiry.

It is going to help that farmer who raises corn in Iowa because: First, it is going to raise world commodity prices; that is, it is going to raise the world price of wheat, cotton, corn. It is going to do so because of the fact that at the present time there are in the world, 60 per cent of the people using silver as their yardstick, and when you raise the price of silver you raise the price of their money. Raising the price of their money increases their cost of production and makes it impossible for them to dump their produce as they can to-day by reason of their depreciated money.

depreciated money. You good people out there on the farm have heard it repeatedly said that what is wrong with this country is an overproduction of products; and also that the machines are doing too much work and taking the place of too many men.

I am unable to subscribe to those theories. I say that there is no overproduction of corn, wheat, and other foodstuffs as long as there are millions of people anywhere in the world going hunas there are millions of people anywhere in the world going nungry, and I say that there is no overproduction of woolen goods and cotton goods as long as untold millions are ragged and half-clad for want of clothes. And there is not and can not be an overproduction of lumber, brick, and things of the sort, as long as people have to go without shelter.

My bill would make it possible for the untold millions of people throughout the rest of the world in silver-using countries to buy from our factories our manufactured goods, boots, shoes, and elothing; your corn, hogs, cattle, wheat, and cotton.

clothing; your corn, hogs, cattle, wheat, and cotton.

A banker wrote to me stating, "Why don't you use, instead of silver, aluminum or copper; why should you take silver?" The answer to that is very simple. Silver and gold have been the primary money of the world all through the ages, and something like 60 per cent of the people of the world use silver as their yardstick, for their medium of exchange to measure the price of their commodities.

For over a hundred years the financiers of the western world have sought in vain to try to get these countries to stop using silver and make gold the universal yardstick of the world. They have never succeeded in so doing, and consequently, because silver is the yardstick of 60 per cent of the people of the world, I am seeking to make their yardstick of the same length as the yardstick which we in the United States use, and by so doing, stabilize the explanar rates and currencies of the world and keep them. the exchange rates and currencies of the world and keep them from fluctuating. This would do more to stabilize your money than any other piece of legislation that is pending or has been pending before Congress.

At this point I want to earnestly and emphatically urge you not to be misled by any of the proposed methods of utilizing silver as an adjunct to or subsidiary of the single gold standard. Briefly, these measures provide for the purchase of limited quantities of silver on a fluctuating market at a price to be controlled by the Government itself. A fluctuating price on a substance used as money is unsound under every theory of economics and common sense.

and common sense

Under the limitations fixed by these proposed enactments, not be exceed $250,000,000 would be added to the circulating medium of the United States and the insignificance and futility of the United States and the insignificance and futility of such an amount in the support of a debt structure estimated at $240,000,000,000 is immediately manifest. The effect of such legislation on the ability of our silver-using customers to purchase our goods would be absolutely nil. Any measure which does not restore silver to its hereditary place side by side with gold, would have no potency whatever in raising the price of the products you farmers have for sale or those you hope to produce in the future. To adopt such makeshift measures or to reduce the weight of the gold in the dollar would mean the voluntary surrender of our export trade without which farming will continue to be unprofitable. To tell the wheat, cotton, and tobacco growers that their domestic price is fixed by world prices is as superfluous as to remind them that 2 and 2 make 4.

Neither of these other methods of modifying the monetary system would add one lota to the purchasing power of our oriental, European, or South American customers, but my bill would imme-

European, or South American customers, but my bill would immediately quadruple their purchasing power and thereby furnish you a profitable outlet for your products.

You hear it said frequently on the floor of the Senate; you heard in the recent campaign, and saw it written into the platforms of both parties that we believe in sound money. When these people talk to you about sound money what do they mean? What we want is stable money, money that will purchase the same number of bushels of wheat in 1932 that it did in 1926, so that you farmers can pay off your mortgages with the same number of bushels of wheat, cotton, and corn as you did when you horrowed it. borrowed it.

I hold in my hand a letter from a labor organization in Virginia asking this very pertinent question, Would not the remonetization of silver have the effect of lowering wages in this country? In other words, what they want to know is whether raising the price of commodities would not have the effect of reducing wages.

The answer to that is very simple. Unless the purchasing power of farmers of this country can be restored so that he can buy clothes for his children, machinery with which to carry on his work, automobiles, etc., then labor can find no employment. It is because of the fact that the farmer has no purchasing power to-day that twelve or fourteen million people are walking our streets. It is because of the fact that the farmer has no purchasing power that little banks are failing all over this country; it is because of the fact that the farmer has no purchasing power that wages are being cut in every line of industry, and unless that purchasing power can be restored you will find eighteen to twenty million people out of employment inside of a very comparatively short time. You will also see wages reduced and standards of living reduced in this country lower than they ever have been before. The laboring man who is unable to see that the thing that gives him high wages and steady employment is high commodity prices for the farmer is standing in his own light.

gives him high wages and steady employment is high commodity prices for the farmer is standing in his own light.

My bill is not in the interest of any class of people. It has heretofore had the endorsement of every labor organization in the United States; in 1896 it had the endorsement of all the great farm organizations in the United States. My bill would do more to help every class of citizen by restoring prosperity to the farmers than any other piece of legislation pending before Congress.

Why is it not passed? Because men in Congress say to me, "WHEELER, you are right, but politically it is a mistake because Mr. Bryan was defeated upon that platform in 1896. Mr. Bryan was defeated in 1896, but that is no argument against the soundness of my bill, or why it should not pass the Congress of the ness of my bill, or why it should not pass the Congress of the United States.

A very eminent leader of the Democratic Party said to me, "I think you made a mistake in taking 16 to 1; you should have taken 17 to 1 or 15½ to 1 in order to get away from the prejudice in people's minds against Mr. Bryan. I do not believe there is any prejudice in the mind of the average person against Mr. Bryan; most people feel that he was 30 years ahead of his time, but whatever may be the arguments against the remonetization of silver in 1896, can not be advanced in 1933.

If our financiers and lawmakers could forget entirely the prejudices and preconceived convictions directly traceable to that ancient campaign we would have practically a unanimous public opinion back of the free coinage of silver.

Every domestic condition and foreign contact is different now to what it was in 1896. Then every owner of a mortgage or bond very eminent leader of the Democratic Party said to me, "I to what it was in 1896. Then every owner of a mortgage or bond knew that if we remained on the gold standard he would be paid in a dearer dollar than under bimetallism—in other words, he would get more wheat, cotton, meat, clothes, or property in payment of his loan.

Now the holder of such mortgages and bonds knows that he will receive no payment at all unless the price of the products of mills, mines, and farms can be increased so that there will be a margin left above production costs from which his mortgage or bond can be paid.

The Department of Agriculture estimates that 750,000 private individuals, many of them old people who retired from active farming when incapacitated by age for the strenuous work of the farm, hold $3,000,000,000 in farm mortgages.

Payment of interest has long since ceased, and those people know full well that the mortgages will never be paid under the gold standard.

What good is it to them to tell them that the dollars which the mortgages and bonds represent are sound gold dollars when they know in their hearts that those dollars will never be paid them under this system?

In 1896 the salaried man feared deflation of the purchasing power of his fixed salary. Now he does not sleep well at night by reason of anxiety over the permanency of his job. He knows that unless business promptly improves his employer can not long em-unless business promptly improves his employer can not long employ him.

In 1896 we were a debtor Nation, owing large sums to England, France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland. Our railroads and industrial developments had been partly financed by money borrowed abroad. The American corporations owing this money needed further European credit and therefore violently assailed bimetallism as the foreign financiers advised them that unless the United States remained on the gold standard no renewals or further loans would be made. Incidentally, it may be said that even though we did stay on the gold standard the European credits were gradually withdrawn.

But we are no longer a debtor Nation: we are the greatest creditor Nation the world ever saw. Perhaps we better enjoy whatever prestige there may be in that eminence, for unless the price of world commodities is very promptly increased there will be nothing left of those foreign obligations due us except an unplease of the property were as the property were as the property were well as the property were a unpleasant memory.

So in every respect the case now is different to what it was in 1896.

It should be apparent to everyone that there is not sufficient gold in the world with which to pay our national, international, and local indebtedness. We have less than five billions of gold in the United States and debts of over $200,000,000,000. I have before me a letter from the president of a bank and trust company up in Pennsylvania, from which I quote: "The fallacy, absurdity, and physical impossibility of redeeming financial obligations in gold are apparent and need only statement of fact to carry conviction; two hundred billion debt, forty billion bank deposits, to be paid in gold with a Nation supply of less than five billion."

This banker sees the absurdity of trying to pay these debts in gold, and for that reason he is strongly in favor of my bill to remonetize silver and thereby use both gold and silver as the remonetize silver and thereby use both gold and silver as the foundation and basis of our monetary system.

The single gold standard has collapsed throughout the world since the World War, and the only way to stabilize world currencies is by fixing the ratio of value between gold and silver upon which the currencies of the world are based.

For thousands of years the money of the teeming millions in the Orient has been silver, while in western nations it was silver and gold at a fixed ratio of value between the two metals.

No great nation ever attempted to base its currency on the single gold standard prior to 1816, and for many years after that time and down to 1873 a ratio of value throughout the world was maintained between silver and gold which stabilized the exchange ratio between the currencies in all countries using either or both silver and gold.

My bill is to reestablish this bimetallic system which served humanity well for thousands of years and which was destroyed by selfish foreign banking interests in the year 1873.

On my own behalf and on behalf of the millions of honest men and women on the farms, in the shops, in the factories, and on the

and women on the farms, in the shops, in the factories, and on the streets and highways seeking honest toil, who favor the remonetization of silver, I vigorously resent the implication that to coin silver and endow it with all the basic qualities of gold money would be a dishonest thing for this Government to do.

I doubly resent it when I consider the course which inspires this charge against the advocates of bimetallism. Who are these men who undertake to speak as the exponents of a sound and honest dollar? They are the same men whose overreaching greed and stupid leadership largely contributed to the destruction of the Nation's prosperity.

We had the gold standard; we had a balanced National Budget, and, unfortunately for the people, we had a national administration which did everything possible to strengthen the power of those financial leaders.

I need not tell you the result.

I need not tell you the result.

On top of the immeasurable loss of the immediate present and the destitution and despair of our people we have lost nearly all of the gains of a quarter of a century of social progress.

And who are these men? Some of the most powerful of the group have appeared before the Banking Committee of the Senate, and the unblushing story that came from their own lips condemns them to the contempt of honest men.

them to the contempt of honest men.

An adventurous American people will not criticize too harshly mistakes of judgment or even unwise speculation, but they will never condone the violation of a fiduciary trust. These men, trusted by their depositors, stockholders, and investment clients, traded on that sacred confidence to their own profit and to the ruin of those who trusted them. And what is their alibi now? Merely that the structure of fictitious security values which they themselves had built up for the purpose of reaping profit through commissions and stock manipulation on every merger, reorganization, and reissue of stocks and bonds fell about their heads before they had time to escape with all the loot.

Who was it lost the $2,000,000,000 that vanished in thin air when the Insull bubble burst?

It was the hard-working, thrifty, frugal men and women of

It was the hard-working, thrifty, frugal men and women of modest means to whom supposedly trustworthy bankers and financiers sold the worthless securities.

There is no alibi that they did not know the facts. In cold print in the record of the Banking Committee are statements from bank presidents acknowledging that affiliate companies owned 100 bank presidents acknowledging that affiliate companies owned 100 per cent by their banks continued to sell these securities to the public when all the assets of these Insuli companies were already held by the banks on loans so large that the total assets could not possibly cover the obligations.

These are the same people who filled our schools and colleges with propaganda denouncing as radicals all public men who undertook to break their strangle hold on the industry, commerce, and finance of the Nation.

Not only did they plunder the investor but through fraudulent overcapitalization of these public utilities they fastened upon the consumers of light, gas, water, and power prices for these necessities that were insupportable even in prosperous times and are ruinous in times like these.

But this is only part of the picture and in some respects not the worst part.

Insull sought sanctuary in a foreign land to escape the reach of the law and the just wrath of an outraged people, but the representatives of one of the world's largest banking institutions testifying before the same committee shocked the moral conscience of the entire Nation. They tell us we must not speak of those things above a whisper lest the people lose confidence in our financial institutions. our financial institutions.

our financial institutions.

To that I reply that nothing will restore confidence in our banking structure more promptly than demostrated proof that we have a Government that has the courage and integrity to prosecute with equal vigor these malfactors of great wealth as well as the humbler offenders.

The public confidence in these institutions will never be restored until the people are convinced that their Government with all its majesty and power stands ready to visit its just wrath on any and all people who betray the public trust.

Shall the people continue to look for leadership to those financiers despite the irrefutable proof of their rapacity and selfishness?

selfishness?

Like their predecessors of times past who conspired to demone-tize silver in order that the gold which they controlled would make them masters of the world's business activities, these men hope to perpetuate a system through which they control the destinies of nations to their own personal profit.

No other measure that might be enacted into law would so promptly and effectively deprive them of that control as the Wheeler bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Enact that law and once again silver which for 50 centuries was the medium of exchange in 90 per cent of all the business activities of mankind will again serve faithfully and well the needs of the common people.

Arizona, and upon the submission of satisfactory proof that the land selected contains saguaro groves or growths of giant cacti or are necessary for the care, protection, and conservation of such groves or growths, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to issue therefor: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, or other mineral contained in such lands together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same at such times and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

DISPOSAL OF MONEY OR PROPERTY IN CUSTODY OF PROPERTY CLERK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13378) to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 416 of the Revised Statutes

Be it enacted, etc., That section 416 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended by striking out the word "fifty," where it occurs in said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five hundred,"

SEC. 2. That section 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 417. All property, except perishable property and animals, that shall remain in the custody of the property clerk for the period of six months, with the exception of motor vehicles, which shall be held for a period of three months without any lawful period of six months, with the exception of motor vehicles, which shall be held for a period of three months, without any lawful claimant thereto after having been three times advertised in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia, shall be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the policemen's fund; and all money that shall remain in his hands for said period of six months shall be so advertised, and if no lawful claimant appear shall be likewise paid into the policemen's fund."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas explain that bill?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is well set forth in the report accompanying the bill, from which I quote as follows:

Under section 416 of the Revised Statutes of the District, the property clerk is made custodian for money or property of deceased persons coming into the hands of the police department. If the value of any such estate exceeds $50 and has not been claimed by legal representatives of the deceased in the course of a year, the property clerk is required to certify all records pertaining thereto to the District probate court, which shall appoint an administrator of the estate.

The commissioners have informed the committee that in many cases the "entire estate of the deceased is kept in the jurisdiction of the property clerk and the cost of securing letters of administration would practically wipe out the estate."

The bill proposes to amend this section by requiring the court procedure only in cases involving estates of $100 or more.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why does the bill make an exception in the case of automobiles?

Mr. CAPPER. That was the recommendation of the District Commissioners, and on that point they say:

The amendment proposed to this section is to reduce the period The amendment proposed to this section is to reduce the period for holding certain property from six months to three months. This change will not only save considerable administrative work, but will result in a considerable saving to the Government through a reduction in the requirements for storage space. Particularly is this true of the case of automobiles, most of which that are received by the property clerk are junk. If the legislation should not be enacted the demand for storage space for old cars coming within the custody of the police department will be increased.

That is the statement of President Reichelderfer of the District Commissioners.

Since this bill was reported the commissioners have asked that we strike out the words "five hundred" and insert "one hundred." That is on the first page, line 6. The committee is agreeable to that amendment, and I offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 5053, with identical title to House bill 13378, will be indefinitely postponed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to reserve and set aside for Indian-village purposes, and to survey and plat into village blocks, lots, streets, and alleys, a suitable area of land within the Shoalwater (Georgetown) Reservation, and thereafter dispose of the village lots in accordance with section 10 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. 855-858).

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion to expend so much of the $15.150 derived from

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to expend so much of the $15,150 derived from the sale of timber on the reservation and now carried in "special deposits" to the credit of the Superintendent of the Taholah Agency, as may be needed to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act and to assist the Indians who receive lots, in developing the village and building homes therein, including the construction of such water and sewage facilities as may be practicable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether or not the passage of this measure is desired by the Indians?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; it is. There are a few families that go to these waters to fish. They have enough money to put up homes; and the Government will furnish, out of money of their own, a little land there for them to build upon. It is a very important measure to that little band of Indians.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11735) to permanently set aside certain lands in Utah as an addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all vacant, unreserved, and undisposed of public lands within the areas in the southern part of the State of Utah, bounded as follows: Beginning at a point where the San Juan River intersects the one hundred and tenth degree of west longitude; thence down said river to its confluence with the Colorado River; thence down the Colorado River to a point where said river crosses the boundary line between Utah and Arizona; thence east along said boundary line to the one hundred and tenth degree of west longitude; thence north to the place of beginning; also beginning at a point where the west rim of Montezuma Creek or wash intersects the north boundary line of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Utah; thence northerly along the western rim of said creek or wash to a point where it intersects the section line running east and west between sections 23 and 26, township 39 south, range 24 east, Salt Lake base and meridian in Utah; thence eastward along said section line to the northeast section corner of section 26, township 39 south, range 25 east; thence south 1 mile along the section line between sections 25 and 26 to the southeast section corner of section 26, township 39 south, range 25 east; thence eastward along the section line between sections 25 and 36, township 39 south, range 25 east, extending through township 39 south, range 26 east, to its intersection with the boundary line between Utah and Colorado; thence south along said boundary line to its intersection with the north boundary line of the Navajo Indian Reservation; thence in a westerly direction along the north boundary line of said reservation to the point of beginning be, and the same are hereby, permanently withdrawn from all forms of entry or disposal for the benefit of the Navajo and such other Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to settle thereon: Provided, That no further allotments of lands to Indians on the public domain shall be made in San Juan County, Utah, nor shall further Indian homesteads be made in said county under the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. 96; U. S. C., title 43, sec. 190). Should oil or gas be produced in paying quantities within the lands hereby added to the Navajo Reservation, 37½ per cent of the net royalties accruing therefrom derived from tribal leases shall be paid to the State of Utah: Provided, That said 37½ per cent of said royalties shall be expended by the State of Utah in the tuition of Indian children in white schools and/or in the building or maintenance of roads across the lands described in section 1 hereof, or for the benefit of the Indians residing therein.

Sec. 2. That the State of Utah may relinquish such tracts of section 1 hereof, or for the benefit of the Indians residing therein. SEC. 2. That the State of Utah may relinquish such tracts of school land within the areas added to the Navajo Reservation by section 1 of this act as it may see fit in favor of the said Indians, and shall have the right to select other unreserved and non-mineral public lands contiguously or noncontiguously located within the State of Utah, equal in area and approximately of the same value to that relinquished, said lieu selections to be made in the same manner as is provided for in the enabling act of July 16, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 107), except as to the payment of fees or commissions which are hereby waived.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether, in the consideration of this bill, there was any evidence that there were valid claims of white settlers within the territory which this bill proposes to have detached from the public domain permanently and turned over to the Indians.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a House bill. I understand from the Secretary's report that the objections that were made by the white landowners there have been overcome, and that it is satisfactory. This is a measure that has been hanging fire for years, relating to what is known as the Piute Strip.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that there sometimes have been withdrawals by Executive orders of large portions of the public domain without regard to the valid rights of settlers within the territory so withdrawn. If there are no conflicting rights, I am in sympathy with the proposition.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, the department has taken care of those conflicting interests.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HINTAH, WHITE RIVER, AND UNCOMPANGER INDIANS OF HEAH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LANDS IN OTTAWA COUNTY, OKLA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5427) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain lands in Ottawa County, Okla., which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, for Indian school purposes, the east half southwest quarter, southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half northwest quarter and west half southwest quarter southeast quarter section 21, township 27 north, range 24 east, Indian meridian, Oklahoma

Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the provisions of section 1 hereof there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States and otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, which said sum when so appropriated and placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians, shall operate as a full, complete, and provided actions the property of all their right, title and interest in and perfect extinguishment of all their right, title, and interest in and to the lands above described and which sum shall be subject to disbursement under congressional authority for the benefit of the Wyandotte Tribe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of this bill from the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in northeast Oklahoma we have an Indian school known as the Seneca Indian Boarding School. The school is located on lands belonging to the Wyandotte Tribe. The title is in the tribe of Wyandottes. The Government has largely improved this site, so that now it has improvements to the extent of 28 buildings, worth about $135,000.

We appropriate each year about $82,000 to maintain the school; but the school has been enlarged and is now used by all tribes. The Wyandottes think it is unfair to use their lands indefinitely for school sites for all tribes of Indians. Besides, the Government has appropriated this vast sum of money to construct a school on land that belongs to one particular tribe.

This bill proposes to take over this land and make it Government property-not only the buildings but the land itself. It authorizes an appropriation of $10,000 at some time in the future to pay the Wyandotte Tribe for the land. The $10,000, when appropriated, will go into the Treasury to be spent by the Congress for the benefit of the Wyandotte Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located.'

ALLOTMENTS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The bill (S. 5483) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior in behalf of Indians to purchase the allotments of deceased Indians, and for other purposes, was announced as next in

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota explain that bill and how much it will cost?

Mr. FRAZIER. No appropriation is provided in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it authorizes an appropriation. Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. According to the commissioner's report it maye take as much as $100,000 later on, in small amounts. I have several amendments, however, that are deemed advisable. The department has recommended these amendments, and I wish to submit the amendments, which I I send to the desk.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is conceded that the system of dealing with allotted lands, especially the allotted lands of deceased persons, is to be changed—there is to be a complete modification of the present system under which the title goes to the Indians, and when they die the lands do not go to their heirs, but are sold-it seems to me that it is unwise now to provide for the Government purchasing these allotments. I think that the lands ought to go into the tribe instead of being purchased and then sold to white people.

I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes; I will do it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Under the present system, where an Indian dies who owns allotted property the property must be sold and divided among the heirs. Generally speaking, the white people buy that property and come in and own land right in and around the reservation, which oftentimes causes a good deal of trouble. This bill would provide that the heirs of the deceased might buy the land, or the tribe might buy the land for tribal purposes; or, in some cases where the tribes have no money the money would be furnished by the Government. Under this bill the money would have to be appropriated. It means the prevention of breaking up the Indian tribal lands.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that I am now working on a bill under the terms of which this vicious system of allotments, followed by the dispossession of the Indians when the allottee dies, will be done away with. In view of that fact, and the fact that legislation dealing with Indian lands will certainly be enacted at the next session of Congress, I think this bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

COLLECTION OF FEES FOR WORK DONE FOR INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 10086) to amend the act of February 14, 1920, authorizing and directing the collection of fees for work done for the benefit of Indians, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the item contained in the act approved February 14, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 415; U. S. C., title 25, sec. 413), authorizing and directing the collection of fees to cover the cost of certain specified work performed for the benefit of Indians, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to collect reasonable fees to cover the cost of any and all work performed by Indian tribes or for individual Indians, to be paid by vendees, lessees, or assignees, or deducted from the proceeds of sales, leases, or other sources of revenue: Provided, That the amounts so collected shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, except when the expenses of the work as miscellaneous receipts, except when the expenses of the work are paid from Indian tribal funds, in which event they shall be credited to such funds."

REPEAL OF OBSOLETE SECTIONS OF REVISED STATUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9877) to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is an important bill, but it has been pending here for a long time. I do not feel justified in objecting to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to have some assurance from the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] that the bill has been carefully drafted. It repeals a great many sections of the code, which sections are alleged to be obsolete.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator from Delaware answers the able Senator from Arkansas will he permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HASTINGS. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], can answer the Senator's question better than I can. I remember something about it, but I know that the chairman of the committee will be better able than I am to respond to the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say that this bill has been pending here for a long time. It was reported once by the Judiciary Committee and then referred back by the Senate to the committee. The Senator will realize that the bill is a very difficult one. It is, however, one that requires a great deal of care and a great deal of attention.

The committee had the matter up again and referred it to a subcommittee, of which the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] was chairman. He reported it favorably to the full committee, after a reexamination of all the statutes proposed to be repealed.

Of course, necessarily we had to depend on an examination being made by a competent person, who should review the matter again, to see that no mistake had been made. That work has all been done, and we have recommended that the bill be passed. It is a bill which has passed the House, and necessarily a great deal of additional labor will be entailed if the bill is not enacted at this session of the Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it ought to be disposed of now, if it is practicable to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. We are satisfied that the work was done satisfactorily, and the committee was unanimous in making

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With the assurance the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has given, I shall make no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. The Senator will recall that Senator Ernst, when in the Senate, spent several years in working out a codification of the Statutes of the United States. My understanding was that that codification eliminated obsolete laws, and I was wondering whether all of the provisions carried in the pending bill are to be found in the codification.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is wrong about the elimination of all obsolete laws being taken care of in the bill sponsored by Senator Ernst. That was a codification, but I think it included a good many laws which were obsolete and had been repealed.

Mr. KING. The Senator may be correct, but my recollection was that when Senator Ernst made his report and the matter was sent back to him it was with the understanding that laws clearly obsolete should be omitted from the codification.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will remember that when we passed the measure covering that codification we finally agreed upon an amendment that the statutes included in the codification, known as the Code of Laws, would be prima facie evidence, when they were offered, but only prima facie evidence, that they stated the law, and that if it were shown in any case that they conflicted with other statutes there should be a decision as to which stated the law. In other words, it was not the intention of the codification to repeal any law. This measure does repeal obsolete statutes.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the pending bill and the next bill on the calendar are in the same category. Mr. Fitzgerald, of the House of Representatives, devoted a great deal of time and attention to the revision of the code. He put a great deal of painstaking effort into eliminating the obsolete sections of the code. As the Senator from Nebraska has stated the general history of these matters before the Committee on the Judiciary, I simply want to add that the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], to whom, as chairman of a subcommittee, were referred these two bills, reported to the full committee that he had caused a very careful review to be made of all the sections alleged to be obsolete, that he had had that work done by a very competent clerk in his office, that the work had been submitted to him, and, while the Senator did not want it understood that he had made a careful, detailed study of the various provisions repealed, yet he was convinced, from a general review of the work that had been done by a member of his office force, that there was no question | R. S. 1205 but that the obsolete sections proposed to be repealed should

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to add, for the benefit of the Senate, the statement that, of course, no member of the Committee on the Judiciary can say that he has personally examined all these statutes; it must be quite evident to the Senate that it would be almost a physical impossibility for a Senator to take the time to go over them all; it would be a terrible task. A Member of the House did that, however. Really, a competent attorney should have been employed to go through these statutes and make the examination.

Mr. WATSON. How many of them are there?
Mr. NORRIS. There is a large number of them. If one should go through them in detail in an effort to satisfy himself that the list given covered all statutes which had been repealed and which should be stricken from the statute books, it would probably take him two or three months. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] devoted considerable time to the matter, but, of course, he did not claim that he examined the statutes personally. He supervised the work done by a member of his office force and no errors were found. It was found that everything that had come from the House was correct.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of Senators to the report made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], stating that every section had been thoroughly studied by the executive department concerned, the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress, and the House Committee on Revision of the Laws, as well as by the Senate committee itself.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think we ought to pass the bill. If it includes some statutes by mistake, it probably would be just as well to have them repealed anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the

The amendment of the committee was, on page 7, column 4, to strike out "R. S. 5599," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sections of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the same as Calendar 1362, House bill 13960, and without objection the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13960) to amend the description of land described in section 1 of the act approved February 14, 1931, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to establish the Canyon De Chelly National Monument within the Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4380) for the relief of Patrick Henry Walsh, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$15,000" and to insert in lieu thereof $3.000," so as to read:

SALE OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 5470) authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill being identical with Calendar 1317, House bill 14340, if there is no objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Kansas will explain this bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, these two bills are exactly alike. The purpose of the bill is to permit the District Commissioners to sell the old Potomac School property in southwest Washington. The property is no longer used for school purposes, and no suitable municipal use can be made of it.

The property is now located in the wholesale-market area. The commissioners are informed that a more advantageous price can be secured now than might be the case later. Several property owners are interested in its purchase.

The bill provides for sale of the property to the highest bidder "at public or private sale as in their-the commissioners'-opinion may be most advantageous to the District of Columbia." The auditor of the District of Columbia, at the committee's hearing on this bill, stated that the commissioners desired the authority to sell the property at private sale, if, after offering it for sale publicly, they received no satisfactory bids for purchase. Advertisement and an effort to sell the property publicly would precede any attempt to sell privately, the committee was assured.

Mr. McKELLAR. What the Senator has stated is not exactly what the bill would effect? The bill provides that the commissioners may sell the property at either public or private sale. No limit is put on the price. This is a very bad time for the sale of real estate, and it seems to me it would be a very unhappy time to put the property on the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator to ask that the bill go over?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the unfinished business, and will be passed over.

PROOF OF CLAIMS IN BANKRUPTCY CASES

The bill (S. 5394) to amend section 57 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, with respect to proof and allowance of claims by trustees for bondholders, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment? If he will read the report, he will see that this is a very carefully drawn bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I withhold the objection; but I thought that, since the general matter of bankruptcy laws was before the Senate, this should go over to be considered in connection with the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

SENECA INDIANS IN NEW YORK STATE

The bill (S. 5302) to amend the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations," approved January 5, 1927, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the numerals "1927," to insert "(44 Stat. L. 932)"; and, in the same line, after the word "hereby," to strike out:

Amended to read as follows: "That the Seneca Nation of Indians shall have the exclusive right to take fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations in the State of New York without regard to the laws of such State relating to the taking of fish and game; and such Seneca Nation shall have the exclusive authority through its counsel to prescribe rules and regulations governing the taking of fish and game in such reservations and to punish any violations thereof, and to issue permits and licenses for such taking of fish and game;

And to insert in lieu thereof "repealed," so as to make the bill read:

over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations," approved January 5, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 932), is hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] whether this does not deprive the Indians of a right which under existing law they have?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; it gives them the right to fish on their own land. The old law enacted in 1927 put the Seneca Indian Reservation under the State law. I have a letter this morning with reference to three Indians who have been arrested for fishing in little streams on their own reservation contrary to the State law. We had hearings and there were about a dozen Indians here with their attorney. I think it meets with general approval.

Mr. KING. I have had some complaints from the Indians in New York to the effect that they were not receiving adequate protection from the State. I approve of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think I am in agreement with the purpose of the bill, and I shall not object to its passage. However, I want to serve notice that I may desire to ask for a reconsideration.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to repeal the act entitled 'An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations,' approved January 5, 1927."

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT TEACHERS' SALARY ACT

The bill (H. R. 12595) to amend the teachers' salary act of the District of Columbia, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, in relation to establishing the Wilson and Miner Teachers Colleges on a basis comparable with recognized standards for accredited institutions of like kind; to raising the trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. CAPPER. We had long hearings on this bill. I do not recall whether the Senator was present or not, but the committee was unanimous in approving the bill. It does not cost any money, but it places these teachers in line for recognition.

Mr. KING. There has been some complaint to me about this bill as well as the one which was passed over previously; and this is not the one the Senator from Kansas has in mind, because this is the House bill. It is alleged that it contains some discriminations. In view of the fact that we are to have a morning hour next Monday, I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

ACTION FOR DAMAGES AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 13750) to regulate the bringing of actions for damages against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what was done with Order of Business 1314?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was passed out of order. When we reached the identical Senate bill a substitution was made and this number was passed and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

Mr. NORRIS. I was asked by my colleague's secretary to object to a bill, and I am not sure whether this is the one or not. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPERl about Order of Business No. 1314. What is the object of that bill?

Mr. CAPPER. The bill proposes to amend the law relating to estates of deceased persons which come under the police department. The Senate bill carries out the recommendations of the commissioners and federation of busi-Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction remaining unclaimed with the police for a full year should ness associations, namely, that estates under $100 in value be exempted from the provisions of law requiring the pro-bate court to appoint administrators. The present limit is $50, and that is very unsatisfactory. The House bill proposes to raise the limit to $100.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think that is the bill to which my attention was directed. Is there a bill on the calendar reported from the District Committee in regard to the gas companies in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAPPER. That has not as yet been reached. Mr. McNARY. It is on page 17 of the calendar, Order No. 1339.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that is the bill my colleague had in mind. I have no objection to the bill just reported.

There being no objection, House bill 13750 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no action shall be maintained against the District of Columbia for unliquidated damages to person or property unless the claimant within six months after the injury or damage was sustained, he, his agent, or attorney gave notice in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the approximate time, place, cause, and circumstances of such injury or damage: Provided, however, That a report in writing by the Metropolitan police department, in regular course of duty, shall be regarded as a sufficient notice under the above provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Calendar No. 1274, the identical Senate bill, is indefinitely post-

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE

The bill (H. R. 14204) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 653 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," as amended by the act of Congress approved August 15, 1911, which said provision reads: "Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money, as the act of the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia as un of money as the constant of all moneys received from members of tax, equal to 1 per cent of all moneys received from members of policy or certificate holders within the District of Columbia, said tax to be paid on or before the 1st day of March of each year on tax to be paid on or before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31, next preceding;" is hereby amended to read:

"Every such company or association shall pay to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia a sum of money as taxes equal to 1½ per cent of its net premium receipts from business done in the District of Columbia, said taxes to be paid before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of such income for the year ending December 31, next preceding, in lieu of all other taxes, except taxes upon real estate and any license fees provided for in sections 654 and 655; and upon the failure of any company to pay said taxes before March 1, as aforesaid, and license of said company shall be revoked and a penalty of 8 per cent per month shall be charged against said company, which, together with said taxes, shall be collected before said company shall be allowed to resume business." resume business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business No. 1275, the bill (S. 5436) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, is indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5219) to provide funds for cooperation with the Minnesota State Board of Control in the extension of the Minnesota State Sanatorium at Ah-Gwah-Ching, Minn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

The bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT

The bill (S. 5337) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, to permit loans for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to withhold his objection just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill has been approved by the Treasury Department and approved by the Federal Farm Board and approved by the various farm organizations. I do not know of anybody who is objecting to it. I can state in just a moment an analysis of its provisions.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon further examination I find the bill is not the one I thought it was. Therefore, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "such association to indorse such loans," and to insert "the bank to accept applications from such associations"; on page 7. line 11, after the word "collateral" to insert "if otherwise eligible under the provisions of such sections"; on page 7, line 15, to strike out "if said mortgage is otherwise eligible under the provisions of said sections"; and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

and to accept payment of the aggregate amount of such principal on an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable semiannual installments sufficient to cover the interest payable thereon and in addition thereto such amounts to be applied on the principal after the expiration of the period of deferment as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not more than forty years from the date of such agreement.

On page 8, line 23, to strike out as follows:

(a) To pay off consolidated farm-loan bonds issued in behalf said bank as they mature.

(b) To purchase at or below par consolidated Federal farmloan bonds.

(c) To loan on first mortgages on farm lands within the land-bank district, qualified under this act as collateral security for the issue of farm-loan bonds.

(d) To purchase United States Government bonds.

The farm-loan bonds, first mortgages, United States Government bonds, or cash constituting the trust fund aforesaid shall be forthwith deposited with the farm-loan registrar as substituted collaterial security in place of the sums paid on principal of the mortgages held by him in trust—

And to insert in lieu thereof-in the manner provided in section 22 with respect to payments on principal of first mortgages held as collateral for farm-loan bonds of individual banks.

So as to make the bill read:

Except as herein otherwise specifically provided, all provisions of this act applicable with respect to loans made through national farm loan associations shall, in so far as practicable, apply with respect to such direct loans, and the Federal Farm Loan Board is authorized to make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary with respect to such direct loans.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in looking over the bill I notice it involves a great many matters that are rather important. Has it been given such consideration that we ought to pass it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely. It was referred to a special subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee and hearings were had. It is approved by the Treasury, the Farm Loan Board, and by various farm organizations. I do not know of a single objection to it.

Mr. FESS. Was it reported unanimously?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; it was reported unanimously.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but I would like to have the Senator from Florida indicate briefly what the bill provides. I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill seeks to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, so as to permit loans by Federal land banks for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the making of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks.

The first section of the bill provides that whenever it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm-loan associations have not been formed in any locality in the continental United States, or that farmers residing in the territory covered by the charter of a national farm-loan association are unable to apply to the Federal land bank of the district for loans on account of the inability of such association to indorse such loans, the Federal Farm Loan Board, may, in its discretion, authorize said banks to make direct loans to borrowers secured by first mortgages.

Another section provides for reamortization of such loans where payments have been made for a number of years and now they want an additional loan perhaps.

Another provision is that they may issue consolidated bonds by all the banks, thinking they may get a lower rate of interest.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it enlarge the powers of the Federal land bank?

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it give them any greater privilege than they have now?

Mr. FLETCHER. No, except they can make individual loans in certain instances.

Mr. GEORGE. That is permissive, as I understand it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I apprehend they would not exercise the privilege because $125,000,000 was appropriated to them at the last session and yet the land banks have failed to make loans to farmers.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator. The bill has been thoroughly considered, and the Farm Loan Board and the agricultural associations appealed to us to pass the bill to give some measure of relief.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It also liberalizes the provisions of existing law with respect to the purposes for which loans may be made. Is not that true?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true. The matter has been thoroughly examined, and there is no objection to the bill. It is a Senate bill and must go to the House. The House will have a chance to act on it next Monday if we pass it now. I hope the Senator will allow it to be passed.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not objecting to the bill, but I can not vote to enlarge the powers of the Federal land banks on the theory that they are going to be of assistance to the farmer. I well recall that we appropriated $125,000,000 to the Federal land banks and they used it primarily for the benefit of themselves or the bondholders. I am not interested in giving them further power. This bill seems to me to be in the interest of the borrower if the land bank would exercise the additional power which is given. I am concerned only that further extension of power to the Federal land banks be not granted.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not do that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. I understand that there were floated several million dollars last year for these Federal land banks, which ostensibly was for the purpose of easing collections against the farmers, but that a large part of that money was used to buy in some of their own unmatured bonds at depreciated prices. I have that information.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is referring to the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has in mind the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The joint-stock land banks did not receive any assistance from the Federal Government. Mr. LONG. It was the Federal land banks in this in-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The appropriations that were made were $25,000,000 for extensions and $100,000,000, as I remember, for additional capitalization with a view of making new loans. I do not think it is accurate to say that they did not make extensions. They did make a great many extensions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly, and they made some new loans, too.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. They made few new loans, comparatively speaking.

Mr. GEORGE. They made so few that the appropriation turned out to be a grant merely for the benefit of the bondholders.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It was confined to the Federal land banks and did not extend to the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. GEORGE. The joint-stock land banks were not the beneficiaries of the appropriation made at the last session of Congress.

Mr. LONG. I have a telegram this morning from a banker in Lafayette, La., who says that for the Federal land bank of the New Orleans district there was allotted $12,000,000 for the purpose of granting relief to the farmers; that was the share of that district of the money appropriated. I have not looked it up to see just how accurate it is, but instead of making this kind of extensions to the farmers, they had taken a great deal of this money and bought up their own unmatured bonds at depreciated prices, which they now could buy for much less. That is the information coming to me directly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator's correspondent is in error. They have not bought up their unmatured bonds at all

Mr. LONG. I checked that up with another Member of the Senate who has checked it up, the Senator from Mississippi, and he informed me that according to his understanding that was true; that they had been doing that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. This has nothing to do with what he has in mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record an analysis of the bill and also a letter from Mr. Chester H. Gray.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The analysis and letter are as follows:

ANALYSIS OF BILL S. 5337

The bill seeks to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, so as to permit loans by Federal land banks for additional purposes, to extend the powers of Federal land banks in the major of direct loans, to authorize upon certain terms the reamortization of loans by Federal and joint-stock land banks, and "for other purposes."

The first section of the bill would provide that whenever it

The first section of the bill would provide that whenever it should appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farmloan associations have not been formed in any locality in the continental United States, or that farmers residing in the territory covered by the charter of a national farm-loan association are unable to apply to the Federal land bank of the district for loans on account of the inability of such association to indorse such loans, the Federal Farm Loan Board may, in its discretion, authorize said bank to make direct loans to borrowers secured by first mortgages. With certain exceptions mentioned in the bill, these direct loans would be made in accordance with the provisions of the farm loan act applicable to loans made through national farm-loan associations. The rate of interest paid by borrowers would, under the terms of the bill, be 1½ per cent in excess of the rate borne by the last preceding issue of farm-loan bonds of the Federal land bank making the loans.

Each borrower who would obtain a direct loan from a Federal

Each borrower who would obtain a direct loan from a Federal land bank would be required to subscribe to the stock of the bank in the sum of $5 for each $100 or fraction thereof borrowed. This stock would be held by the bank as collateral security for

The bill would also require each borrower to covenant in his mortgage that, whenever 10 or more borrowers who have obtained from a Federal land bank direct loans aggregating not less than $20,000, and who reside in a locality which may, in the opinion of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be conveniently covered by the charter of and served by a national farm-loan association, he would unite with such other borrower to form a national farm-loan association. The section would provide also that as soon as the organization of the association had been approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, the stock in the Federal land bank held by each of the members would be canceled at par, and in lieu thereof such members would receive an equal amount of lieu thereof such members would receive an equal amount of stock in the association; and that, upon the granting of the charter by the Federal Farm Loan Board, the interest rate paid by each charter member of the association whose loan is in good standing must, beginning with his next regular installment date, "be reduced to the rate of interest paid by borrowers on new loans made through national farm-loan associations in the same Federal land bank district at the time the said loan was made to such charter member."

Under the terms of the proposed bill charges to be paid by applicants for loans and borrowers through national farm-loan associations.

The enactment of this provision would permit the Federal land banks to extend credit to many deserving borrowers residing in various sections of the United States. At present these borrowers are unable to obtain loans through the national farm-loan associations serving these localities due to the financial difficulties in which the associations find themselves. In some instances situations of this character have been met by extending the territory of other associations in good financial condition or through the formation of new associations. There are, however, many localities in which neither of these methods can be followed. Therefore, in order to preserve the cooperative features of the Federal land bank system it would seem to be desirable to permit the banks to make direct loans only under the conditions stated in the bill.

Section 2 would amend section 12 of the Federal farm loan act

Section 2 would amend section 12 of the Federal farm loan act Section 2 would amend section 12 of the Federal farm loan act by removing some of the restrictions with respect to the purposes for which loans may be made by Federal land banks. At present section 12 of the act provides that no loans shall be made by a Federal land bank to liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgage-incurred proir to January 1, 1922. The proposed amendment to section 12 would permit the banks to make loans to liquidate indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1933, and to make loans to provide the owner of the land mortgaged with funds for general agricultural uses. If the amendment is adopted, it will permit the banks to make loans to a number of deserving borrowers who are not eligible to borrow under the present law borrowers who are not eligible to borrow under the present law and are now unable to obtain funds from other sources to carry on their necessary operations.

Section 3 would amend section 13 of the act by adding at the end thereof a new provision which would permit the banks, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, to reamortize, in whole or in part, the aggregate amount remaining unpaid under the terms of any mortgage and to accept payment of such amount over an aggregate period of not more than 40 years from the data. over an agreed period of not more than 40 years from the date of the reamortization. This amendment would serve a very useof the reamortization. This amendment would serve a very useful purpose. At present the banks hold a great many mortgages in connection with which they have been obliged to pay taxes on the property and premiums on fire-insurance policies covering the insurable improvements thereon. Many of these mortgages also have an accumulation of delinquent installments. Due to the existence of junior liens on the property and for other reasons it is not possible in a number of cases to refinance the borrower's indebtedness by making him a new loan. In order to permit such borrowers to retain their homes it is necessary to spread out the payment of their accumulated indebtedness over a considerable period of time and to reduce, if possible, the amount of their semiannual installments required by their mortgages. Ordinarily, in order to afford any substantial relief to borrowers under such circumstances, it would be necessary for the banks to extend the time of payment beyond the original life of the loan. Extensions of this character would be permitted under the proposed amendment. amendment.

In every case where a reamortization agreement of this character is made varying the terms of an existing mortgage it would be necessary, of course, for the bank to obtain an opinion of its counsel stating that the agreement had not affected the priority of the mortgage; that the mortgage would continue to be a valid first lien and that the agreement would be valid and binding on all parties. In most States the extension of the original maturity of amounts due under the terms of a mortgage does not date of amounts due under the terms of a mortgage does not affect its status as a first lien.

Section 5 would amend section 19 of the Federal farm loan act so as to permit a Federal land bank to defer, over a period of not more than five years, the collection of the principal portion of the maturing installments of its mortgages without affecting their eligibility as collateral for farm-loan bonds. Under the provisions of the farm loan act the banks undoubtedly have the power to waive the collection of principal payments where conditions justify such action. On the other hand, the law requires that loans made by Federal land banks shall be repaid on an amortization plan "by means of a fixed number of annual or semiannual installments" as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period of not less than 5 or more than 40 years. In view of this provision it is felt that, if a bank should agree to defer the collection of the principal portion of maturing installments over a period of years, the eligibility of the mortgage as collateral for bonds might be affected. By permitting the banks to defer principal payments and at the same time not affect the eligibility of the mortgages as collateral many borrowers would be permitted to reduce the amount of their installment payments during this period of disastrously low commodity prices. The following figures will show the extent of relief which this plan would provide under various circumstances:

	Number of install- ments paid	Total amount of next semi- annual install- ment	Interest portion of next install- ment	Principal portion of next installment
				Amount	Per cent of total install- ment

	30	318, 75	68. 75	250. 00	78. 4

It will be seen from the foregoing figures that in the case of the loan of $10,000 bearing 6 per cent interest and repayable in 33 years by semiannual installments and has been in existence for a period of 5 years, by waiving the collection of principal the borrower's installment would be reduced 19.2 per cent. If the loan had run for 10 years, a 25.8 per cent saving would be effected. If the loan was 15 years old, the saving would amount to 34.7 per cent. per cent

A general average of the relative extent of relief which would be A general average of the relative extent of relief which would be afforded by this plan is furnished by payment of the principal of delinquent installments and total delinquent installments as of October 31, 1932. The principal portion of delinquent installments of the 12 Federal land banks represented 27.2 per cent of their total delinquencies. On the average therefor the plan would provide relief to the extent of 27.2 per cent of present installment payments. It would not be possible, of course, for the banks to announce a general policy of waiving principal payments on their loans. Each case would have to be considered on its individual merits.

Section 6 proposes certain amendments to the provisions of the act with respect to the issuance of consolidated bonds. These amendments are in the main intended merely to clarify the present amendments are in the main intended merely to clarify the present procedure provided in the law. However, the last paragraph of the section is new and would permit the Federal land banks to exchange consolidated bonds for bonds previously issued by them individually. Consolidated bonds would be the joint and several obligations of all of the 12 Federal land banks. It is the opinion of some of those who have made a close study of the situation that it might be possible for the banks to refinance their high-rate bonds through the issuance of lower-rate consolidated bonds. On Sentember 30, 1932, the bents had outsteading in excess of On September 30, 1932, the banks had outstanding in excess of $160,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds. On the same date they had outstanding in excess of $131,000,000 of 4.75 bonds. If the banks are enabled to refinance these high-rate bonds through the issuance of lower-rate consolidated bonds, the saving thus effected would inverte the heapest of the horrowers. inure to the benefit of the borrowers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1933.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1933.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Fletcher: I am glad to know that your measure, S. 5337, has been reported to the Senate by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate.

The American Farm Bureau Federation ordinarily in times past has not been in favor of direct loans in the farm-loan system, but has not been in favor of direct loans in the farm-loan system, but as this proposition is set up in your measure, requiring each borrower to take stock in the system and to form a new national farm-loan association under certain conditions, it seems to remove any opposition to direct loans which farmers might have expressed. What we are most desirous of accomplishing in these times of great need for more elastic credit facilities is to reach out to the individual farmer who needs better treatment in regard to his farm mortgages. This seems to be well handled in your pending measure and does not sacrifice the cooperative or mutual aspects of the Federal farm loan act, as originally designed by its writers years ago.

years ago.

Trusting you can get action upon this measure in the near future, and with highest personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

ARRIVAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,

American Farm Bureau Federation, Chester H. Gray, Washington Representative.

COLLECTION OF JUDGMENTS AGAINST PAN AMERICAN PETROLEUM CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered, which had been re-ported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out the word "approximately," so as to make the joint resolution read:

resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized, in connection with collection of amounts due the United States of America under a certain judgment for $9,277,666.17 entered in the office of the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California at Los Angeles on January 14, 1933, against the Pan American Petroleum Co., a corporation, to release from claim or lien under said judgment such part or portions of the property and assets of the said Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California, in such manner and with such reservations as shall seem to him proper and advisable, in consideration of payments to the United States to apply upon said judgment, of not less than the sum of $5,000,000, and in connection therewith to release any claims of the United States against purchasers of oil and petroleum products from the leases commonly known as "E," "I," and "G" leases, or also known as Visalia 010042, 010043, and 010097 leases in naval petroleum reserve No. 1, Kern County, "I," and "G" leases, or also known as Visalia 010042, 010043, and 010097 leases in naval petroleum reserve No. 1, Kern County, Calif., and to consent, in the premises, to the assignment of other oil and gas leases in said naval petroleum reserve No. 1, now part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and to the assignment of other oil and gas leases, also part of the unmortgaged assets of Pan American Petroleum Co., of the United States outside the said naval petroleum reserve No. 1, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, said assignments to be authorized only to assignees otherwise duly qualified under existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5609) to amend the emergency relief and construction act of 1932 was announced as next in order. Mr. KING. As I understand the subject matter of that bill has been disposed of, and I ask that it go over.

HARVEY COLLINS

The bill (H. R. 2213) for the relief of Harvey Collins was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I withhold it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough], who is unavoidably absent, is very much interested in the bill. I have had time only hastily to read the bill, but I am impressed with its merit, and I hope the Senator from Utah will permit it to receive consideration at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Adams, has recommended against the bill. I have read the report, and it seems to me that there is scarcely sufficient reason to justify the measure; and, in view of the recommendation against it, I suggest that it be passed over, and we may take it up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

The bill (H. R. 2872) for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.) was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think a similar Senate bill was passed over a while ago, and I will ask that this bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

Mr. LOGAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] to permit us to return to Order of Business No. 1331, being House bill 2872. I do not feel that there is any reason why anyone should object to that measure, and I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. In view of the explanation made by the Senator from Kentucky, I will be glad to withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to Calendar No. 1331 and considering the bill at this time?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2872) for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.) was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Dongji Investment Co. (Ltd.), an Hawaiian corporation, organized under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, be, and it is hereby, released from any and all claims for damages, in excess of the amount of the performance bond given by such company, which the United States of America may have against it arising out of its breach of contract No. N3118—2830, dated March 18, 1929, by and between the Dongji Investment Co. Tullis, who was postmaster at Upland, Union County, Ark., on post-office money orders deposited at said First National Bank of Junction City at different times and for different amounts, aggregating $654.17, which money orders were cashed by said bank, and which had been fraudulently issued by the postmaster without the knowledge of said bank that they were fraudulent. GEORGE ROGERS CLARK MEMORIAL AT VINCENNES, IND.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5625) authorizing an appropriation to provide for the completion of the George Rogers Clark Memorial at Vincennes, Ind., which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "resolution," to insert "as amended by section 2 of the act approved February 28, 1931," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the completion of the memorial authorized by section 2 of the joint resolution approved May 23, 1928, to be erected at or near the site of Fort Sackville, in the city of Vincennes, Ind., in commemoration of the winning of the old Northwest and the achievements of George Rogers Clark and his associates in the War of the American Revolution. Such sums as may be appropriated pursuant to the provisions hereof shall be expended by the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission in the manner provided in section 2 of such joint resolution as amended by section 2 of the act approved February 28, 1931.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio explain why it is necessary to spend that large amount at this time?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the construction of the memorial is nearing completion, but it can not be completed within the present year, and it is necessary to add the amount which the Senate originally provided and which was omitted by the House. From the beginning the Senate, without opposition, but unanimously, authorized the full amount, but each time the matter was considered by the House it cut off a portion of the appropriation on the ground that there should be appropriated only enough to keep construction going. It will require the amount of money provided in the bill now before us. It is not in addition to the amount the Senate authorized to complete the work, and it is quite important that the bill should be passed, because we can not allow the memorial to remain uncompleted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREMONT NATIONAL FOREST

The bill (S. 3009) to extend the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands which are in private ownership within 6 miles of the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest, Oreg., which are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be offered in exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465), and upon acceptance of title shall become parts of the Fremont National Forest. Lands in public ownership within 6 miles of the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest and found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be added to the Fremont National Forest by proclamation of the President, subject to any valid existing claims.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Oregon if this bill merely proposes to make an exchange for land outside the forest?

Mr. McNARY. This is a department bill. It provides for the exchange of privately owned land for Government land within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the national forest. It is proposed in the interest of fire protection and the better administration of the national forest.

Mr. KING. I suppose if any additional expense is required it will come out of the general fund for the acquisition of land?

Mr. McNARY. The bill does not contemplate any expenditure. It follows the general act of 1922 and applies it, as must be done, to each specific unit in the national forest. This one happens to be in the southern part of my own State.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill will not require an additional appropriation?

Mr. McNARY. Not at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 13853) to authorize the merger of the Georgetown Gaslight Co. with and into Washington Gas Light Co., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. Howell], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness, I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANNUAL STATEMENTS OF PUBLISHERS

The bill (H. R. 11270) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will inquire what is the nature of that bill?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, it is a measure that changes existing law so that the owners of publications entered as second-class matter shall file with the Post Office Department an annual statement instead of a semiannual statement as at present. Then an amendment is proposed making the filing date October 1 instead of July 1. That is for the benefit of newspapers which are required to include a statement as to circulation. The figures as to circulation are now prepared as of October 1, and it is believed that the work of preparing such annual statements in newspaper offices would be simplified if the statements were filed on that date

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire if that bill has been recommended by the department?

Mr. ODDIE. It has been recommended by the department.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection, provided the bill does not apply to weekly newspapers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it does.

Mr. ODDIE. It refers to all publications entering the mail as second-class matter.

Mr. ASHURST. I object if it applies to weekly newspapers. I do not wish to object otherwise.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that second-class mail matter includes all periodicals weekly, daily, semimonthly and monthly; second class includes them all.

Mr. ODDIE. I will state to the Senator from Arizona that that bill, as I understand, proposes a change which will be for the convenience of the publishers of the country and will save them a duplication of effort and considerable money. It will enable them to file a report once a year instead of twice a year.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with the general purpose of the bill, but I move to amend by inserting the following proviso:

Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to weekly newspapers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think that is the very class of publications at which it is principally directed. I believe the bill had better go over so that a little opportunity may be afforded to study it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona wish a vote on his amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think that a bill which would require weekly newspapers to make returns as to their circulation would not, without further investigation, be fair. I will look into the bill, and the next time calendar is called probably I shall be perfectly willing to withdraw the objection.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, while the Senator is doing that, may I say to him that the language which the Senator proposes in his amendment providing that the provisions of this bill shall not apply to weekly newspapers—

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear the Senator and I know that is my loss.

Mr. MOSES. I am sorry that I have a cold. The fact is that there are many weekly newspapers having a national circulation which runs up into the hundreds of thousands, or even millions, in case of one or two of them.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. And I am sure those are not the periodicals the Senator is seeking to benefit by his amendment. The Senator, I assume, is seeking to make it easier or more beneficial by this legislation for the small country weekly.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. MOSES. Therefore, if the Senator is going to study the bill with a view to offering an amendment the next time the calendar is called, which I understand is to be on Monday, I offer him this suggestion in order that the language which he will propose in his amendment will not be such as to do the thing I have indicated.

Mr. ASHURST. I regard the Senator from New Hampshire as an expert in matters with respect to newspaper publications, and I am inclined to take his view; but let the bill go over a few moments, until I can have an opportunity to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the present law, as I remember, requires this information to be filed, and I think it properly should do so. The change is that under the existing law the filings must be semiannual, whereas under the proposed change in the law, under the pending bill, the filings may be annual.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; and, if the Senator will permit me, it changes the month in which the filing shall be made.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; the time of filing does not conform to the fiscal year.

Mr. MOSES. No; that is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws his objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the words "day of " to strike out "July" and insert "October," so as | to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 553; U. S. C., title 39, secs. 233 and 234), is amended to read as

"That it shall be the duty of the editor, publisher, business manager, or owner of every newspaper, magazine, periodical, or other publication to file with the Postmaster General and the postmaster at the office at which said publication is entered, not later than the 1st day of October of each year, on blanks furnished by the Post Office Department, a sworn statement setting forth the names and post-office addresses of the editor and managing editor, publisher, business managers, and owners, and, in addition, the stockholders, if the publication be owned by a corporation; and also the names of known bondholders, mortgagees, or other security holders; and also, in the case of daily newspapers, there shall be included in such statement the average of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold or newspapers, there shall be included in such statement the average of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold or distributed to paid subscribers during the preceding 12 months: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to religious, fraternal, temperance, and scientific, or other similar publications: Provided further, That it shall not be necessary to include in such statement the names of persons owning less than 1 per cent of the total amount of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other securities. A copy of such sworn statement shall be published in the second issue of such newspaper, magazine, or other publication printed next after the filing of such statement. Any such publication shall be denied the privileges of the mail if it shall fail to comply with the provisions of this paragraph within 10 days after notice by registered letter of such failure. That all editorial or other reading matter published in any such newspaper, magazine, or periodical for the publication of which money or other valuable consideration is paid, accepted, or promised shall be plainly marked 'advertisement.' Any editor or publisher printing editorial or other reading matter for which compensation is paid, accepted, or promised without so marking the same, shall upon conviction in any court having jurisdiction be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500." of the number of copies of each issue of such publication sold

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

R. S. HOWARD CO. (INC.)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few moments ago Senate bill 4326, Order of Business No. 1260, was called, and I objected to its consideration. Since the objection I have had placed in my hands a memorandum showing that the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the lower court with respect to a case involving the same legal principles. Therefore, under that ruling, the claim would be a just claim. I withdraw my objection and suggest that we recur to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to Senate bill 4326, which will be read.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4326) for the relief of R. S. Howard Co. (Inc.), which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$32,827.51" and insert "$20,827.51," so as to make the

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,827.51 to R. S. Howard Co. (Inc.), of New York City, as just compensation and in full settlement and satisfaction of the damages and/or losses incurred and suffered by it in complying with United States Navy order No. N-3255, dated June 18, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 964) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate all phases of taxation in relation to agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object.

sell surplus coal at nominal prices for distribution to the needy, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to sell, at nominal prices, to recognized charitable organizations, to States and subdivisions thereof, and to municipalities such excess coal that is not needed as a war reserve, and as may be available and required, for distribution to the needy: Provided, That such coal shall be sold only after agreement by the purchaser that it shall not be resold but shall be given absolutely free to the needy: Provided further, That such coal, as far as practicable, snall be allotted proportionately among communities reasonably available therefor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], who introduced the joint resolution, a question regarding it. In view of the fact that the coal alleged to be unnecessary is located in two places only, how will it be distributed to those parts of the United States where coal is needed? At San Diego not much coal is needed.

Mr. JOHNSON. True.

Mr. KING. And if this is for the purpose of helping the needy, how will the coal be distributed?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the only purpose of the joint recolution. It would be distributed, of course, to those who could be reached readily.

It happens that this is a measure that was brought to me by Congressman Clarence Lea, of California, in whose district a very large part of this coal is situated. The coal that he seeks to have distributed to the needy is coal which has been stored in the open air for 10 years and unused, and the Navy Department has assented to the measure.

Mr. KING. I merely want to make the observation that at nearly every session-in fact, several times each sessionwe have bills authorizing the giving away or distribution of unused properties and commodities in the hands of the Army and the Navy, showing that they purchase improvidently, spend millions unnecessarily, and then come and ask permission to give away the commodities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERLY PAYMENT OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 14392) to authorize the payment of taxes and assessments on family dwelling houses in the District of Columbia in quarterly installments, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each fiscal year, commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the assessor of the District of Columbia shall send to the owner of each family dwelling house occupied by such owner upon written application therefor an itemized statement of the taxes payable with respect to such dwelling house not less than 30 days prior to the time when the first installment of real-estate taxes for such fiscal year becomes due and payable. Such statement shall include all real-estate taxes which are due and payable in such fiscal year and all indue and payable. Such statement shall include all real-estate taxes which are due and payable in such fiscal year and all installments of special assessments which have been levied, charged, or assessed prior to, and are due and payable in, such fiscal year, with respect to the family dwelling house occupied by the owner. Such taxes and assessments shall be payable, at the election of the taxpayer, in four equal installments, in the months of September, December, March, and June, and no interest shall be payable with respect to any such installment unless it is unpaid after the time it is due. Any real-estate tax or special assessment or any installment thereof with respect to any family dwelling house occupied by the owner thereof not included in such statement shall not be due or payable during the fiscal year for which the statement is sent; and any such tax or assessment or any installment thereof otherwise chargeable, assessable, or payable during such fiscal year shall be included in the statement for the next succeeding fiscal year.

SEC. 2. PROVISION OF BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

The bill (H. R. 13817) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that that go over. Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, will not the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. BULKLEY. I am glad to suspend the objection. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withheld. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I merely desire to explain the nature of the bill. It will require no appropriation. The only people that are objecting to the bill are the people who make the Braille books for the blind.

There are only a comparatively small number of blind that can read the Braille books. There has now been invented a process by which it is possible to produce rather cheaply records that can be put on talking machines, so that these books can be put on those machines and anybody

We have already made an appropriation for the Braille books. This bill leaves the Librarian of Congress free to use for this purpose such part of the funds appropriated for books for the blind as he deems proper. It seems only fair to the poor blind people who can not read the Braille books, but can hear, that they should have the benefit of this new invention.

I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his objection. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that we have appropriated $100,000 for Braille books, and the manufacturing was divided between the East and the West-the two places that are manufacturing Braille literature in the United States. There can not be any justice in objecting to having old people, who at their present age can not learn to read by their fingers, given the benefit of this invention. This is simply to permit the use of these books that go on a phonograph, by Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], whom I under-which means the blind can hear them without using their fingers. That is the only way they can get the information the books contain. The Senator from Wisconsin asked that the bill go over, but when I explained the matter to him he said, "Personally, I have no objection.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, my objection is based on a communication that I have from a friend in whose good faith I have great confidence. I ask that the bill go over at this time, and I may not object to it when it comes up again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed

PARK LANDS IN CALIFORNIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5612) to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 2, after the enacting clause, to strike out "That subject to lawful claims initiated by settlement or otherwise prior to July 18, 1929, and maintained in the manner required by law, the State of California may select for the use of the California State park system by legal subdivisions all or any portions of the following townships outside of private grant,' and to insert "That subject to valid rights existing on the date of this act, the State of California may within five years select for State park purposes by legal subdivisions all or any portion of the public land not reserved for public purposes in the following townships:", and on page 2, line 23, after the word "prescribe," to insert: ": Provided further, That any patent so issued shall contain a provision for reversion of title to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that for a period of more than one year the land has not been used by the State for park purposes: And provided further, That in order to consolidate park areas or to eliminate private holdings therefrom lands patented hereunder may be exchanged with the approval of and under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for privately owned lands in the area hereinbefore described of approximately equal value containing the natural features sought to be preserved hereby. The lands so acquired to be subject to all the conditions and reservations prescribed by this act, including the reversionary clause hereinbefore set out"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to valid rights existing on the date of this act, the State of California may within five years select for State park purposes by legal subdivisions all or any portion of the public land not reserved for public purposes in the following townships:

Township 9 south, range 4 east; township 9 south, range 5 east; township 9 south, range 6 east; township 9 south, range 7 east; township 9 south, range 8 east; township 10 south, range 5 east; township 10 south, range 6 east; township 10 south, range 7 east; township 10 south, range 8 east; township 11 south, range 7 east; township 10 south, range 6 east; township 11 south, range 7 east; township 11 south, range 8 east; township 12 south, range 5 east; township 12 south, range 6 east; township 12 south, range 7 east; township 12 south, range 8 east; San Bernardino meridian

Upon the submission of satisfactory proof that the land selected contains characteristic desert growth and scenic or other natural features which it is desirable to preserve as a part of the Cali-Ieatures which it is desirable to preserve as a part of the California State park system, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to issue therefor: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, or other mineral contained in such lands, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same at such times and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That any patent so issued shall contain a provision for reversion of title to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that for a period of more than one year the land has any patent so issued shall contain a provision for reversion of title to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that for a period of more than one year the land has not been used by the State for park purposes: And provided further, That in order to consolidate park areas or to eliminate private holdings therefrom lands patented hereunder may be exchanged with the approval of and under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for privately owned lands in the area hereinbefore described of approximately equal value containing the natural features sought to be preserved hereby. The lands so acquired to be subject to all the conditions and reservations prescribed by this act. including the reversionary clause hereinprescribed by this act, including the reversionary clause hereinbefore set out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the stand to be the author of the bill, should make a statement | as to the quantity of land that it is proposed to permit the State to select for use for park purposes. I understand that that is the object of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Entirely so.

The exact quantity I am unable to say. In my tabulation here, the bill and the report are not contained. They were evidently left out of my tabulation by the young gentlemen of the Senate who fix those things.

This is a bill from San Diego County, concerning, I think, the Cactus Forest. It is one that should be preserved; and there is a lengthy letter, if the Senator finds it—it ought to be inserted in the report-from the Secretary of the Interior, very strongly advising the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It does not impose any cost on the National Government?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no, sir. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the State takes over the lands and places them in parks, and then maintains them?

Mr. JOHNSON. For the completion of the State park system.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF ALASKAN FISHERIES

The bill (S. 3379) for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall be glad to have an explanation of this measure.

I confess that I am not very much in sympathy with the proposal to grant these licenses for five years. I wish the Senator would let the bill go over until next Monday and give us an opportunity to examine it. I have had a great many complaints from the natives of Alaska and persons who have been fishing for years along the coast from Washington up to the limits of Alaska.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this bill relates only to fixed traps. I understand that the natives are not concerned with them. The natives are employing other means of fishing, and are not affected, as I understand, by this method.

Mr. KING. But there was an investigation some time ago, as I remember, conducted by a committee of the House, which showed that traps and seines were being improperly used by persons and corporations, and that many of the streams were being despoiled of salmon and other varieties of fish. I think that the operations of many of the large fishing companies were reprehensible and destructive of the

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I may say that the design of this legislation is, in part, to give to the Department of Commerce a more rigid control over these fishing operations, primarily and fundamentally in the interest of the conservation of salmon. The bill comes here with the approval of the Department of Commerce. The Delegate from Alaska was advised of the pendency of the bill. A hearing was held. He interposed no objection to it; and, so far as I am advised, there is no objection at this time to the legislation from any source.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, many complaints have been made against the methods adopted by the Department of Commerce in dealing with the fishing industry in the northern and particularly in the Alaskan waters, and because of the lack of proper regulations as well as the unfair and discriminating policies adopted by the Commissioner of Fisheries. From the data brought to my attention by the former Delegate from Alaska, Mr. Sutherland, and others, I reached the conclusion that many changes were needed in the Bureau of Fisheries, including officials in that organization.

Mr. WHITE. That would cure the Senator's objection? Mr. KING. Perhaps if there were a new commissioner many precedures of which complaint has been made would be changed. I ask the Senator to let the bill go over until next Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed

FINAL PROOF BY DESERT-LAND ENTRYMEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5456) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen," approved May 13, 1932, to desertland entrymen, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen," approved May 13, 1932, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to extend for not exceeding two years the period during which final proof may be offered by any person who has a pending homestead or desert-land entry upon public lands of the United States on which at the date of this act or on any date on or prior to December 31, 1934, under existing law final proof is required showing residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be: Provided, That any such entryman shall be required to show that it is a hardship upon himself to meet the requirements incidental to final proof upon the date required by existing law, due to adverse weather upon the date required by existing law, due to adverse weather or economic conditions: And provided further, That this act shall apply only to cases where adequate relief is not available under

HOMESTEAD DESIGNATIONS ON ALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5463) to authorize the change of homestead designations on allotted Indian lands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Dakota should explain this bill. It is not clear what the purpose is.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a departmental bill, recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It applies to some Montana reservations. Under the law, the Indians have allotments designated as homesteads, to provide for homes, where houses may be built. In some instances an Indian may have two or three allotments, but the allotment designated as a homestead may not be a desirable place for the erection of a home. This bill would simply give authority to the Secretary of the Interior to designate, upon application from the Indian, another allotment as a homestead, instead of the one originally designated. It applies only to Montana.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any Indian who now has or may hereafter acquire an allotment designated as a homestead and such Indian owns other restricted allotted lands acquired by inheritance or otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he heritance or otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to allow such Indian owner to change the designation of his or her homestead to other restricted lands owned by the said Indian. Upon acceptance by the Secretary of the Interior of relinquishments and the designation of lieu homestead lands, appropriate patents or other evidence of title as may now or hereafter be provided for by law shall be issued to the Indian owner for the lands so redesignated: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, nor to the Osage and the Kaw Indians in Oklahoma. in Oklahoma.

The bill (S. 5632) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the same as Calendar No. 1385, House bill 14657, and without objection, that bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14657) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

ESTABLISHMENT OF BRANCH BANKS

The bill (S. 5273) authorizing national banks to establish branch banks, and to secure deposits, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New Mexico withhold his objection?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, Mr. President, I withhold the objection temporarily.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that this is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. Logan], having especially in view the lack of any banking facilities at Fort Knox. The bill is general in its terms, but in order that reservations like that at Fort Knox, Ky., may be provided banking facilities the bill has been introduced and unanimously reported from the committee. What is the objection the Sen-

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I would have no objection if the establishment of the branch banks were limited to States in which State banks are authorized to engage in branch banking. As I understand this measure it would authorize the establishment of a branch bank on a Federal reservation, even though the reservation were situated in a State where branch banking was not permitted or was even denounced.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but I understand that no State bank could be established on such a reservation as I have described, and it does seem to me that it would not offer sufficient conflict with any State banking system to justify an objection to it.

I have especially in mind the situation at Fort Knox, Ky., which is a very large military reservation. There are no banking facilities there, within convenient reach of the people at that reservation, at which, as the Senator knows, there is a large number of soldiers, officers, and their families. It is in order to cure that situation that the bill was introduced. I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, this matter was taken up with the Comptroller of the Currency a year or more ago, and in trying to work the matter out I finally prepared a bill. The Treasury Department itself objected to one section of the bill, which was stricken out. The officials of that department also expressed the opinion that the bill as reported by the committee was all right and should be

This measure does not go into branch banking, I may say to the Senator from New Mexico. There are these military reservations, and they are reservations without any banking facilities. In the case referred to the distance from Fort Knox to the nearest bank is 15 miles. The purpose of the bill is to allow the establishment of a branch which will receive deposits and pay out money for the convenience of the soldiers and officers in that camp. We have been trying to get something along that line for some time, and the Comptroller of the Currency thought that an act would be necessary in order to give him authority.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, with the explanation made by both of the Senators from Kentucky, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator. Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I interposed an objection, and I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

I., for injuries received as the result of a collision involving an Army vehicle in Newport, R. I., on June 4, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Elizabeth Fox, Granger, Tex., the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, for permanent injury received on February 2, 1928, while getting her mail out of a post-office box at Southwestern University Station at Georgetown, Tex., said injury being caused by neglectful construction of said post-office box: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. ANNIE M. EOPOLUCCI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5150) for the relief of Annie M. Eopolucci, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Annie M. Eopolucci, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20 per month, in a total amount of not to exceed $5,000, such payments to be in full settlement of all claims against the Government for the death of her son, John E. Eopolucci, who, while serving as a member of the armed guard of the United States Navy on the steamship Aztec, lost his life when said steamship was torpedoed and sunk on April 1, 1917, this while in the active service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SALE OF REVENUE STAMPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12977) to amend section 808 of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 as amended by section 443 of the revenue act of 1928.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the last revenue bill we passed provided for the sale of revenue stamps in cities having populations of 25,000 or over. There are a great many county seats in the United States with populations smaller than 25,000; and because we require the placing of revenue stamps on conveyances now, a great deal of trouble has been

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this is a wise measure and should be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 808 of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926, as amended by section 443 of the revenue act of 1928, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "in cities of over 25,000 inhabitants" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in all post offices of the first and second classes and such post offices of the third and fourth classes as are located to contract the second classes." in county seats.

PROOF OF CLAIMS IN BANKRUPTCY CASES

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that we may return to calendar 1311, Senate bill 5394, a bill to amend section 57 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, with respect to proof and allowance of claims by trustees for bondholders.

The Senator who objected when the bill was reached on the calendar has now agreed to withdraw his objection and indicates that he sees no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this bill provides for an amendment to the general bankruptcy statute. Will not the Senator from Rhode Island explain what changes the bill would make in the law?

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the amendment is simply for the protection particularly of small investors, who perhaps would not know that it is necessary for them to file their claims. It would give the trustee power to file for all of them. There have been cases where people who had bonds and expected that somebody else would look out for them did not know, perhaps, that they were in a bankruptcy proceeding, and this would simply afford assistance for such an individual.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary gave this measure consideration. As I understand its provisions, it simply authorizes a trustee, in a trust indenture for the benefit of a large number of holders of bonds or notes, to file a claim in bankruptcy for those who have failed to do so.

Mr. METCALF. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to recurring to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 57 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(0) Whenever indebtedness of the bankrupt arises in respect of notes, bonds, or similar obligations issued under or pursuant to a trust deed, indenture, or other instrument to which reference is made in such obligations, whether or not such obligations are in negotiable form or specifically secured, and such trust deed, indenture, or other instrument, and/or such obligations (a) expresses an undertaking of the issuer of such obligations, in the event of default, to make payment of the indebtedness in respect of such obligations, to a trustee or other representative designated for the owners of such obligations, or (b) authorizes such trustee or other representative, in the event of bankruptcy, to make claim for the indebtedness in respect of which such obligations were issued, or to represent the holders thereof, and/or to collect and distribute any dividends thereon, such trustee or other representative shall for all purposes of this act be deemed to be the creditor in respect of such indebtedness, except in so far as the holders of such notes, bonds, or other obligations shall themselves duly file proof of claim thereon, and shall be entitled in its name as such trustee or other representative to file proof of claim thereon and to receive payment, subject to such provisions and regulations as may be prescribed by the courts, of all dividends declared on said claim, and to act with respect to all other matters arising in connection with such claim as though the absolute owner thereof. Such trust deed, indenture, or other instrument shall within the meaning of paragraph (b) of this section be deemed to be the instrument of writing upon which said claim is founded."

Sec. 2. The amendment made by section 1 of this act shall be

SEC. 2. The amendment made by section 1 of this act shall be effective as to claims filed in all bankruptcy proceedings instituted after the date of enactment of this act and to claims filed in all bankruptcy proceedings theretofore instituted in which no dividend has been declared prior to such date, but nothing contained in this act shall be deemed to extend the time for filing claims in any bankruptcy proceeding.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED COTTON TO RED CROSS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228), authorizing the American National Red Cross and certain other organizations to exchange Government-owned cotton for articles containing wool.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York the purpose of this measure. I know that he and others were very insistent a short time ago for a large appropriation to have cotton owned by the Government, through its stabilization and other organizations, delivered to the Red Cross because of the imperative need to dispose of it for the manufacture of cotton goods. It seems to me we are broadening our action, and pretty soon there will be a desire for the Federal Government to take over all the wool in the United States and deliver it to the Red Cross for distribution in such manner as it may see fit.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, apparently the Senator was not here the other day when we discussed this matter.

This is not a measure asking for any new cotton. The cotton has already been turned over to the Red Cross, and under the act doing that they can exchange it only for articles made of cotton, cotton clothing, cotton blankets, and cotton mattresses.

I pointed out that in the northern climates, of northern New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Montana, and other places, it would be very much better, in affording comfort to human beings, if the Red Cross could exchange the cotton for woolen garments, as they may now exchange it for cotton garments. It does not involve the expenditure of any money or the acquisition of any more cotton.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my understanding is that contracts are made with various manufacturing organizations, with mills, with corporations which are engaged in manufacturing cloth into garments for use after the cotton has been obtained. It would seem to me that this measure would contemplate an abrogation of or interference with contracts which have been entered into with textile organizations for manufacturing garments for distribution from the cotton which has been heretofore obtained.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the Red Cross desires to do this, but under the law they are limited, and there are no such contracts that would be interfered with. I am sure the Senator, when he looks into the matter more thoroughly, will see that I am right about it.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the American National Red Cross or any other organization to which Government-owned cotton has been or shall hereafter be delivered pursuant to law is hereby authorized, if it shall be deemed advisable, to exchange any such cotton for cloth or wearing apparel or other articles of clothing containing wool.

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding the lapse of time, statutes of limitations, waiver, release, settlement heretofore made or directed by any act of Congress or otherwise, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment according to right and justice and as upon a full and fair arbitration, on any and all claims not heretofore determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under any treaty, ratified or unratified, act of Congress, agreement or understanding, verbal or written, Executive order, or treaty with any other tribes or nations of Indians by the authorized agents or representatives of the United States relating to, affecting, or violating the land occupancy or other rights of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. For what purpose, may I inquire?

Mr. McNARY. I ask it for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent agreement which I trust will be satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield provided I do not lose my right to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will not lose the floor.

Mr. McNARY. After conferring with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], who is in charge of the unfinished business, I wish to propose the consideration of the calendar in conformity with the purposes of the unanimousconsent agreement previously entered into, which would be to consider unobjected bills on the calendar to the end, Order No. 1400, and then return to Order No. 1207.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's proposition it is not only to complete the call of the remainder of the bills upon the calendar, but to return to those that were not taken up this morning and go through the calendar?

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he limit the request to a completion of the call of the calendar? Most of the numbers preceding the point where we began this morning have been called many times and will undoubtedly be objected to again, but the numbers that have not yet been called this morning, from No. 1375 on to the end of the calendar, ought to be called. I suggest that the Senator modify his request accordingly.

Mr. McNARY. The only reason why I asked to return to the beginning of the calendar was because it was mentioned in the original proposal this morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But that lapses now.

Mr. McNARY. There is some force in the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas. I do not want to delay unnecessarily the further consideration of the unfinished business, so I amend my proposal and ask that we may continue until we complete the call of the calendar to Order of Business No. 1409.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair state that the Senator from Louisiana will not be entitled to the floor if the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into. Is | there objection?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business was laid before the Senate. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] was recognized and yielded to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] to propose a unanimous-consent agreement, which is now pending. The unanimous-consent request is to proceed with the calling of the calendar for unobjected bills through to the end to Calendar No. 1409. Is there objection?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Am I to await the conclusion of the call of the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the unanimous-consent agreement is granted, the Senator from Louisiana may speak five minutes at a time on each bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think we can conclude the call of the calendar at a later day. I prefer to retain the floor now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] wanted to offer a motion at the proper time before the conferees were appointed, for the purpose of instructing them. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether he has conferred with the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. ODDIE. No, I have not conferred with him to-day, although I am agreeable to that course and am in agreement with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] regarding his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator is going to insist upon his motion at this time, I would feel compelled to suggest the absence of a quorum, in the absence of the junior Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I do not yield for that purpose. I must decline to yield any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor and declines to yield further.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I regret to have to take the time of the Senate at this late day in the session when we have only a few days left with so many very important bills pending, but inasmuch as I asked for the investigation I feel it my duty, after having heard a number of speeches made against continuing the investigation or at any rate against furnishing more funds to continue the investigation, to submit some remarks.

The conditions in Louisiana for the last several years have been such that I was warned and so were my friends that there would not be an honest election. After the primary election, had I not believed that I had a majority of the people of the State of Louisiana voting for me, I should not have protested; but I am satisfied that I had, and from every nook and corner of the State and from the most highly respectable citizens of the State, I have received letters and affidavits informing me of the manner in which the primary election was conducted. I did not care to claim anything in that election for myself, but I did file a protest. I am not claiming to have been nominated and I could not claim to have been elected, if I care to do so, because this was a primary election, but I do claim that the other candidate was not fairly nominated, and not only that, but I claim he was nominated by fraud, trickery, corruption, in-timidation, and by every method known to the racketeer in this country.

It is said here that the evidence adduced before the investigating committee is not relevant. Well, Mr. President, I shall recite first a few of the facts that are in the record. I am amazed that Senators, with the experience they all have had, should come to any sort of a conclusion except that which the investigating committee should submit to them, when there are 2,400 pages of evidence which no one has read up to now, because it is not printed. The committee heard it, however, and I heard every word of that testimony in person. It is shown that the junior Senator from the State of Louisiana selected Mr. Overton as a candidate to oppose me; that he selected the managers to manage that campaign, and that he then and there took charge and made of those managers nothing but clerks and he himself managed the campaign, and all the time in company of Representative Overton, who claims to have been nominated

The junior Senator from Louisiana says that his organization raised the funds for that campaign. Representative Overton's report to the investigating committee was that he spent between four hundred and five hundred dollars in that campaign for personal expenses, and that the Louisiana Democratic Association had taken charge and raised the funds and expended them.

Then the committee asked him who were the officers of the Louisiana Democratic Association, and he said he did not know. And, Mr. President, he could not know, as I shall show in a few moments. Nobody knew. Here is the testimony of the junior Senator from Louisiana himself before the first hearing held by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Con-NALLY] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton]. In that hearing here is what Senator Long said:

We want to join that view-

Making an observation as to what had been said beforeand state that we were the first ones who tried to stop it.

Senator Bratton. You refer to the Louisiana Democratic Association?

Senator Long. Yes, sir

Senator Bratton. Will you tell us who is the president and Secretary of that association?

Senator Long. It did not have any president. It was an organization I formed to defeat the regulars during the impeachment in 1929. In other words, the old New Orleans organization took over my organization.

Then there is a dash, showing that he hesitated-

Major Sullivan was my leader. Mr. Rightor and I were sleeping in the same political bed then.

Mr. Rightor was representing me at that hearing, and he

No, sir; I never voted for you in my life, Senator, and I never slept in the same bed, and never will.

Senator Bratton. This association did not function in this recent primary?

Senator Long. Oh, yes; yes. Senator Bratton. Who directed that organization? Senator Long. Well, it was directed by—

And there are a few dashes.

It was just used-

And there are some more dashes-

I would say that the head of it would have been myself and that the-

Dashes again-

We had two campaign managers, Mr. Peltier and Mr. Ellender. We never thought about a treasurer until Senator Howell wired us and asked who he was.

Before I proceed further I want to give the date of that testimony. It was on October 5.

In 1928 there was what you might say-

Senator Long continuing-

what was known as the Old Regulars and the New Regulars. what was known as the Old Regulars and the New Regulars. Now, the New Regulars and the Old Regulars coalesced, and that left me with what you say those who stayed with me, and I named mine during the impeachment, the Louisiana Democratic Association. We didn't have many people at the naming of it, and we were pretty well in control, and never thought of naming officers. Senator Connally. This Democratic association of which Bratton inquired, does it collect money for campaign funds? Senator Long. Yes; they collected some money. Senator Connally. Did it do that during the last senatorial campaign?

Senator Long. Yes: it didn't collect much, but we collected it.

Senator Long. Yes; it didn't collect much, but we collected it for them. Senator Connally. You mean for the association?

Senator Long. I collected money that I gave the association.
Senator Connally. To the Democratic association?
Senator Long. Yes; and various other people did. It might not have gone through any officer, but we paid the bills. We collected about $13,000.

We want this investigation to continue, Mr. President, because we have established that in certain departments which we have had time to cover, 8 and 10 per cent assessments were made in the month of September, and we have the names of other departments that are already in the record where it can be shown that $77,000 were collected in the month of September for political purposes in the campaign against me. Of course the other side claims other-

Senator Connally. That is, these expense items show on this file Senator Long. Yes, sir.

That was the last report made by Peltier and Ellender, the managers, or supposed to be the managers, for Representative Overton.

Senator Connally. And that money was largely collected by the Democratic organization.

Senator Long. Yes, sir; the members of it contributed.

Then he goes on to describe how they raised the money, accounting for $13,000.

Representative Overton reported to the committee that he expended between $400 and $500 during that campaign in paying his personal expenses, and that he had no other expenses. Traveling with him and the junior Senator from Louisiana were one or two high-sounding trucks with phonographs, loud speakers, and platforms on top where shows and circuses could be held, carrying the occupants and the helpers inside of these trucks that may have cost anywhere from $10,000 to $15,000 each. The same trucks he took across the line into Arkansas, followed by a highway truck carrying printed literature, to be used in Arkansas, and escorted by a retinue of 15 or 16 armed men all the time. He even brought gunmen for his personal guard into the very presence of the senatorial committee, and then he comes here and calls them policemen.

Nobody knew what this organization was. No one claimed to be an officer of it until the committee demanded that they give the names of the officers, and within a few days after the first session was held by the committee we find that they have a new president, Mr. Robert Maestri, and that they then have an organization. However, up to this time there were no officers, and Maestri's account as filed in the record accounts for but very little of Representative Overton's campaign expenditures, but goes back to the campaign held in January, 1932, when the governor of the State was elected, because they had been found out collecting money and forcing employees, even those earning the lowest salaries, wage earners, to contribute 10 per cent of their pay. That is in the record. They wanted to account for that and they said, "We gave $300,000 to the unemployed; we paid the deficit of the Allen campaign, and we had so much that we gave it to Representative Overton's campaign. However, Mr. President, they had no officers during that time; they had no officers for some time after the 5th of October, when the demand was made by the committee that they name them.

During all that interval, during the last four or five years, there was a man who is the manager of the Roosevelt Hotel, named Weiss. He testified in the last hearing that he is the "clearing house," that he collects the money and disburses it. When he was asked how did he collect it, how did he disburse it, he said in cash. He was asked why he did that. He said that he did not have to deposit it. Asked for a reason, he told the committee many different times that it was none of their business. He was a "clearing house." To him all the money was brought, and he disbursed the money. We want to find out, and it can be found out, what these moneys were, where they came from, and where they went.

Let no man on this floor think that this is a fight against the junior Senator from Louisiana; but Representative Overton can not be separated from the junior Senator from Louisiana, because Representative Overton never would have been a candidate nor would he have made a campaign, except by the side of the junior Senator from Louisiana, who managed his fight and disbursed the money directly or through Weiss.

We want to show the system and the methods used in robbing elections in the State of Louisiana, which has been going on for a little while, in order to show that the nomination of Representative Overron is tainted with fraud.

Who, in this Chamber, would take the attitude that he would stop a judge halfway in a case and tell him to render a decision? I have seen cases based on a written contract where the court has stopped the proceeding; but when fraud and corruption are charged the rules of evidence are thrown wide open, and they do not apply, and every avenue that might shed light upon the question is open to investigation.

Shall this committee be held to strict proof such as would be required under a written contract? Fraud never could be discovered in that way; and the law specifically provides that where fraud and corruption or intimidation are alleged, other things can be done besides following those rules, and any remedy is available that the presiding officer thinks is justified in arriving at a conclusion; but the Senate can not stop this investigation halfway. It would have been better not to have started it at all than to do that.

What are you going to do with Weiss, who defies the Senate of the United States? Do you propose to stop these hearings and let him stand out brazenly boasting that he has defied the Senate of the United States?

Some of the Senators, I understand, have stated that the matters offered were irrelevant. The junior Senator from Louisiana made certain selected extracts from 2,400 pages of testimony, which he read to the Senate. Any case can be proved out of 2,400 pages.

Some have said to me that the question of Indian blood was brought in. That is untrue. The only time that came up was when the brother of the junior Senator from Louisiana was asked a question, and he volunteered the statement that his brother, the junior Senator, would even pretend to have Indian blood to get votes. It was not asked by the investigator or by the committee. Nobody went into that. Nobody went into anything that I think is improper.

May I say to the Senate that there are five members of this committee. Not one of them can say I spoke to him about the result of this investigation. Not one of them can say that I ever asked him anything except as to dates of meetings. I never tried to approach them. I never saw General Ansell until I reached New Orleans and got into the chamber where the hearings were held. I have not seen him since. I held no conversation with him other than at the counsel table inside of the committee room in New Orleans. Their theory of this case is one that they have evolved themselves, without any suggestion from me.

How could Representative Overton ignore the fact that money was being spent for him when he was traveling in high-priced cars with the junior Senator from Louisiana, escorted by a bunch of followers in high-priced cars, followed by highway trucks carrying literature for John H. Overton and other candidates? Where did he think the cost came from—from heaven? Still, he says he never inquired. Just the other day he was asked again, "Who are the officers of the Louisiana Democratic Association?" and he said he did not know. He does not know yet, except that he read that Mr. Maestri had been elected, and then Doctor O'Hara. What they wish to do, may I say, Mr. President, is, after the foundation has been laid to connect Congressman Overton with this, to stop these hearings; and that is the effort that is being made here.

I have yet to speak to a single Senator, save probably one, about this matter. I have done what I conceived to be my duty, and I have confidence in the Members of the Senate. I know that if they permit this investigating committee to continue their work they will do what the engineer speaks of as tying the ends. The evidence is already found. The witnesses are known. What needs to be done now is merely to call them up. The expense of finding them has been incurred. It is known where they are. It is known who they are. It is known what they know. Then why not let the committee go back there and finish up this matter.

I do not believe there is a single Senator on this floor who, if charged with matters such as I have charged against Representatives Overton, would stand for anybody's making any suggestion that the hearings be stopped. I myself, and all of you, would be demanding that they complete the investigation. If he is innocent, let this committee continue and prove him innocent. If we stop here it will be a mark against him the rest of his life.

I have nothing against Representative Overron. I went to school with him. He has voted for me every time I ran; but he has fallen into bad company, and there are many others in my State, unfortunately, who have. I can tell you, however, why he does not take that stand. He has a counsel, and the counsel is resorting to the same tricks that he has been resorting to in Louisiana for a long time. There is a big show on, and he is going back and starting little side shows.

When the legislature—the Senator's legislature, then governor-authorized a committee to investigate the highway department, he vetoed the bill. He will not have any of that. In the last general election in the city of New Orleans, with not a candidate against the Democratic candidates. with no opposition, there were, however, constitutional amendments that had to be carried; and the junior Senator from Louisiana holds the machine that can count these votes. What did he do? In a fight where a justice of the supreme court was running, where a Senator was to be elected, where the Members of the House were to be elected, where every judicial officer in the city of New Orleans was to be elected, still, when they counted the votes on election day, without opposition, they found that 2,000 votes had been cast more than were cast in the election of all the above candidates; and in that election they had cast about 20,000 more than they should, probably 30,000.

What did he do? The district attorney of the city of New Orleans ordered four of the boxes brought to the grand jury. What did they show? Take a ward with 17 precincts: They are all published. They will all be in this record if they are not in there now. For the amendment, 385; against, none. There were 17 of them the same way, ward after ward and precinct after precinct. So the attorney general, elected on the junior Senator's ticket, goes over to the grand jury room and tells the district attorney to step out; that he is going to take charge of that matter. Under the law he has that authority; and he tells the newspapers that the district attorney insisted that he write him a letter. He said, "He can not investigate that. It might prevent the sale of the bonds." It was not a question of whether it was crooked or not. So that is the kind of trick that has inveigled Representative Overton into demanding that this thing be not completed.

The junior Senator blocked his own impeachment, which I shall come to very soon. The things that I should like to refer to are too numerous to mention.

The other day it was stated on this floor that the Broussard element did not expect to win. That is untrue. The Senator talks about an arbitration committee. Well, an arbitration committee of such followers as are drawn at the time for that particular purpose can not displace commissioners such as these. It is said that their report shows that it was a quiet election. If there are five commissioners against me, what complaint could there be? And it is in this record how many precincts there were where I had no representation, not only in the city of New Orleans but in 33 of the parishes of the State, containing over two-thirds of the people of the State of Louisiana.

The Senator talks about reducing the State pay roll. That is what we want to prove. We have already laid the basis to prove an increase. If he reduced the pay roll, why does he not let us show that to the committee? Why does he want the committee to stop investigating?

I want to cover the question of dummy candidates, because I do not think that is understood by many people outside of Louisiana. Those who are not here I hope will read it.

The junior Senator says that he put up dummy candidates because the other side had done so. In the parish of East Baton Rouge, in one ward, they put up 13 candidates for the school board.

The other candidate he refers to as St. Amant. I do not know St. Amant. He was running for the public-service commission, and he campaigned for a while, but after a while he withdrew when he saw he had no chance. What did they do? They put up nine candidates for the public-utilities commission against a candidate named LeBlanc, the district covering 29 parishes (counties).

The junior Senator has cited the fact that the supreme court had held against withdrawing those candidates, denying them the right to name commissioners. In all those cases cited by him the filing of the suit was after the drawing of the commissioners, when there was so little time left that the supreme court said, "There will be no time to draw new commissioners. Therefore we will let the present commissioners stand."

In this case, however, the day after the nominations closed suit was filed and Judge Butler was the presiding judge. These dummy candidates were called before the court, and they admitted that they were not candidates. One of them, Hoffman, admitted that, and the attorneys admitted that all the rest would testify in the same way. They were not candidates, but they had been asked to go on the ticket in order to furnish commissioners, so Judge Butler ruled that they had no right to and enjoined them from filing commissioners.

This matter went before the supreme court, and the supreme court had ample time and did decide before the election this very case. On that supreme court there are seven judges. Judge Land was in Europe. There were six judges sitting. One of them was a brother of Representative Overton. Another was Judge St. Paul, who took the position that they had no jurisdiction. Of course, Judge Overton should not have sat in that case. Judge St. Paul was a candidate for the supreme court himself at that very election, and they had for just one office down there in Orleans 13 candidates for judge in order to get commissioners. Judge St. Paul sat there, and three of the judges wanted to agree with Judge Butler's decision.

Much to my regret, I found myself in a position to have to denounce Judge Overton and Judge St. Paul, and I did it all over the State; and the junior Senator from Louisiana, after I made a statement, distorted it, and he did that on this floor again.

I made this statement on the stump, and made it in every town I went to. I said:

If I had a brother on the supreme court of this State and I could not convince him that honor compelled him to retire from that case, I would be so ashamed of myself for him that I would withdraw from the race.

He said the other day that I said I was not a serious candidate, and that I expected to withdraw. Nevertheless, Judge Overton sat on that case and Judge St. Paul sat on that case, and they brought in Judge Higgins, and he delivered the opinion, saying the court had no jurisdiction.

Mr. President, I want to tell the Senate what the court said, notwithstanding they decided against LeBlanc. I want to read what they said. I want to show what these dummy candidates admitted. The court had held before that, if a man says he is a candidate, that statement can not be questioned. If he claims he is, one can not say he is not. But here is the judgment of the supreme court. It said:

On the trial of the rule nisi the respondent judge, after having heard argument upon the exceptions, reserved his ruling, declaring that his conclusions in that respect would be thereafter announced, and proceeded to try the rule on the merits. During the course of the trial the plaintiff called one of the defendants, Edward R. Hoffman, to the stand for the purpose of cross-examination. He was asked concerning his good faith in offering for the position of public-service commissioner. His counsel promptly objected, upon the ground that the testimony sought to be elicited was not responsive to any of the allegations of the petition, and upon the further ground that the court was without jurisdiction to inquire into the bona fides of the defendants. These objections were overruled, whereupon counsel for the defendants admitted, subject to his objections, and with a reservation of his rights under his exceptions, "that the witness on the stand, if examined in this case, and the other three defendants in this case, if placed on the stand and examined, would testify in accordance to the allegations of fact contained in the plaintiff's petition, except as to those allegations of a conspiracy among themselves."

The other dummies lived and had to be sued in another parish.

The court said then:

In other words, it was admitted that none of the four-

That is, four in one county.

In other words, it was admitted that none of the four defendants were bona fide candidates in the respect that they had no intention to run for the offices for which they had announced, and had qualified merely for the purpose of putting additional names on the list from which the commissioners of election were to be drawn for the purpose of favoring a candidate other than the plaintiff in this case.

The court further said:

To countenance the practice here resorted to would lend judicial sanction to the destruction of the objects and purposes of the primary law, the most important of which is to insure fairness in primary elections.

But they decided the other way.

Mr. President, in answer to the concluding part of the speech of the junior Senator from Louisiana on Tuesday, I wish to insert some doggerel here, except that I want to delete the last word. I would like to have it inserted in the RECORD at this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Russell in the chair) Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] the other day said that he appealed to the committee to go to Missouri, and that they told him if he had any proof, to send it or to send some evidence. The Senator stated that if they had proof, they would prosecute in their own State. We can not do that in Louisiana. The statute of frauds in the primary election laws were declared unconstitutional, and all efforts made since that decision have been fruitless, because it has been killed in the legislature.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that what I said was that the essential purpose of such a committee as the Howell committee, in my view, was to prevent violations of the law and to supply process for investigation. In Missouri there was evidence of the excessive use of money on every hand, but, of course, neither the man putting out the money nor the man handling it desired to come in and give us an affidavit we could send to the committee. What we wanted was process to get the testimony.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, the first part of my that in Missouri there is a law under which a man who violates the election laws of Missouri may be punished, but we have no such law in Louisiana, and so we can not go to court in a case like that. The courts have held that the statute is unconstitutional. The house passed a bill at the last session, last year, in that regard, but the senate killed it.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Louisiana seems to have concentrated all of his animosity against the counsel of the committee, whom I had never known before this investigation. But since he believes that the criticism of counsel in this investigation is material, inasmuch as in this particular case he is not only a Senator but Congressman Overton's counsel, I wish to make this comment. The Senator says that General Ansell wrote his own commission. I do not know whether that is true or not. My experience in the Army-and I have been in the Army-leads me to say that had he done that, he would not have been permitted to resign. But it comes with poor grace from the junior Senator, who, in filling out his questionnaire at the time of the draft, when we entered the World War, represented himself as a public officer and thus entitled to exemption in the draft. When he had to answer further, he wrote down that he was a notary public. The local draft board decided that that did not entitle him to exemption. Not satisfied with that decision, he appealed to the State board, and when the State board stood by the local board he appealed to the Federal board. That is how this document is here and is of record in the War Department.

The next charge is that General Ansell represented Bergdoll as a lawyer. I do not know what significance is to be given to that, when it is considered that the House did not act on the report. It was merely a committee report.

Now I wish to place in the RECORD the full text of the impeachment resolution against Governor Long, as carried in the New Orleans Item of March 26, 1929.

(After reading the first 13 articles:)

Mr. President, this is very long, so I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter is as follows:

Whereas Huey P. Long, Governor of the State of Louisiana, has Whereas HUEY P. Long, Governor of the State of Louisiana, has been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in office, incompetency, corruption, favoritism, oppression in office, and gross misconduct: Now, therefore, be it

ARTICLE 4

That he has, through himself and through boards controlled by him, wasted, misused, misapplied, and misappropriated funds and property of the State of Louisiana.

That he has, through himself and through boards controlled by him, contracted illegal loans for the State of Louisiana in violation of the constitution of the State.

ARTICLE 6

That through himself and through boards controlled by him, statement was merely to lay a premise, to make the point he has removed school officials of the State for purely political purposes; and that he has been and is using said powers for the purpose of intimidating teachers and pupils in the schools and educational institutions of the State, to the end of suppressing free thought and free expression of opinion and of politicalizing the educational institutions of the State, including the public schools.

That he has, in time of peace, and not in aid of or at the request of civil authorities, and while Governor of the State of Louisiana, subordinated the civil authorities to the military contrary to the provisions of the constitution of the State of Louisiana, and as commander in chief of the State militia, has attempted to impose his own will through the said militia as superior to the courts of the State without declaring martial law, causing the said militia to loot and pillage private property and to take from the person of certain individuals their private property and destroy private property without due process of law. erty, and destroy private property without due process of law, all without legal authority and contrary to Article I, sections 2, 7, and 14 of the constitution of the State of Louisiana of 1921.

ARTICLE 8

That he has, as Governor of Louisiana, attempted to force official bodies in the parishes of the State to follow his dictation in regard to public litigation, as the price of permitting the passage of legislation affecting such parishes.

ARTICLE 9

That he habitually carries concealed weapons upon his person, both in his office and on the public streets and highways of the State of Louisiana, in violation of the laws of the State of

That he has repeatedly been guilty of violent abuse of officials of the State of Louisiana, members of public boards of the State, and private citizens visiting him upon public business.

ARTICLE 11

That he, the said HUEY P. LONG, while Governor of Louisiana, has been guilty of gross misconduct in public places throughout the various parishes of this State, and particularly that he did, on or about February 12, 1929, in the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, Louisiana, participate in an entertainment where intoxicating liquor was served to him and to other guests, contrary to the constitution of the State of Louisiana and the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, at which entertainment the said HUEY P. LONG, Governor of the State of Louisiana, did deport himself in a scandalous and indecorous manner, thus holding up the State of Louisiana to ridicule and shame.

ARTICLE 12

That the same Huer P. Long has publicly flouted the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Louisiana and has usurped to himself the powers of the legislature of the State and of the committee thereof, and has on occasions commanded the breaking of the quorums of said committees with the purpose in view of preventing the consideration of proposed legislation by

That he has been guilty of favoritism, in that after plans and specifications for a refrigerating plant had been submitted and approved by the officials of the Louisiana State penitentiary involving an expenditure of $20,000, and upon the condition that bids, therefore, should be advertised, he, the said Huey P. Long, ordered the penitentiary officials to divide the order for said plant into numerous orders for separate and inoperative units, the purchase price of which units fell below the sum of $1,000 rendering public bids unnecessary therefor and gave the orders therefor to one W. K. Henderson, a personal and political friend of the said Long, as is shown and contained in the affidavit of one Bernard L. Kiernan, published in the daily press of the State of Louisiana, Monday, March 25, 1929, all in violation of the law and in contravention of the requirements of the law with reference to the advertisement by public boards of this State for bids on all material and equipment in an amount in excess of $1,000.

ARTICLE 14

That the said HUEY P. LONG did while Governor of the State of Louisiana and in the city of Baton Rouge, and in a public place on or about the — day of March, 1929, intrude himself upon, threaten, and attempt to intimidate Charles P. Manship, owner and publisher of the Daily State Times, a newspaper published in the city of Baton Rouge, on or about the — day of March, 1929, and did threaten to make known and to cause to make publicly known the infirmities of a member of said Manship's family in his exercise of his rights as a citizen of the State of Louisiana and in an attempt to suppress the freedom of the press in lawfully opposing and criticizing certain legislation proposed or pending in the legislature of Louisiana of the special session of 1929, all of which being in contempt of the laws of the State of Louisiana, and particularly denounced as a crime by act number 110 of the and particularly denounced as a crime by act number 110 of the legislature of 1908.

ARTICLE 15

That the said Huer P. Lone did, while Governor of the State of Louisiana and in the City of Baton Rouge, parish of East Baton Rouge, La., during the months of February and March, 1929, demoish and destroy the executive mansion, being the property of the State of Louisiana and did raze the property to the ground without legal authority and in violation of his oath of office.

ARTICLE 16

That the said Huey P. Long, while Governor of the State of Louisians, and in the city of Baton Rouge, parish of East Baton Rouge, did destroy or dispose of property belonging to the State of Louisiana, being the furniture and fixtures then located in the executive mansion, executive offices, and in the offices of the State highway commission, the State tax commission, and the supervisor of public accounts, and he, the said Huey P. Long, governor, has made no accounting for said property thus destroyed or disposed of in violation of law and his oath of office.

ARTICLE 17

That the said Huey P. Long, while Governor of the State of Louisiana, and in Baton Rouge, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, La., in violation of the law and of his oath of office as governor of La., in violation of the law and of his oath of office as governor of the State, and over the objection and protest of the board of parole of the State of Louisiana, the only lawful body authorized to grant paroles to prisoners confined in the State penitentiary, did, on or about the 12th of November, 1928, parole and discharge from the State penitentiary of Louisiana a convict by the name of Elmer Dunnington, convicted of the crime of embezzlement in the parish of Tangipahoa, La., on the 16th day of March, 1925, the said Dunnington being ineligible for parole at the time.

ARTICLE 18

That the said HUEY P. LONG, Governor of the State of Louisiana, has repeatedly, while both branches of the legislature were in open session, appeared within the bar of the house and the senate and intruded upon the deliberations of each of said bodies by personally attempting to impose his own views on the members of the house and senate as to the merits of the pending legislation, all in violation of the constitution of the State of Louisiana, which provides for three separate and distinct branches of the government, and which prohibits the members of each of those branches from usurping or exercising the duties that belong to another, thus using the executive power of the State to interfere with the duties of the legislative branch of the government, all in violation of the oath taken by the governor of the State.

ARTICLE 19

That he, the said HUEY P. Long, while Governor of the State of Louisiana, in the city of Baton Rouge, and in the parish of East Baton Rouge, La., did attempt to hire and induce one H. A. Bozeman to kill and murder one J. Y. Sanders, jr., a member of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, as shown and set forth in the sworn statement of H. A. Bozeman of date March 25, 1929, Wherefore, for the above and diverse other offenses, the house of representatives demands trial hereof by the senate, duly convened as a court of impeachment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, there is an editorial printed in the New Orleans Item under the heading "Jekyll and Hyde" Long, on March 26, 1929. The editor and the proprietor of this paper is James M. Thompson, who is now a great friend of the junior Senator from Louisiana and was his candidate for Secretary of War, and, by the way, is a brother-in-law of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I ask that the editorial may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New Orleans Item, March 26, 1929] "JEKYLL AND HYDE" LONG

Of course, last night's proceeding in the Louisiana House of Representatives is explained this morning as "all a mistake, just a bit of misunderstanding as a result of confusion."

just a bit of misunderstanding as a result of confusion."

But if the senate had adjourned sine die, on false information reported to have been conveyed to it from the house, and if the action attempted by ex-Speaker Fournet, notorious as a political creature of Governor Long, had stuck with the senate, the house of representatives would probably have been obliged to go through months of court proceedings to establish the fact that it had not been adjourned sine die in spite of the desire of nine-tenths of its members to remain in session.

In other words, a great body of decent, honest, disinterested

In other words, a great body of decent, honest, disinterested citizens of Louisiana who want the good name and reputation of the State preserved, could by this trick have been thwarted in their desires. And to-day they would be the laughing stock of tricksters, self-seekers, and charlatans who would remain in control of our State government.

It is a time for honest men to be on guard at Baton Rouge. It is time for all men to realize that in dealing with Hurr Long they are dealing with a man who is neither ordinary or normal. For a long observation of the public men of our generation we recall no parallel to this man in either his personal or public career

On Sunday, last, Herman P. Deutsch, writing from Baton Rouge for the Item-Tribune, spoke of Jekyl Long and Hyde Long, comparing Governor Long to the famous characters, Doctor Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. Fit these characters into last night's attempted trickery on the senate by Mr. Long's creatures in charge of the house machinery. Note how quickly it all becomes a "mistake" as soon as the trick failed, and watch the game Long plays as the proceedings go on at Baton Rouge.

ings go on at Baton Rouge.

But healthy, wholesome normalcy seems to be returning to the legislature—which this extraordinary and abnormal man boasted in public meeting to be his deck of cards which he could shuffle and handle as he desired.

Many of these men have been simply temporarily hypnotized, as have been many others outside the legislature, by this extraordinary and abnormal man—a person who seems to have no respect whatever for the decent opinion of mankind.

We would caution these men in dealing with Long to take most careful counsel among themselves and to put none but true and tried and trusted men on guard to deal with him and with his case.

his case

Normal men and women will be shocked into unbelief when they read the confession of "Battling" Bozeman—a political supporter, personal friend, confidant, and personal bodyguard of Governor Long until a few days ago. Bozeman simply claims that Long attempted to get him to murder young J. Y. Sanders, a member of the legislature. And it was to stop the privileged exposure of this statement made on the floor of the house that Long tried to delerme the legislature by a grade triek. adjourn the legislature by a crude trick.

Yet is this charge of Bozeman any more unbelievable than Long's broadcasting to Louisiana and the world his determination to bring to terms Charles Manship and his papers in Baton Rouge by broadcasting the fact that Manship had a brother who was a patient in an insane asylum?

The list of abnormal things this man has said and done can be multiplied indefinitely. And these things are being blazoned to the four corners of America to the temporary detriment of the good name and reputation of Louisiana. Indorsed by the legislature and continued for the next three years they will do the State great harm.

There is no doubt that it is the duty of the legislature to investigate this man thoroughly, fairly, and impartially. It owes this to its own membership.

This paper doesn't believe that Louisiana is safe with the legislature adjourned.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, there is only one thing I want to deal with tending to show what happened to the impeachment charges. The impeachment charges were sent to the Senate of the State of Louisiana. I read from the New Orleans Times-Picayune of September 14, 1929, that a special session of the legislature was to be held September 22, 1930, soon after the impeachment charges had reached the senate and the governor, according to the press and according to those present at the legislature, had given enough positions to senators to get 15 of them to sign a round robin that no matter what the proof might be they would not vote to convict him. Thereupon the senate adjourned. But the proceedings were still pending. We find him then getting together with the regular organization in New Orleans, against whom he had been very much opposed. We find that the Times-Picayune said on the 14th of September, 1930, that the governor would call the legislature to convene in special session on Monday, September 22, to consider a constitutional amendment providing for paved roads, and so forth. Things moved fast.

Individual negotiations were quickly effected and compromises made. We find that on the 16th of September there was published a call of the legislature, dated September 15, calling the legislature to meet on the 16th at Baton Rouge. We find that the press carried a statement that the governor had arrived at a conclusion with the organization in New Orleans, or with some of the leaders in New Orleans. To quote the Times-Picayune of September 16:

Opposition was expressed by certain old regular leaders and members of the legislature, it was said, to the governor's pro-posal that the impeachment charges against him in the senate be dismissed, and that the board of managers named by the house of representatives to prosecute the governor on the impeachment charges be discharged.

We find the same statement carried by the New Orleans Item. Remember, the legislature met on the 16th. On the 18th of September, two days afterwards, carrying out the deal that he made with the organization in New Orleans, a resolution, such as was agreed should be adopted, was adopted. Even if all the formalities had been waived and the usual delays avoided, no action could legally have been taken on a bill within five days, but the resolution passed within two days. The legislature met on the 16th and on the 18th the resolution was passed in the house asking the senate not to prosecute the case.

Mr. President, I mention all these things, not that I know General Ansell but because of the unfairness of the Senator with that record coming here and talking about Ansell.

I have here a circular which the junior Senator from Louisiana sent all over the State when the committee adjourned, calling it a "kangaroo court" in most scurrilous language. I do not think it is fit to go through the mails. I am afraid to offer it for insertion in the RECORD. It is an insult not only to the committee but to the Senate of the United States, because that committee represented the Senate of the United States. He calls everybody scoundrels, liars, and thieves.

Let us see what the Senate of the State of Texas said about the Senator. I assume, Mr. President, that an act of the senate of the legislature of a sovereign State is permitted to be read here without deleting anything. Here is what the Senate of the State of Texas said about the present junior Senator from Louisiana who talks about General Ansell being condemned by some committee:

> SENATE OF TEXAS, STATE HOUSE, AUSTIN, TEX., September 16.

The Senate of Texas in a formal resolution adopted by a vote, 21 yeas to 7 nays, denounced Gov. HUEY P. LONG-

Well, I will not read that part because it is not the resolution-

As a consummate

The resolution describes the statement made by Governor Long that the Legislature of Texas had been bought like a sack of corn to vote against the cotton-prohibition plan.

The full text of the resolution follows, and I think I am within my rights in reading it:

Whereas the Associated Press of the date of the 16th of September, 1931, carries a statement issued by Gov. Huer P. Long, of the State of Louisiana, as follows:

"It is an open matter of conversation—

These are the words of the junior Senator from Louisiana who was then Governor of Louisiana

"It is an open matter of conversation and of world-wide known fact that members of the Texas Legislature have been bought like a sack of corn to vote against the cotton-prohibition plan. It is so well known that it is a matter of openly admitted conversation that they have paid them off like a slot machine. Every State in the South is ready to vote the prohibition plan and the people of Texas are voting for it, but the corruption at Austin alone stands in the way. It is a standing disgrace to the shame of the South and to the impoverishment of the people."

Then the resolution goes on:

Whereas this statement is not only untrue but carries the vice

Whereas this statement is not only different the vice of a lie and the venom of a liar; and
Whereas it is an assault by the executive of the State of Louisiana upon the legislative department of the State of Texas, and should not be permitted to go unchallenged, but should be met with a proper denial and denunciation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Texas (the House concurring), That the above and foregoing quoted statement of Hury P. Long, governor of the State of Louisiana, is a lie made out of the whole cloth, and its author is a consummate liar.

Mr. President, I hate to use those words, but if a man employed as counsel by a committee of the Senate who appeared once before a committee of the other House, which submitted a report which was never acted upon, may be called a scoundrel, a thief, and a liar and everything else on this floor, then on this floor I think I owe it to the Senate to show the record of the man who does that, for I am not speaking of him as a Senator; for he is also counsel in this case. As I have said, I have here a circular that went all over of the State of Louisiana. I would not want to read it because it is not privileged, but I think what I have read is privileged.

Mr. President, there are many things that may be brought out and that can be brought out, I am told. I do not know of them intimately and personally, but I have been told so in a general way by the investigators. I never had any private talk with them, but I have had conferences in the presence of members of the committee, and I think that the investigation ought to be continued because it has gone too far to be stopped. Otherwise it should not have been started at the beginning, but as it has been started it should be finished.

Mr. President, I shall reserve whatever else I have to say for some later date.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to correct only such matters as are patent errors in my colleague's statement. I do not wish to discuss matters that are not shown by the record. I do not think it would be relevant to this case to try the public or private career of my colleague, because I do not consider that to be relevant.

My colleague has seen fit, Mr. President, to read the articles of impeachment preferred against me by the Legislature of Louisiana in 1929. Those articles were preferred against me by the house of representatives in the month, I think, of April, 1929. The same members of that house, Mr. President, sent a committee to the senate the following year to withdraw them, and they were withdrawn. That was done as the result of the election which occurred in the State of Louisiana between Senator Joseph E. Ransdell and myself, in which I was elected to the United States Senate, and everybody who ran on the ticket which I had the honor to head was elected in the same election.

The same legislature, Mr. President, which preferred those charges of impeachment—based on the ground that $2,000 in one instance had been spent illegally and that $400 in another instance had been spent illegally—the following year the same legislature, composed of the same members, voted approximately $100,000,000 to be expended by my administration, and that action was ratified by the people by majorities of 15 or 30 to 1. That is the means and the manner by which the impeachment received its final quietus.

I did not have the help of my colleague, Mr. President, in that impeachment fight which I am satisfied he considers to his aggravated honor, but in my colleague's fight he had my help.

My colleague has seen fit to say that the Senator elect from Louisiana, Mr. John H. Overton, was such an elegant man that he was at one time his schoolmate and had supported him for every public office; but, says my colleague, Senator-elect Overton fell into bad company in the last campaign. However, six years before my colleague was in the same company that Senator-elect Overton was in during the last campaign. My colleague sat on the speakers' stand with me at nearly every meeting that was held in his campaign six years previously, and it did not seem to injure the good service of my colleague, because he has acquitted himself with distinction here during the six years following the time that I helped to reelect him to the Senate. I am very proud of the part that I took in the campaign of 1926 to reelect him to the Senate.

I do not think you will find, Mr. President, a single public advertisement of the meetings for my colleague in 1926 that did not contain my name on the bill announcing the speaking engagements. There may have been some few exceptions, but if there were they were very few.

Mr. President, I undertook to keep all these matters from being injected into this case; but I am sure that my distinguished colleague forgets a little bit. It is only natural that he should; he has been concerned with national issues here for a number of years, and it is only natural that he should have forgotten some of the things concerning which he has undertaken to inform the Senate. He has forgotten. Mr. President, that the impeachment of 1929 started over whether or not I should be allowed to impose a tax on the business of refining oil. He has forgotten that the impeachment resolution came from a mass meeting that recommended that impeachment be lodged on several grounds, without naming what they should be, because of the fact that I had undertaken to impose a tax on the business of refining oil in the State of Louisiana. He has forgotten the fact that in that mass meeting the Standard Oil brass band furnished the music. He has forgotten my statement, Mr. President, on the floor of the senate that on the night of the round robin six members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana held up their hands in public and said that they had been offered from $85,000 up to vote for my impeachment on the following day, and gave the names, dates, and addresses of the persons. Then he condemns the round robin, which was approved by the people of the State and subsequently by the legislature.

The adjournment that was taken was not different in method from the adjournment in the case of the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson. That was a motion to adjourn sine die after they had defeated one charge. By a strange coincidence it happens that on the trial of Andrew Johnson, after voting down two impeachment charges, they moved to adjourn sine die; and by a strange coincidence in my impeachment they voted down one charge and moved to adjourn sine die.

My friend has forgotten a great many more things, Mr. President. I shall take but a few minutes to describe them; but I do not want him to leave the Senate without his memory being corrected on them and without justice being done to my friends.

I had nothing to do with electing Senator Overton's brother to the supreme court. He was elected without opposition long before I was a factor in politics. I had nothing to do with electing Judge St. Paul. He was elected to the supreme court before I was a factor in public politics in a state-wide way. But, Mr. President, there never was any motion to recuse Justice Winston Overton in the Le-Blanc case until after it had been decided. Senator Broussard was not a party to that suit. John H. Overton was not a party to that suit; and the LeBlanc case, without one single mention of criticism of any kind or character, was decided by the supreme court in a case in which neither Senator Broussard nor Senator Overton was a party to the litigation.

The case in which the recusation of Judge Winston Overton was asked before decision was the one in which Senator Broussard was a party. In that case, when he was a party, Senator-elect Overton made himself a party to the suit in order that his brother might, under the code of that State, have legal grounds for his own recusation, and was recused.

The first mention that was ever made of Justice Winston Overton being recused in the case was after the commissioners had been drawn and the decision had been rendered. After that the first mention of the matter was made, on a motion for rehearing, long after the case had been decided and the commissioners had been drawn.

The Senator states that I did not want to go to the war between America and Germany. He is not giving any new information. I never was in favor of the war. I might have been wrong. I never was in favor of the war, Mr. President, and I never made any effort to go. I was excused from going to the war on the ground of having a wife and two children. I am not the only man who was excused from going into that Army. I will say further, however, that I have not raised any great hubbub and claptrap over the country on the subject of war debts. If I had voted for the war, which I did not do, as "a war to save civilization," I would not stand up here and make an argument contrary to what I would have said to have been the patriotic purpose of this country in helping other countries.

Now, Mr. President, about commissioners: Do not have any misunderstanding about this. They tell you they are going to develop some facts. They had five months in which to develop them, and they have produced every witness they could. The record here shows that they produced every witness they could. After they had gone 5 days' time, or 6 days' time, or 7 days' time, and could not produce any witness for anything else at all, they took up 1 week in trying the case along the lines of my colleague's speech this morning. He has not stated in the RECORD any more than the other evidence did; but what are the witnesses? What are the witnesses he claims to have? They could not dig them up down there. They dug up whatever they could. They have spent 5 months in trying to find witnesses, and have spent 12 days in a hearing, and could not bring up any witnesses except a few witnesses to testify about 1 box that had 11 votes in it that had the lock broken—that is one thing they tried to prove, which two witnesses disputed—and another witness said that he heard a man, when he was counting the votes, say that "Broussard has got a whole lot of votes here." That was another one of the things that they produced a witness to prove.

The only other direct thing that I remember at all that was brought into the case, with what they had there relative to election irregularities, was by hearsay testimony of a man by the name of Williams, who swore that a lot of men had been beaten up on the day of election. The Broussard arbitrator took the stand and swore that it was not so, and the chief of police said it was not so, and the United States marshal said he did not hear anything about it, and nobody but this double-hearsay-testimony man had ever heard anything about it.

Now my friend [Mr. Broussard] says—and he is my friend, I am not going to let a little political campaign incense me against a man with whom I was associated politically to the extent that I was with my colleague; we probably will be together again, it would not be anything unusual, they all come back. When I get beaten I will join them. That will be the only difference. We have that system down there, Mr. President. Those that beat us we join. Those that we beat join us. "Jine the cavalry!" We learned by good precedent that there was not any use in fencing yourself out.

Mr. President, I have here a few little figures, that I should like to have you know, about who is to be condemned for having been elected by the New Orleans vote in Louisiana.

When I ran for governor in 1924 I went to the Orleans Parish line ahead of both candidates, Mr. Fuqua and Mr. Bouanchaud. In 1924 the county vote was, Bouanchaud 60,000, Henry Fuqua 48,000, Huey P. Long 61,000. That is in round figures. I am leaving off the figures above that.

Mr. Fuqua, who was elected governor, went into New Orleans 13,000 votes behind me; but Orleans Parish gaye Mr. Fuqua 21,000 more votes than it gave me, and gave him a lead of 7,000 and put him in the second primary, and he was elected governor of the State.

That was in 1924.

In 1928 I ran for governor again. I beat my two opponents—one of them the governor of the State and another one a Congressman who is still here, who is chairman of the Flood Control Committee of the House, the Hon. Riley J. Wilson. I beat the governor of the State and the Congressman in the country by a vote of 9,000 votes more than both of them put together. That was in 1928. I was defeated in New Orleans in that election by the combined vote of my opponents by something like 50,000 votes. There was no second primary. I was given the nomination without having a second primary.

That is my record. That is not all.

I ran again for the United States Senate in 1930. What did New Orleans have to do with electing me that time? I carried the country by a clear majority. I carried the country by 42,000 votes. I was defeated in the city of New Orleans by 4,600 votes. I came to the United States Senate with a vote by which the country overcame the city. I never have carried the city of New Orleans in any election I ever had in my life when I was a candidate.

Now let us go back and see how my distinguished friend got here. He talks about the "New Orleans ring," and the "Huey Long organization." It took us both to keep him here, as I will show you by records.

I never bit the hand that fed me. I will never come in and hold an office and condemn the organization that put me in. That may not be good politics according to some standards, but it is politics in my way. Whenever I accept the support of a man for a public office, and take him on the platform, and announce that I am glad to have his votes, and hold him up as a holy apostle to carry my candidacy for me, I will never bite the hand that feeds me. I never have done it. That may be right. I do not say it is not; but let us go back to 1920 and see how my friend came to the Senate.

Country parishes: My distinguished colleague lost the country by 8,408 votes. He was defeated in the country by 8,408 votes. But the city of New Orleans gave my distinguished colleague a majority of 17,000 votes; and it was the city of New Orleans, that overcame the country in 1920, that gave my distinguished colleague the opportunity to be of the great service that he has been to this country, of which our State and all of our people are sincerely proud.

Let us go down a little bit farther.

In 1926, when my distinguished colleague was a candidate for the United States Senate, did he owe anything against New Orleans? No. He carried the country that time—I was supporting him in that race, and on the stump in every speech he made, with the exception of two or three, maybe four—he carried the country that time by a scant vote. I think it is here. He carried the country by about 700 or 800 votes, but he also carried the city of New Orleans in that election by 2,633 votes. So he had the city of New Orleans that time with him.

When my distinguished colleague was defeated in the last election, was it the "New Orleans ring" that did it? Was it the New Orleans vote that did it? Let us see, Mr. President.

Mr. Overton received a majority in the parish of Orleans of 25,887 votes; but in the country outside of New Orleans—north Louisiana, east Louisiana, west Louisiana, among the farmers and among the laborers, in the wide-open spaces—Mr. Overton received a majority over Senator Broussard of thirty thousand three hundred and odd votes. In other words, Mr. Overton's majority was much greater in the country than it was in the city; and he carried the city, and he carried the country, and he carried practically every part of the State of Louisiana, from the north Louisiana "hill-billy" farm section down to the Acadian section, the French section of our State, with the exception of one congressional district, the home congressional district of my distinguished colleague, which Mr. Overton lost by, I think, 500 or maybe a thousand votes.

Mr. President, those are the details. Those are the

Mr. President, my colleague says that there were 20,000 too many votes cast in the last election between Overron and Broussard in New Orleans. Let us see if that seems to be in accordance with the facts.

In the governor's race, which occurred last year, in 1932—and the registration and the vote were never attacked in the governor's race of 1932—the parish of Orleans cast 98,000 votes plus. In the Broussard-Overton race the parish of Orleans cast 87,000 votes plus. In other words, eleven or twelve thousand less votes were cast in the Broussard-Overton election in September than were cast in the governor's race in January.

I think I can make another comparison which will show whether that is about right or not. In the campaign between Long and Ransdell for United States Senator in 1930, 83,000 votes were cast. So there was an increase in the New Orleans vote of only about four or five thousand votes from September, 1930, to September, 1932, and I think the census will show that there was much increase in population, to say nothing of the fact that that was 11,000 votes less than were cast in the race for governor.

Everybody knows of the intense drive down there to get everybody to pay his poll tax. In Louisiana we have a better system than exists in some other States. In order for a man to be able to vote, he must have paid his poll tax for two years previous to the election, and be able to exhibit his receipts. He must have registered a certain length of time before the election, and had to be able to show a poll-tax receipt for the two preceding years, not the year of the election, but the two years preceding. In the 1932 election a man had to exhibit a poll-tax receipt for 1931 and another one for 1930, unless he was 60 years old or older, and in that event he had to be registered the same as any of the balance of the voters had to be registered.

Mr. President, I am very sorry the senior Senator has seen fit to make some of the statements he has made here. He said he wants to find out about the pay roll. At the close of the whole investigation I had inserted in the Congressional Record a report from every one of the departments, what they had given to me, a synopsis, a telegram which came here after I had shown that there had been an immense reduction in the public pay roll of September, 1932, the date of the Broussard-Overton election, as compared with the pay roll of September, 1931, that almost 50 per cent of the employees had been reduced on account of the depression, at the time of the Broussard-Overton election, as compared with the election before. Notwithstanding that fact, there was no effort to contradict the statement at all, and when we had finished the hearing, they said they wanted the departments to send them a statement showing what the pay rolls were for two years before.

It so happened that those were matters of public record in the office of the secretary of State, for, unlike most States, there is a law in Louisiana that requires every board and every department to file a quarterly report showing the changes made, and how many men are carried on the payroll, so as to prevent any such thing as we are now charged with. That was not the law until my administration came into power. That was an administration measure written and enacted during the time I was governor of the State. Those are matters of public record, and will be sent here, and there need be no delay of the inquiry waiting for that information to be supplied to the Senate.

Mr. President, my distinguished friend says that I vetoed a bill to investigate the highway department. I did not veto any bill until they had spent over $100,000 of public funds investigating, and had found nothing. I did not veto a bill until they had spent several hundred thousand dollars of private funds and found nothing, and when they had spent several hundred thousand dollars—I see my friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] laughing. He happened to come to New Orleans during some of that investigation. When they had spent about three or four or five hundred thousand dollars, I vetoed the bill, and submitted the matter to the people, and the people sustained us by an alarming majority, and the majorities have increased ever since.

There was another statement I am sure my friend did not mean to make. He said that the evidence in this record showed that Representative Overton, now Senator elect, had traveled in high-priced cars, followed by highway trucks with literature. That is not in the record. The contrary is in the record, that there was no such thing as a publicly owned truck or a public employee in the campaign at all, that what men had been used in that campaign and had ever been connected with the highway department, had been forced to resign their positions, and to be paid personally and privately, and to ride in cars that were no part of the State's property. That is in the record, and it is not disputed by one line of anything like legitimate testimony.

Mr. President, the Senator says that there were 15 or 16 armed guards secreted in those automobiles. Nobody knows anything about that but the Senator. I take his word for it, but there is no record of it. On the contrary, the evidence was to the contrary.

The Senator has been a Member of the Senate, but has forgotten the law in many particulars. His knowledge of the law, I must say, was extensive when he came here, because I certified to that fact myself before the electorate of the State, and I am not willing to go back on it at this late date. The Senator says that all rules of evidence are thrown down when fraud is charged, and you do anything you want to in an investigation of fraud. That is not the law.

The law is that fraud must be proved by just as competent evidence as anything else. While there is a reasonable latitude allowed, yet competent testimony must be submitted to prove fraud, the same as anything else. Double hearsay evidence and opinion evidence is no more admissible to prove an act of fraud than it is to prove that the time of the day is something else than it really is.

My friend says—I refer to my colleague—that Overton could not have made a campaign if I had not been with him. Let us just take a look at it and see. There had been a race down there long before, and my colleague did not support Overton. In the former campaign-and the record is here to show it-Representative Overton, who was then a private citizen, running without any organization of any kind at all, according to the record-and, as I have said, the record is here to show the facts-lacked less than 100 votes of carrying the country parishes, at a time when all organizations and all newspapers and my distinguished opponent, and all the balance of them, were against him, in 1918. But four years ago Representative Overton carried a large majority of the country parishes, and lacked but a very small vote of having led the entire ticket in the country in that election. Every one knows that it was the vote in the city of New Orleans that kept John H. Overton out of the United States Senate in 1918, long before I came to be a political factor, and at a time, I think, when I was running for my first public office.

Mr. President, to show how much better the distinguished Senator fared than candidates always have fared down in Louisiana, here is the record of the race which I made for reelection as railroad commissioner in 1924 in the north Louisiana district. The administration's candidate, Senator Walter L. Bagley, received 8,500 votes; and in that election I received 45,000 votes, a majority of 37,000 votes. My colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] ran much better in 1926 than my opponent did, and much better this time than he did the time before in the north Louisiana territory.

Mr. President, there is another thing to be noted; and I want to apologize to the Senate. I am trying to take just as little time as I can, and I want to answer just such of these things as are matters of record, and no more.

The Senator has told the Senate about campaign funds, and I hope I may have the attention of Senators on this. This is what the Senator has failed to tell. He has not told that we had to raise about $45,000 for the National Democratic Party. We did not have the Senator's help in doing that down in Louisiana. I am satisfied that he contributed directly, but he did not contribute through us, and the record will show that. I know he is a good, loyal Democrat, just as good as I am, particularly on the tariff [laughter], and I am satisfied that there is no question whatever about that, but I will say this, that in raising the campaign funds he is talking about, when he said that $77,000 was raised, he did not take into consideration the fact that $45,000 that had to go to the national ticket, had to come from somebody, which would have left but about $34,000 or $35,000. The statement is that there was spent $77,000-and there was no such thing, or one-fifth that much-but there were seven Representatives, a candidate for railroad commissioner, several judges, and a United States Senator, and if they are all added up and the $77,000 is divided among them, the entire campaign expenses for each candidate would not have been more than four or five thousand dollars.

A statement was given, Mr. President, which I put into the Record, showing that certain money had been raised, and how it had been raised, but it was no different from the way in which the Republican Party raised its funds. Right in our own jurisdiction they raised their money in the same way we raised ours. Whoever says that the employees and officers of the Republican Party were not asked to contribute to the campaign of the Republican Party is speaking without his host. The Democrats did the same thing. Who is going to contribute, the man who has no job or office or the man who has one?

The Senator sees fit to attack the witness Weiss. I have put Weiss's testimony in the Congressional Record, and I have yet to find a single man who has upheld the kind of questions that were asked of that man, or has questioned the propriety of his acts, not one single man. The testimony is in the Congressional Record. I went to the trouble to put it into the Record so that everybody could see it, and I have yet to find anyone who has questioned it, from topside to bottom, as having been anything but proper.

The Senator says that he is amazed that Members of the Senate would come to any other conclusion as to what the committee found. Go find out what the committee found, gentlemen of the Senate. Go find out what the committee thinks of that kangaroo court. Ask the members of the Senate committee. I am not talking to them about it, and I can not tell the Senate what they are going to say; but the Senator wants the Senate to find out what the whole committee thinks. Go and ask them and find out.

There was somebody down in Louisiana besides the chairman. Ask him [Mr. Carey, of Wyoming] and see what he thinks about it. I do not know what he will tell. I know what he said here the other day on the floor—that a lot of this business was irrelevant.

Mr. President, I want to repeat a little statement from the Senator [Mr. Broussard]. I took it down in handwriting, and I am satisfied it will appear in the Record exactly as I have it here. Just a moment ago the Senator said these words:

I am not claiming to have been nominated.

Mr. President, the law of Louisiana gave the Senator the right to go into court and throw out any box that was not regular. It gave him the right to have the votes counted again. It gave him the right to go in there with anything on the living earth he could prove that would show that there was fraud in any kind of a return, and have had it thrown out.

He was given every right under the law if he wanted to go before the court and contest the primary election, but he did not see fit to do so.

I have to differ with one of the statements of the Senator, but it is a matter of record and that will show who is in error. The Senator said that he did not say that he would retire from the race if certain things were not done. He may be right about that. I will take the files of the Times-Picayune and I will insert in the record in this case just what he did say, as recorded by the paper which was supporting him at the time. My recollection of it is, however, that we were faced by an immediate withdrawal of the Senator as a candidate unless we did it and we wanted to be certain that he did not withdraw. It was because of that fact that we took it upon ourselves to go to extra length to see that what the Senator, our opponent, wanted done was done so that he would not withdraw from the campaign for the United States Senate. We did not want him to withdraw for a very good reason. Why? Because we had a lot of candidates in the country and we knew that with those other candidates in the field the Overton ticket would all be elected, and we knew if he withdrew from the race it would jeopardize the race by not having a strong leader to carry on the campaign.

That is my side of it. The Senator may be right. I do not remember, but I am going to get a clipping from the paper published at the time which was supporting the Senator in the campaign, and I am willing to venture to risk whatever reputation I have that I will be sustained when I produce the clipping from the paper. I still, however, grant that the Senator's memory may be better than mine, but I am certain that it is not.

Mr. President, I believe that is about all I am going to undertake to answer at this time. I have tried to stay within bounds that I think are proper in this matter. I do not expect much publicity to be given to my answer. I only expect publicity be given to the charges. We have never been able to get the statistics in the record counteracting the charges made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. ENROLLED BILLS STONED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 88. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to investigate the conditions of the lease of the post-office garage in Boston, Mass., and to readjust the terms thereof:

S. 466. An act for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.;

S. 4327. An act for the relief of Lizzie Pittman.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the reading of the nominations will be dispensed with, and without objection the nominations will be confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

TRIBUTE TO DR. A. K. FISHER

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill was before the Senate I intended to call attention to the distinguished service of Dr. A. K. Fisher, a retired official of the Bureau of Biological Survey, but was unavoidably prevented.

Doctor Fisher entered the Department of Agriculture in 1885. He retired in September, 1930, having served continuously 46 years and 3 months. In 1906 he helped to organize the beginnings of the present Bureau of Biological Survey.

Doctor Fisher organized and directed work which in the aggregate has saved millions of dollars worth of livestock through the destruction of predatory animals, and also perfected and put into operation the methods for the control of rodents that destroyed farm produce and forage on the public ranges.

As long ago as the year 1890 he experimented with poisons as a means of destroying coyotes, and 40 years ago he directed the work which resulted in the killing of many wolves in Montana.

Although the experiments were carried on, it was not until 25 years ago that Doctor Fisher was placed in complete charge of the Biological Survey's economic work of controlling crop destroyers and animals that were bubonic-plague carriers in California and later of controlling the rodent hosts of tick carriers producing spotted fever.

In the year 1913 $43,000 was the total amount appropriated for this necessary work. Three years later a $75,000 urgent deficiency appropriation was voted. It was appropriated because of the prevalence of rabies in wolves and coyotes. One year earlier the western range country was divided into districts, and each soon was placed under the direction of an assistant who directed the work of the trappers of predatory animals. Doctor Fisher kept closely in touch with all these assistants and with virtually all of the trappers. He was sympathetic with their troubles and encouraged them by word and example in order to increase the efficiency of their labor.

It was he who first directed attention to the advantage of the salary system as against that of the bounty. It had been found in one State which offered a bounty on coyote scalps that many persons, seeing the possibility of making money, imported these scalps from distant States, paying for them about one-third the amount offered for the same scalps in the State in which they were operating.

In Michigan, where the bounty system was established, the State paid $300,000 annually with but little result, according to my information. The services of the Biological Survey were offered. Field men under Doctor Fisher brought the wolves quickly under control at the cost of little less than $40,000.

At different times Doctor Fisher met Government officers, officers of livestock associations and stock raisers, and he managed to get their cooperation to such an extent that finally the Federal appropriations were more than balanced by State and individual contributions. His assistants wiped out the foot-and-mouth disease among deer in the Stanislaus National Forest, and thereby prevented the spread of this dread cattle disease to domestic livestock.

Not long before the doctor's retirement the appropriation for his work for the year ending June 30, 1927, was $533,290. It was money well appropriated and well spent.

All of Doctor Fisher's field men had the utmost confidence in him. They felt that when they were doing right he would stand by them against any unjust criticism. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who met many of the field assistants, said that the esprit de corps of this division of the Biological Survey was the best in the department.

One of the assistants, not now in the service, recently wrote to Doctor Fisher:

I am wondering if many of the service employees realize what a wonderful bureau you have built.

About a month ago Mr. F. R. Marshall, secretary of the National Wood Carriers Association, wrote to Doctor Fisher, saying, in part:

Some statements recently have come to my attention which seemed as if they might possibly have been intended to raise the question as to the character and value of the great work you did while you were in the Biological Survey in connection with predatory-animal control. * * *. I am sure that a great deal more than the majority of those who have studied the question and are familiar with local efforts at control, and who also know the plans and scope of the system put into effect under your direction, realize that the Biological Survey plan as it was up to the time of your leaving the office was by all odds the most effective and most economical plan that could be devised for the job.

I do not feel that I can let the opportunity pass without paying a tribute to the great work of the conservation of livestock which was done under the direction of Dr. A. K. Fisher, recently retired from his position in the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I renew the unanimous-consent request submitted at 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be reported.

Mr. McNARY. Probably I should restate it. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume consideration of the calendar at Order of Business No. 1377 and proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, subject to the 5-minute rule, to the end, Order No. 1409.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Carey Clark Coolidge Ashurst Moses Harrison Austin Bailey Bankhead Hastings Hatfield Neely Norbeck Copeland Costigan Hayden Hebert Norris Barbour Nye Oddie Barkley Couzens Johnson Dale Dickinson Kendrick Black Pittman Blaine Dill Keyes Reed Borah Bratton Brookhart King La Foliette Lewis Logan Reynolds Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Fess Fletcher Frazier George Glass Broussard Russell Schuyler McGill Sheppard Shortridge Smith Bulow Glenn McKellar McNary Metcalf Caraway Hale Smoot LXXVI-316

Steiwer Stephens Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Townsend Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Walsh, Mass. Watson Wheeler White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the first bill now in order and the seven succeeding bills on the calendar are all House bridge bills in regular form and unanimously reported from the committee without amendment. I ask that they may be considered en bloc and considered to have passed through the various parliamentary stages.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What are they?

Mr. VANDENBBERG. As I have said, they are eight bridge bills.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Have they all been unanimously reported?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and they are all House bridge bills and have been reported without amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the following bills were severally read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 14460) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.:

A bill (H. R. 14480) to extend the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across the Little River at or near Morris Ferry, Ark.;

A bill (H. R. 14500) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.;

A bill (H. R. 14584) granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Allegheny County, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River between the city of Pittsburgh and the township of O'Hara and the borough of Sharpsburg, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 14586) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Culbertson, Mont.;

A bill (H. R. 14589) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 14601) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La.; and

A bill (H. R. 14602) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Alabama to construct a bridge across Elk River between Lauderdale and Limestone Counties, Ala.," approved February 16, 1928.

REGISTRATION OF TEXTILE DESIGNS

The bill (S. 5075) to provide protection by registration of designs for textiles and other materials was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, was objection made to Senate bill 5075?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. King] objected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I asked that that bill go over. I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] ought to be present when it is considered. I shall have no objection to having it come up on Monday when we have a morning hour.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is under a misapprehension as to the attitude of the Senator from Washington toward the bill. We have had a meeting of the committee during the last two or three days, and the Senator from Washington did not indicate that he was opposed to the bill.

Mr. KING. I did not mean to state that the Senator from Washington had indicated to me opposition to this bill, but I know that at the last session of Congress, when a similar measure was under consideration, there was objection interposed by the Senator from Washington as well as by other Senators.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the bill that was on the calendar at the last session was a very different bill from this one. In other words, it affected many activities aside from those covered by this bill.

The bill is satisfactory, I may say to the Senator, to all the manufacturers who may be affected by the measure, as well as by all the merchants who may be affected by it.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether this bill contains the provisions of the bill which was under consideration at a former session of Congress, under the terms of which an individual or corporation might obtain a patent or a copyright or a license or other protection for a pattern or design such as that upon the wall here, which shows a scroll with a flag set in it, and then prevent any other textile manufacturer from manufacturing cloth or textiles using the same design?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the bill provides for granting design copyrights to originators of novel designs applying to textile articles.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows, if he will pardon me, that there was great objection to a measure of that kind at the time we had the copyright bill under consideration.

Mr. HEBERT. I know there was objection at that time, but I will not admit that there was "great objection," but I may say to the Senator that there is no objection at this time, either on the part of any manufacturer or on the part of any merchant. The provisions of this bill are satisfactory to all parties who may be affected by it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, with the understanding that if, upon examination of the measure by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] or by myself either of us should desire to have it reconsidered, on Monday upon application to have the bill reconsidered and placed back upon the calendar, the Senator from Rhode Island will consent.

Mr. HEBERT. I should, of course, have no objection, to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado objects.

Mr. HEBERT. May I ask, Mr. President, if there was further objection?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado objected. The Secretary will report the next bill on the calendar.

CONTRACTS FOR SALE OF TIMBER ON INDIAN LAND

The bill (H. R. 6684) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on Indian land when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we should have an explanation of this bill. It is a rather remarkable thing to authorize the alteration of contracts after they have been made when it is in the interest of one of the parties to the contract.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Who sponsors this bill?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Oregon
[Mr. Steiwer] reported the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was suggesting—I think the Senator from Oregon did not hear me—

Mr. STEIWER. No; I did not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That it is a rather a remarkable thing to do by legislation what this bill proposes to do; that is, to authorize the alteration of a contract which has been regularly made and is for the benefit of one of the parties to the contract.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think there is some misunderstanding as to the purpose of the bill. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am referring to the title of the bill, which reads:

To authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on Indian land when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do.

I do not know how we can authorize the alteration of a contract for the benefit of one of the parties to the contract.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the Senator is quite right in that the title evidently is misleading, but the bill authorizes the modification of a contract only with the agreement of both parties to the contract.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is an entirely different proposition, of course.

Mr. STEIWER. It is, indeed, and I think there is no objection to the bill. The timbermen want it, the Indians want it, and the department supports it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some of the representatives of the Klamath Indians within the past 20 minutes have handed me a copy of the bill containing interlineations in the form of amendments, failing to accept which they are opposed to it.

May I say to the Senator that I have very grave doubts as to the wisdom of this bill? The Senator may recall that in the hearings it was demonstrated that contracts have been entered into by the Indian Bureau with timbermen under the terms of which the timbermen were given all the advantage; they were jug-handled contracts; they could be continued indefinitely by the Secretary of the Interior, and the timbermen on one reservation are now $1,500,000 in arrears in complying with the terms of the contract. I felt when the conditions came to light that the Indians had been imposed upon. The able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] denounced the contracts and stated that any white man who would accept such a contract lacks in morality, or words to that effect. I think that those contracts were unjust, and if this bill permits the Secretary of the Interior to continue them and does not compel an examination and cancellation with advantages to the Indians. then I would be very much opposed to it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to say that the changes in the contracts are to be made only with the consent of the Indians, and the amendments which were suggested by delegates from the Klamath Reservation are all included in the amendments reported by the committee to the bill. The representatives of those Indians favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. I hardly think so, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. FRAZIER. I just talked to them when I left my office a few minutes ago. I have been in consultation with them frequently in regard to this measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, then, turning to page 1, if these amendments are found in the bill that is now before us.

Strike out the word "may" and insert "is hereby authorized and directed to," and to strike out the word "tribal" in line 4. Are those amendments in the bill?

And coming to page 2, in line 11, are the words "but in no event to a point higher than was stipulated in the contract as it existed before such modification" stricken out, and is the following proviso inserted:

And provided further, That hereafter no contract of sale of Indian timber shall be entered into without the consent of the said general council.

Mr. FRAZIER. Those amendments are all embodied in the bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether, beginning on page 2, the language reading as follows has been stricken out:

And should a sufficient number of Indians apply for work they shall be employed to the extent of not less than three Indians to every non-Indian engaged. Local Indians, when applying for employment, shall be given preference over outside Indians. Wages paid to Indians shall be at the same rate as that paid to other employees and in no case less than the wages paid for corresponding labor in the territory where the operation is being carried on.

Are all those words eliminated?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. It was my good fortune to discuss this matter on several occasions with the representatives of the Klamath Indians. The language in italics is all responsive to the wishes of the Indians, as declared by their representatives. The language stricken out is useless if we read the earlier portion, and is thought to be impracticable. It says:

In all such modified contracts the purchasers of Indian timber on tribal lands or on restricted or trust allotments in all operations pertaining to the logging and manufacturing of said timber shall be required to give preference to the employment of Indian labor.

That is as far as the Indians thought it was practicable to go. There are times when there is plenty of Indian help and times when they need white employment. So when preference is given, which is the language usually employed in cases of that kind, the Indians themselves have caused this language to be stricken out, because they deem it to be impracticable.

The same thing appertains to the other amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure now whether the amendments which have been suggested by the Indians who called on me within the past half-hour are embodied in the bill. My friend from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] insists that they are there; so I shall not object to its consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "called" to strike out "tribal" and insert "general"; in line 5, after the word "purchasers" to strike out "may" and insert "is hereby authorized and directed to"; in line 6, after the words "terms of" to strike out "any"; in line 7, after the word "timber" to strike out "if in his judgment it is in the interest of the Indians to do so"; on page 2, line 7, after the word "Interior" to insert "with the consent of the said general council"; in line 8, after the word "authorized" to insert "and directed"; in line 11, after the word "contract." to strike out "but in no event to a point higher than was stipulated in the contract as it existed before such modification," and insert "And Provided further, That hereafter no contract of sale of Indian timber shall be entered into without the consent of the said general council"; and in line 25, after the word "labor," to strike out: " should a sufficient number of Indians apply for work they shall be employed to the extent of not less than three Indians to every non-Indian engaged. Local Indians, when applying for employment, shall be given preference over outside Indians. Wages paid to Indians shall be at the same rate as that paid to other employees and in no case less than the wages paid for corresponding labor in the territory where the operation is being carried on "; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians involved, expressed through a regularly called general council, and of the purchasers, is hereby authorized and directed to modify the terms of now existing and uncompleted contract of sale of Indian tribal timber: Provided, That the prices are not reduced below the basic sale prices: Provided further, That any such modifications shall be upon the express condition that said purchaser shall forthwith proceed to operate under all the terms of said contract as modified or suffer forfeiture of such contract and collection upon his bond: And provided further, That any modification of said contracts shall stipulate that in the event of sufficiently improved economic conditions the Secretary of the Interior with the consent of the said general council is authorized and directed after consultation with the purchasers and the Indians involved and after 90 days' notice to them, to increase stumpage prices of timber reduced in any such modified contract: And provided further, That hereafter no contract of sale of Indian timber shall be entered into without the consent of the said general council.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Interior may modify existing contracts between individual Indian allottees or their heirs and purchasers of their timber, under the terms and requirements of section 1 of this act, with the consent of the allottee or his heirs.

SEC. 3. In all such modified contracts the purchasers of Indian timber on tribal lands or on restricted or trust allotments in all operations pertaining to the logging and manufacturing of said timber shall be required to give preference to the employment of Indian labor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEIWER subsequently said: Mr. President, for the purpose of correcting an obvious clerical error in the bill, I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which we passed the bill (H. R. 6684) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on Indian land when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do, being Calendar No. 1387. I do this merely in order that I may suggest a change of a word from the singular to the plural.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered.

The bill is before the Senate for amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. In line 7, page 1, I find that the word "contract" is in the singular. It is agreed by all who have examined it that it ought to be in the plural. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "uncompleted," strike out the word "contract" and insert the word "contracts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 5626) to amend the act of June 23, 1926, reserving Rice Lake and contiguous lands for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of June 23, 1926 (44 Stat. 763), entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota," be, and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"All unallotted and undisposed-of lands within the area described in section 1 hereof, are hereby permanently withdrawn from sale or other disposition and are made a part of said reserve, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire by purchase any lands within said area at a price of not to exceed $5 per acre, and to acquire by condemnation proceedings, in accordance with the laws of the State of Minnesota relating to the condemnation of private property for public use, such of said lands as can not be acquired by purchase at the price named, whether in private ownership or owned by the State of Minnesota; the purchase price and costs of acquiring said lands to be paid out of the trust fund standing to the credit of all of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in the Treasury of the United States upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior."

POST OFFICE BUILDING, LAS VEGAS, NEV.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5362) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., which was read, as follows:

read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to subcontractors, labor, and material men who furnish labor and material to the Plains Construction Co., defaulted general contractor for the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., such sums as he may consider equitable and just to reimburse said subcontractors, labor, and material men for unpaid accounts left by said Plains Construction Co. at the time of its default, said sums to be paid only upon proper proof of actual losses sustained exclusive of profit; and there is hereby made available for this purpose not to exceed $20,000 from any sum which may remain from the lump-sum appropriations made for building-construction purposes, notwithstanding the amount of the claims of said subcontractors in addition to the cost of completing the building exceed the limit of cost for the construction of the Las Vegas Post Office.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this is a matter that I have already discussed on the floor of the Senate.

The contract for a Federal building in Las Vegas, Nev., was let by the department over two years ago. The contractor was from the State of Texas. Apparently his bond was adequate. He had three bondsmen. The contractor failed without having paid for much of the materials furnished for the building, and without having paid a great deal of the labor.

Afterward it was ascertained that the contractor had forged the names of the bondsmen on the bond, and there was, therefore, no bond. It is obvious that these men who furnished materials and the men who performed the labor have not been paid. For practically two years they have been kept out of the money that is due them. The mistake was made because of the negligence of the department in not looking into the question of the validity of this bond and the proper details in connection with the signing of it.

The only way in which this injustice can be corrected is by the passage of this bill. The Treasury Department has approved it; the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee of the Senate has approved it; and it is a very valid and necessary piece of legislation in order to correct the injustice that has been done to the labor and material men, to whom this money has been due for practically two years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Did the Government of the United States pay the entire contract price to the contractor who defaulted?

Mr. ODDIE. Oh, no; just a portion of the money was paid. The building is not yet completed. This is to pay for the work that was done that was not paid for. The labor felt that the Government had shown good faith in making this contract and in authorizing the performance of this work. They believed they would be paid for it. It is a question involving the good faith of the Government. The Government must keep faith with these men who relied on it, and the money due them must be paid.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE, MAXWELL, NEBR.

The bill (H. R. 10749) to authorize acceptance of proposed donation of property in Maxwell, Nebr., for Federal building purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Mr. C. J. Israel of his property in Maxwell, Nebr., for Federal building purposes; being a cross section of lots Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, block 22, original town, facing east on Pine Street and having dimensions of 26 by 96 feet, together with the 1-story bank building now located thereon; that said property shall be used and operated as are other public buildings, and that the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for use in connection with said property as for other buildings under use in connection with said property as for other buildings under said department; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to be used for the purpose of altering, repairing, and reconditioning said building to make same available for the purpose of altering. able for use as a post office.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 13521) to transfer control of building No. 2 on the customhouse reservation at Nome, Alaska, to the Secretary of the Interior, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes], who reported this bill. I have had some letters from Alaska protesting against the extravagance of the Treasury Department in erecting two public buildings there at a cost greatly in excess of what would be justified, and protesting, indeed, against the construction of one of the buildings. If this bill is in the interest of the execution of the plan of the Treasury Department against which protests have come to me, I shall object to its consideration.

Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 14321) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire a new site in Huntsville, Ala., and to construct a building thereon for the accommodation of the courts, post office, and other Government offices, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to acquire a new site in Huntsville, Ala., and to construct a building thereon for the accommodation of the courts, post office, and other Government offices, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $234,000, in lieu of the acquisition of additional land, demolition of building, and construction of a new building within said limit of cost fixed under struction of a new building within said limit of cost fixed under authority of the act approved July 21, 1932, as modified by the act approved June 30, 1932.

FEDERAL BUILDING, MANGUM, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 14489) relating to the construction of a Federal building at Mangum, Okla., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as

Be it enacted, etc., That in the construction of the Federal building at Mangum, Okla., authorized by the act of February 16, 1931 (Doc. No. 788, 71st Cong.), the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide facilities for the holding of terms of the District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma.

FORT PECK IRRIGATION PROJECT, MONTANA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4960) to reduce the area of the Fort Peck irrigation project in the State of Montana, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to redesignate such lands in the Fort Peck irrigation project in the State of Montana as can, in his opinion, be successfully irrigated with the existing equipment on such project. Such lands shall comprise, as nearly as practicable, not over 3,000 acres, 4,000 acres, 5,395 acres, and 2,412 acres, respectively, in those parts of the project known as the Big Muddy unit, Poplar River unit, the Big Porcupine unit, and the Little Porcupine unit.

SEC. 2. No obligation shall be assumed by the United States for the irrigation of any land not so designated, and no irrigation charges shall be imposed in respect of such land.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be made an investigation for the determination of the probable damages that may result to owners of land that will be eliminated from the irrigation project by reason of the provisions of this act and to make his recommendations thereon to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1933.

SEC. 4. Upon the passage of this act the Secretary of the In-

(a) Shall abandon all efforts to irrigate such lands so designated;

(b) Shall release the landowners of such lands from all charges on account of such land in connection with the Fort Peck irrigation project;

(c) May lease or sell, on such terms and conditions as he deems proper, any land, works, or equipment, or any right or interest therein, within such project, not needed for the irrigation of the designated lands, and shall cover the proceeds of any such sale or lease into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts;

(d) Shall release, subject to the conditions and limitations hereinafter provided, all owners of such designated lands from all charges in respect of such lands, on account of the construction charges in respect of such lands, on account of the construction of such project, except an amount equal to $10 per acre within the Big Muddy unit, $28 per acre for lands within the Poplar River unit, $30 per acre for lands within the Big Porcupine unit, and $20 per acre for lands within the Little Porcupine unit, and $20 per acre for lands within the Little Porcupine unit, less the amount of any payments already made on account of such charges: Provided, That before the benefits of this provision are extended to non-Indian owned lands in the designated area the owners shall enter into contracts with the Government to repay construction costs as herein fixed and the annual operation and maintenance expenses: and maintenance expenses; and

(e) Shall fix like charges, subject to like conditions and limitations, and subject to the provisions of the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564), for all such designated lands on which he may thereafter issue fee patents.

SEC. 5. The charges herein provided for against non-Indian owned lands shall be payable under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] if this bill is in pursuance of the plan of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs to readjust many of these so-called reclamation projects upon Indian reservations. As the Senator knows, more than $50,000,000 have been appropriated for reclamation projects upon Indian reservations; $36,000,000 are still further to be expended, and the Indians are not the beneficiaries, but the whites.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is a bill that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] introduced. The department recommended striking out the original language of the bill and rewriting it. The claim is that it will help the Indians. It reduces the amount of land under the project and takes out some, as I understand, that is not good land and is not worth the irrigation. The Senator from Montana seemed to think it would be a good thing for that reservation.

Mr. KING. Is not one of the objects of it to relieve the white settlers from paying the obligations due upon the land

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I do not think that is the case at all. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE EARTH INDIAN RESERVATION, MINN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5485) establishing a State game refuge on islands in the Egg Lakes in the White Earth Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the figures "16," to insert "township 141," and on page 2, line 6, after "1927," to insert "Provided, That in the event the islands hereby transferred to the State of Minnesota are no longer used for said State game refuge purposes they shall automatically revert to their former status of Indian lands," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the islands in the Egg Lakes, in sections 9, 10, 14, 15, and 16, township 141 north, range 39 west, fifth meridian, in the White Earth Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, are hereby reserved from allotment and set aside for the protection of game animals, birds, and fish, and are hereby granted to the State of Minnesota; conditioned, however, that such islands, together with all lands abutting on three of said lakes located in sections 9, 14, and 16 and the west half of section 15 shall, within two years from the passage and approval of this act, with the consent of the owner or owners of such abutting lands, be established as a State game refuge, as provided in section 5610 of Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1927: Provided, That in the event the islands hereby transferred to the State of Minnesota are event the islands hereby transferred to the State of Minnesota are no longer used for said State game refuge purposes they shall automatically revert to their former status of Indian lands.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELEGATION OF POWERS BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7432) to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to delegate certain of its powers, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of the interstate commerce act, as amended (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 17), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(6) The commission is hereby authorized by its order to assign or refer any portion of its work, business, or functions arising under this or any other act of Congress or referred to it by Congress, or either branch thereof, to an individual commissioner, or to a board composed of an employee or employees of the commission, to be designated by such order, for action thereon, and by its order at any time to amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such assignment or reference: Provided however rescind any such assignment or reference: Provided, however, That this authority shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the commission's own motion nor, without the consent of the parties thereto, to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the commission. In case of the absence or inability for any other reason to act of any such individual commissioner or employee designated to serve upon any such board, the chairman of the commission may designate another commissioner or employee, as the case may be, to serve temporarily until the commission shall otherwise order. In conformity with and subject to the order or orders of the commission in the premises, any such individual or orders of the commission in the premises, any such individual commissioner, or board acting by a majority thereof, shall have power and authority to hear and determine, order, certify, report, or otherwise act as to any of said work, business, or functions so assigned or referred to him or it for action by the commission and in respect thereof shall have all the jurisdiction and powers now or then conferred by law upon the commission and be subject to the same duties and obligations. Any order, decision, or report made or other action taken by any such individual commission. report made or other action taken by any such individual com-missioner or board in respect of any matters so assigned or remissioner or board in respect of any matters so assigned or referred shall have the same force and effect, and may be made, evidenced, and enforced in the same manner as if made or taken by the commission. Any party affected by any order, decision, or report of any such individual commissioner or board may file a petition for reconsideration or for rehearing by the commission or a division thereof and every such petition shall be passed upon by the commission or a division thereof. Any action by a division upon such a petition shall itself be subject to reconsideration by the commission, as provided in section 16a of this act (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 16a), and in paragraph (4) of this section. The commission may, as provided in paragraph (1) of this section, make and amend rules for the conduct of proceedings before such individual commissioner or board and for the rehearing of such action before a division of the commission shall be the secretary and seal of such individual commissioner or board."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], who is present, will make an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, this bill was given very careful consideration by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Quite extensive hearings were held, and it was passed unanimously. The bill came to the Senate and went to the Interstate Commerce Committee, where we had Commissioner Eastman before us.

I draw attention to paragraph (6), which, in the initial language, seems rather broad. It says:

The commission is hereby authorized by its order to assign or refer any portion of its work, business, or functions arising under this or any other act of Congress or referred to it by Congress, or either branch thereof, to an individual commissioner, or to a board composed of an employee or employees of the commission, to be designated by such order, for action thereon, and by its order at any time to amend, modify, supplement, or rescind any such assignment or reference.

Now I draw attention to the limitations:

Provided, however, That this authority shall not extend to investigations instituted upon the commission's own motion nor, without the consent of the parties thereto—

And I think that is the important part-to contested proceedings involving the taking of testimony at public hearings. All such orders shall take effect forthwith and remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the commission.

The purpose of this is to assign to employees many of the details that now occupy the time of the Interstate Commerce Commission; such, for instance, as an overcharge claim by a shipper, where a trained employee of the commission is much more familiar with the details than any individual commissioner. I could go on and recite many of the details which can be assigned if this bill is enacted into law.

There is no objection to the bill from any source that we can find, either the practitioners before the commission, the commissioners themselves, the railroads, or anyone else. In other words, the bill proposes a very great simplification of the proceedings now conducted before the com-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall not object, Mr. President.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTH CAROLINA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 346) to pay certain expenses incurred in connection with the so-called Pritchard-Bailey contested election case from North Carolina, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with amendments.

The first amendment was on page 1, line 1, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$500" and insert "$250", so as to read:

Resolved, That the sum of $250 be paid to the treasurer of the State of North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not want to interpose | an objection to the action of the committee; but I do think the figure "$250" in line 1 should be "$500." The State of North Carolina paid $500 to counsel for the treasurer, who attended three actions in three separate courts. As a matter of dignity of the State and of the Senate, I think that if we pay anything on that account we should pay the $500.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire if the resolution as the committee proposes to amend it is satisfactory to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. With the exception of the $250 proposed to be paid to the State of North Carolina; but I will accept that rather than delay the conclusion of this matter. I am not going to offer an amendment, although if some other Senator does I will support it; but the balance of the resolution is satisfactory.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from North Carolina. Being the ranking member upon the committee, I have given considerable attention to this matter.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, it seems clear to me that either the State of North Carolina ought to be reimbursed or it should not be reimbursed. I think it should be reimbursed. But I do not see any reason why we should quibble with the State of North Carolina over $250. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the committee was on line 3, to strike out "$3,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on line 4, to strike out "$8,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution, as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the sum of $500 be paid to the treasurer of the State of North Carolina; that the sum of $1,500 be paid to Hon. Josiah W. Bailey, the sitting senior Senator from North Carolina; and that $4,000 be paid to Hon. George M. Pritchard, of Asheville, N. C.; all of said sums to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and in full settlement of expenses incurred in the contested case affecting the seat of the senior Senator from North Carolina.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR MAIL AND OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 349) creating a special committee of the Senate to investigate air mail and ocean mail contracts, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment on page 3, line 6, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate, to be ap pointed by the President of the Senate, three from the majority political party and two from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to investigate and make a full, complete, political party and two from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to investigate and make a full, complete, and detailed inquiry into all existing contracts entered into by the Postmaster General for the carriage of air mail and ocean mail, both foreign and domestic, with a view to determining particularly (1) all the circumstances surrounding the execution and continuation of, and the necessity, if any, of maintaining, altering, or canceling such contracts; (2) the organization and financial condition of the associations, partnerships, or corporations with which such contracts have been entered into, including a study of their capital stock, authorized and paid in, their receipts and expenditures, their total outlay in salaries paid to officers, executives, and employees, whether by way of bonus or otherwise, and their relationship, whether by interlocking directorates or otherwise, with any other individual, association, public official, partnership, or corporation, commercial or banking; (3) the extent of any activities by or on behalf of any association, partnership, or corporation with which such contracts have been entered into, in any effort to obtain, through legislation or otherwise, cash subsidies from the United States; and (4) any other facts relating to legislation or appropriations affecting air mail and ocean mail contracts, both foreign and domestic. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpens or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I propose an amendment, on line 2, after the word "Senate," to strike out all down to and including the word "party" in line 4, and I will make just a brief explanation of the amendment.

The resolution as drafted by the Senator from Alabama, requires the President of the Senate to appoint three Members from the majority and two from the minority. We all know that within about a week the majority in the Senate will change, and for that reason I do not wish to have the Chair bound to appoint a majority from the other side of the Chamber. I think he should and will appoint a majority from this side of the Chamber, in view of the fact that those in control of the Government will change in such a short time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. REED. I was about to suggest an amendment with the same thought in mind, but to accomplish the result in a different way. I was about to propose that after the word Senate," in line 2, we insert the words "after March 4, 1933."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I would prefer, and I think the Senator from Alabama would prefer to leave the Chair at liberty to make the appointments now, so that the investigation might proceed, if the resolution is agreed to, at as early a date as possible.

Mr. REED. There would be a difference of only one week, and it seems to me that, since the investigation can not be concluded within that week, it is better that the appointments be made by the new Vice President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is true that the investigation not only could not be completed within a week, but no doubt will not be started within that time.

Mr. President, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, so far as I am authorized to accept any amendment, if the Senator from Alabama will consent, in lieu of my own amendment. I withdraw my amendment and ask consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment, on page 1, line 2, after the word "Senate" and the comma, to insert the words "after March 4, 1933."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I shall not utilize my prerogative of objecting to this resolution, although I do not think there is any necessity for its adoption.

I desire, however, if I may have the attention of the Senate, to call attention to the fact that, in a time when economy is needed and urged, and little people are having amounts of money taken away from them, we are spending thousands and thousands of dollars in investigating the air mail. It has been a favorite indoor and outdoor sport of the Congress for some time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator speaks of this investigation as a great charge on the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. No. Mr. President, I have not referred to the pending investigation, but to preceding investigations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thought the Senator was speaking of the pending resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been a favorite indoor and outdoor sport of the Congress for the past 15 or 16 years to investigate aviation. When the President appointed the Morrow board some five or six years ago, we learned that within the nine years preceding that there had been nine investigations. One House committee alone had published a small shelfful of volumes as a result of their investigation.

After the Morrow board's report, for the next few years aviation went along fairly well, and there were very few investigations. But the urge to investigate started in again a few years ago, and last year, or perhaps a little more than a year ago, we passed Senate Resolution 53, calling upon the Postmaster General to give us information regarding the air mail contracts. He and his associates spent several months in preparing a report in accordance with the resolution, the report was printed at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States in a volume of 1,256 pages, and I am informed by the Government Printing Office that it cost $8,693 just to print that report with regard to the air mail. We do not know how many thousands of dollars it cost the Post Office Department to prepare the material.

Last spring the House of Representatives decided that the air mail needed an investigation, and in March, 1932, they spent five or six thousand dollars and printed a document of 200 pages as a result of their investigation with regard to the air mail.

Not satisfied with that, they got another resolution through in June, 1932, House Resolution 226, asking all kinds of information about contracts, the prices paid, and so forth, very much in line with the resolution we are now asked to pass, and appropriated $5,000 for the investigation, employing an expert. Their report has recently been printed.

During the hearings on the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill nearly 1,000 pages of testimony was taken regarding the air mail and the ocean mail, printed at a cost of about $5,000, and now we are asked to spend $5,000 more investigating this already overinvestigated subject.

It may be that the Senate wants to do it. It may be that the air mail is in such bad condition and that the contracts are so bad that they need investigation. I do not intend to object to the passage of the resolution, but I would like to have a vote upon it, after the Senate understands that we have already spent about eighteen or twenty thousand dollars in the last year and a half in investigating the air mail; and if the Senate wants to spend another $5,000 investigating it, I have no objection, except that I shall vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MATILDA A. BARKLEY

The resolution (S. Res. 366) to pay to Matilda A. Barkley a sum equal to six months' compensation of the late Joshua W. Barkley was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1932, to Matilda A. Barkley, widow of Joshua W. Barkley, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CHANGES IN THE NAVY RATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5675) to effect needed changes in the Navy ration, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1580 and 1581, Revised Statutes, amended by the act of June 29, 1906, and the act of March 1907 (34 Stat. 570, 571, 1193; U. S. C., title 34, secs. 902, 903, 906), are hereby repealed.

underissue of the same value in some other article or articles.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to increase the above-stated allowances on those vessels and stations having an allowed complement of less than 150 men and subsisting on a ration allowance, when, in his opinion, such vessels and stations are operating under conditions which warrant such increases.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the limit of the cost of rations on destroyers, submarines, mine sweepers, tugs, aircraft, and other vessels and stations subsisted under the direction of commanding officers.

direction of commanding officers.

LOANS OF CONDEMNED PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13026) to amend section 546, title 34, U.S.C., which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 231 of the act of May 22, 1896 (29 Stat. 133, sec. 546, title 34, U. S. C.), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 546. Loan or gift of condemned or obsolete property:
The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to lend or give to soldiers' monument associations, posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, posts of the American Legion, and other recognized war-veteran associations, State museums, and incorporated museums, and maintained for educations. the Grand Army of the Republic, posts of the American Legion, and other recognized war-veteran associations, State museums, and incorporated museums operated and maintained for educational purpose only, whose charter denies them the right to operate for profit, and municipal corporations condemned or obsolete ordnance, guns, projectiles, books, manuscripts, works of art, drawings, plans, models, and other condemned or obsolete material which may not be needed in the service of the Navy Department. Such loan or gift shall be made subject to rules and regulations covering the same, and the Government shall be at no expense in connection with any such loan or gift."

BERYL M. M'HAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10070) for the relief of Beryl M. McHam, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the numerals "1920" to insert the words, "Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Beryl M. McHam, who served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Eighth Regiment, United States Infantry, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 7th day of July, 1920: Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on yesterday the Committee on Military Affairs authorized me to report three bills for the calendar. Through neglect on my part I did not report them in time to have them printed on the calendar to-day, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered immediately following the last bill on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is, Shall the amendment of House bill 10070 be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.
Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. KING. I will.
Mr. REED. This is one of the most extraordinary cases that has come before the Committee on Military Affairs for a long time.

Mr. President, a man enlisted in the Army one week before we entered the World War in 1917. He was among the first enlisted men to go abroad. He was assigned to the First Division. He was in every major offensive the American Army fought. He was very severely wounded in several places. He was put on the most perilous of duty. He served in raiding squads. I remember that at one time he and 11 other Americans went over and captured 29 Germans in a surprise raid. He was put into isolated posts, far in front, charged with throwing hand grenades into German trenches close before him. This man was given a citation for distinguished gallantry in action. He had as fine a fighting record as any soldier in the Army.

After the armistice, when he had recovered from his wounds, he volunteered to go forward in the Army of Occupation, and was assigned to the Twenty-sixth Division. That division at that time was largely made up of men who had not seen any fighting, but had been sent abroad to fill up outfits as replacements, after the armistice. Those new soldiers did not know McHam, and he did not know them.

It was supposed that he was probably a recent replacement who had not seen any service. Like a number of other mistaken young men, he did not behave himself very well in Coblentz. One night in September, 1919, he got drunk with two or three others and got into a fist fight and seems to have done some very courageous battling in that affair. He was charged with having beaten up three other American soldiers. He was arrested and tried by general courtmartial. On the advice of his counsel, an Army officer, he stood mute and made no defense. I think his counsel ought to have been dishonorably discharged for giving him such advice. The sentence was 15 months at hard labor and dishonorable discharge. He took it and was dishonorably discharged. In some way he got himself back into the Army on a new enlistment from which he deserted at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., some six months afterwards.

The committee have always firmly taken the position that we would not pardon desertion except in cases where the soldier had a good record in actual combat with the enemy. This is such an outstanding case of good service that the committee did not hesitate, but were unanimous in reporting the bill favorably. I hope it may be favorably considered.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, within five minutes a Senator on this floor has spoken to me about reporting favorably from the Committee on Naval Affairs a bill removing a dishonorable record from an enlisted naval man who was given an undesirable discharge during the war period-not a dishonorable discharge, but an undesirable discharge-and whose record offenses were shooting craps and being absent for a few days. I could not consent. I do not know when and where and how we can draw the line once we lift the ban on dishonorable discharges when they are inflicted during the period of war. The purpose of the legislation is to give World War benefits to these soldiers with dishonorable records. If we raise the ban for this man, who undoubtedly has rendered brave and conspicuous war service but nevertheless has a dishonorable discharge, I do not know where and when and how we are going to draw the line. I have insisted in the Committee on Naval Affairs, before which committee are hundreds of cases, that if a man goes through a war with an honorable record and later enlists and gets drunk and is dishonorably discharged, I will help to lift the dishonorable dicharge so that he will not be deprived of his war-service benefits, but he must come with clean hands, an honorable war-period record, in order for him to get the benefits that are given an honorably discharged war veteran. On that account I regret to say I must object. I object to dishonorably discharged veterans' being added to the pension rolls when we are advocating reducing the pensions and compensations of honorably discharged veterans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

WILLIAM MATHEW SQUIRES

The bill (H. R. 2601) for the relief of William Mathew Squires was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Mathew Squires, late of Company C. Third Regiment Texas Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 16th day of July, 1898, and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

PRICE HUFF

The bill (H. R. 11035) for the relief of Price Huff, was considered. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 9, after the word "no" to strike out:

bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That if the said Huff shall within 12 months after the enactment of this act file with the Veterans' Administration a claim for adjusted-service compensation under the provisions of the World War veterans' act of 1924, as amended, then and in that event nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent said veteran from being allowed his adjusted-service certificate, if he be found otherwise entitled thereto;

And to insert in lieu thereof "back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to propose a further amendment. On page 1, line 7, strike out the words "discharged under honorable conditions" and insert the words "honorably discharged."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "discharged under honorable conditions" and insert "honorably discharged," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Price Huff, who was a member of the Chemical Warfare Service, United States Army, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that service on the 6th day of February, 1920: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The bill (S. 5660) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain Government property in St. Louis, Mo., was considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a very bad time to sell property. May we have some explanation of the bill? Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the facts are that the bill

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the facts are that the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell what is known as the old customhouse in St. Louis. The price is to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The old customhouse is a very old building no longer suitable for the uses of the Government. A new building to house the customs service and other governmental activities is already under contract. The city of St. Louis contemplates the creation of a north and south boulevard and wishes to make arrangements at this time. The bill provides that the Government shall be permitted to occupy the old customhouse free of rent until such time as the new building shall have been completed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to sell to the city of St. Louis, Mo., the appraisers' stores site and building at Third and Olive Streets in the said city at fair market value at such time and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and to convey such property to the city of St. Louis by usual quitclaim deed: Provided, That the site and building shall remain in the custody and control of the United States and shall be occupied by the United States without payment of rent until such time as the new Federal building at St. Louis, in which the present Government activities in the appraisers' stores building are to be housed, is completed and occupied and the present appraisers' stores site and building are no longer required for any of the activities of the United States Government: And provided further, That the proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926.

ALEXANDER F. SAWHILL

The bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of Alexander F. Sawhill, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Alexander F. Sawhill, who was a member of Company C, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves; Thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 7th day of December, 1863: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ACQUISITION OF LAND, CAMP BULLIS, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 12769) to provide an additional authorization for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of Camp Bullis, Tex., was considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire whether the original appropriation was not sufficient?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it was not sufficient. It was $15,000. We tried to get the land by private negotiation and that proved to be impossible. Thereupon condemnation proceedings were started and the judgment price fixed in those proceedings was $21,300. At present we find ourselves in this situation. Interest at 6 per cent is running on the $21,000 judgment and at the same time we are paying a rental of about $100 a month for the same property. We are paying twice for the same property and we want to terminate that double liability.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in addition to the sum of $15,000 authorized by the act of January 12, 1929, to be appropriated for the acquisition by the Secretary of War in the vicinity of and for use in connection with the present military reservation at Camp Bullis, Tex., and which was appropriated in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1931, there is authorized to be appropriated for the same purpose, to meet the judgment in condemnation proceedings, an additional sum of not to exceed $6,400, together with such amount as may be necessary to pay interest.

WATER FOR FIRE-FIGHTING PURPOSES ADJACENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1001) to authorize the Chief of Engineers of the Army to enter into agreements with local governments adjacent to the District of Columbia for the use of water for purposes of fire fighting only was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Engineers of the Army is hereby authorized to formulate regulations and enter into agreements with county or other local governments in communities adjacent to the District of Columbia for the use of water from unmetered mains or conduits for emergency purposes in fire fighting only.

JERRY V. CRANE

The bill (H. R. 5367) for the relief of Jerry V. Crane was considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have the bill read. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Jerry V. Crane, who was a member of Company K, Thirty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 5th day of March, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can not believe that any soldier from Kentucky ever deserted, so I ask the Senator from Kentucky to make an explanation.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it has been so long ago that I do not say with definiteness, but the man was reported to have deserted and was reported to have died in a hospital. I do not know which is correct. However, he is 84 or 85 years old; the House passed the bill with approval, and the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has approved it.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator sure the ex-soldier is not dead?

Mr. LOGAN. No; I am not sure. He was about dead the last I heard.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STUART L. RITZ

The bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Stuart L. Ritz was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Stuart L. Ritz, late of Company L, Second Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 22d day of April, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I would like to inquire if there was in this case a dishonorable discharge and if an attempt is now being made by special act of Congress to remove such a record.

Mr. LOGAN. The record was made during the Spanish-American War. That is my recollection. I do not have the report before me.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I feel very strongly that if we are to remove the dishonorable discharge ban and change the veterans' law and allow all dishonorably discharged veterans to come in and get the benefit of veterans' laws, we ought to make it a general practice and have a general bill covering them all. If this dishonorable discharge came after the war during another enlistment, then I would be willing to join in removing it, assuming that his war record was good.

Mr. LOGAN. May I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is never a call of the Calendar that bills of this kind are not passed. The records are filled with them for years and years. The Senator from Massachusetts does not mean to say that he has just discovered that such bills are being passed? I remind him that such bills are passed on every call of the Calendar.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have never, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs for years, known of any such bill to be passed removing a dishonorable discharge which was made a matter of record during the war. I have voted for and advocated and reported bills for the removal of a dishonorable discharge inflicted after the war where the record shows the man made an honorable record during the war and wanted the benefit extended to war veterans of that honorable record. But I have refused and I now refuse to permit a dishonorable record to be wiped out when made during the war. If there is evidence that the dishonorable record was incurred after the war following an honorable record during the war, that is another question. On a record of dishonorable discharge imposed during the war, I insist that the man shall not be given the same benefits as the honorably discharged man. If we make one exception, then we should except them all. How can we justify advocating the reduction of the benefits of honorably discharged veterans and adding dishonorably discharged veterans to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I object. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over. POSTHUMOUS AWARD TO GLENN H. CURTISS, DECEASED

The bill (H. R. 11980) authorizing the President to make a posthumous award of a distinguished-flying cross to Glenn H. Curtiss, deceased, and to present the same to Lua Curtiss, mother of the said Glenn H. Curtiss, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a posthumous award of a distinguished-flying cross to Glenn H. Curtiss for distinguished service in the development of American aviation. The distinguished-flying cross shall be presented to Lua Curtiss, mother of the said Glenn H. Curtiss, deceased.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, we have now finished the call of the printed calendar and I understand that other bills are being called up concerning which reports are not available. I shall object to the consideration of further bills for the reason that it seems to me manifest that Senators ought to have the opportunity of examining the reports.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 256) authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "national banking associations" and insert "any national banking association;" on page 2, line 2, after the word "nothing" to strike out all down to and including "associations" in line 6, and insert "herein shall be construed to permit the establishment of branches of either National or State member banks or allow consolidation of either National or State member banks not allowed by existing laws," and on page 2, to strike out lines 14 and 15 and insert the following: "The powers herein conferred shall terminate six months from its approval by the President; but the President of the United States may extend its force by proclamation for an additional six months."

Mr. COUZENS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. J. Res. 223. Joint resolution establishing the United States Georgia Bicentennial Commission, and for other purposes:

S. J. Res. 256. Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws; and

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives relative to certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 13520, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which were previously laid before the Senate and read in full.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I advert again to the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill and move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 14, 15, and 16; that it further insist upon its amendments in disagreement, being amendments Nos. 1 to 16, inclusive, and ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask whether that is satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin]?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, such arrangements have been made between the managers of the former conference and those who are interested in the amendments that we have no objection to the adoption of this motion.

The motion of Mr. Oddie was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer (Mr. Fess in the chair) appointed Mr. Oddie, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Bingham, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Moses, Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Bratton, Mr. Byrnes, and Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC.—
CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine submits a conference report which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) "making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 12, 15, 17, and 18.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 16, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment, insert the following: "Convention relating to liquor traffic in Africa, $55; in all, $575,486"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by such amendment and in the matter so restored, strike out the sum "$13,195" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 11, 13, and 14.

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Maine to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I now ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the amendments shown by the conference report to be in disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments referred to by the Senator from Maine, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 25, 1933.
Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 11, and 14 to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and concur therein.
That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 13.

of the Senate No. 13.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 13.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, what is the amendment from which it is proposed the Senate shall recede?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is the item in regard to the construction of metal furniture in prisons. The House bill contained a provision that none of the appropriation should be used for this purpose. The Senate eliminated that provision. The House has refused to accept the Senate amendment, and I move that the Senate recede.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

CABINET OF PRESIDENT-ELECT ROOSEVELT

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article by Carlisle Bargeron, being a timely comment upon the Cabinet of President-elect Roosevelt, appearing in the Washington Herald of February 24, 1933.

There being no objection, the article was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, February 24, 1933]

THE LISTENING POST By Carlisle Bargeron

There will continue for some time, of course, to be disappointment over the Roosevelt Cabinet because it includes none of the "big" minds. Undoubtedly it has been the reflection of this disappointment in the stock market that has caused it to go down the past two or three days. Ah, those boys up there in what we affectionately term "the Street"—if you are really blase and understand finance, you always say "the Street"—those boys know what is good for the country. They can detect the weakness in a set-up immediately.

know what is good for the country. They can detect the weakness in a set-up immediately.

For example, they had only to scan the Roosevelt Cabinet and perceive it was without a "big" mind and realize that the thing to do was to sell, not buy. When you contemplate the minds of these boys of the Street, the acuteness of their perception, the alertness of their processes, one is left utterly awed.

They have, though, been quite unfair in their criticism of Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet. Their disappointment is easily understood. But for them to criticize is not to know what has gene on.

They overlook entirely in their criticism of the absence of "big" minds in the Cabinet the fact that none was available, that instead, all of the "big" minds are either under indictment, should be, or to say the least are in decided ill repute. Which is to say that the country has gotten an overdose of their big-mindedness.

edness.

To illustrate: My choice of a "big" mind for the Cabinet would have been Mr. Charley Mitchell, the head of the National City Bank. "For crying out loud," there is a man who has dealt in billions. Nothing cheap or small about him.

If that man isn't a "big" mind, then I don't know one. There is a man of conception, of execution, of conclusion. To add six naughts onto a deal meant not the slightest thing in the world to him.

to him.

When that fellow found he had $20,000,000 or so of worthless bonds on his hands do you think he worried and threw up the sponge with the ejaculation: "Ye gawds, I am sunk"?

He did nothing of the kind. He organized another company to hold these bonds and sold the stock in that company. That, my friends, is a "big" mind's knowledge of finance.

Now, his appointment as Secretary of the Treasury would have been inspiring. Because the next Secretary of the Treasury must refund some ten billions or so. He could have done it in some way. Maybe he would have organized a holding company for way. Maybe he would have organized a holding company for the United States.

But it is to utterly misapprehend the situation to criticize Mr. Roosevelt for not naming him. Mr. Mitchell is utterly unavailable. It would unquestionably take a steamshovel to get him away from the enclosure of those high-priced, wise-looking lawyers, who sit with him at the hearings of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. If that isn't a treat for the sore eyes, I'll eat my hat. I would give a lot to be a cartoonist, a Kirby or a Talburt, for just the nonce give a lot to be a cartoonist, a Kirby or a Talburt, for just the nonce.

Just at present Mr. Mitchell is not on the stand. Mr. Pecora, the energetic committee questioner, is plying one question after another into Mr. Baker, another head of the National City Bank. Mr. Mitchell has retired temporarily to the spectators' row. There he sits, the personification of American rugged individualism. But now with an injured air. He has told without blushing, without shame, how he paid no income taxes, not even with his wealth which runs into the millions, in 1929 or '30 or '31—I forget just which one of the years. And the way he got out of it was simply to transfer some $3,000,000 worth of securities to a member of the family for a brief period, a transaction by which, instead of showing an income to the Government, he was able to show a loss. There is no question that our incomes are drying up in this country.

And flanking the gentleman, this master of finance, this patriot, this builder, this Yankee ingenuity, is a parade of lawyers. The President is surrounded by Secret Service men. They never envelop him more than the lawyers are enveloping Mr. Mitchell. The newspapermen say to one another: "They'll have Frank Hogan in the group to-morrow. The fire is getting hot."

What a picture it makes. The beady eyes, sitting as they might sit of Sundays in the Episcopal Church, the small and egg-shaped skulls, the receding hair, and the bald heads, all sitting there with their hands folded across their laps. The "big" minds. Roosevelt should certainly have had one in his Cabinet. It is a pity that the late Senator Caraway is not here. I should like to see him now a member of the Harrison economics committee and have these birds come before him holding up their hands and adjuring: "We must have sound money."

And hear Caraway ask them: "How about sound stocks and sound sense?"

Talk about inflationists, Caraway was a deflationist—of "big" minds. I wish he were here.

Talk about inflationists, Caraway was a deflationist-of "big" minds. I wish he were here.

CORRECTION IN LAW RELATIVE TO DISCRIMINATIONS IN CERTAIN LAND GRANTS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, on February 14 last, the President approved a bill, which had been passed by the Senate and House, to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class.

The attention of the Committee on Public Lands has, by the Director of the Budget, been called to the fact that there is an error involving only a date which he would like to have corrected. The bill itself as it passed the Congress and as it has been approved by the President referred to another act, being the act of July 2, 1866, when it should refer to the act of July 27, 1866. To accomplish the correction which is sought, for the Public Lands Committee, I am reporting a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 259) to amend the act entitled "An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class," approved February 14, 1933, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class," approved February 14, 1933, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out "July 2, 1866." where it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof "July 27, 1866."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I will ask the Senator if it has been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. NYE. It is by action of the committee that the resolution is reported.

Mr. KING. And what does the joint resolution seek to accomplish?

Mr. NYE. It is merely designed to correct a date that appears in the bill which the Congress has passed and which the President has approved very recently. It proposes to change a date from the second of a month to the twentyseventh of the same month. It was merely an error in the drafting of the measure.

Mr. KING. It does not affect any right which the Government or any person has?

Mr. NYE. In no case.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by a prominent lawyer discussing certain legal aspects of the bankruptcy bill pending before the Senate as the unfinished business. I ask that the memorandum may be printed and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the Recorp and to lie on the table, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

I have before me a memorandum by Solicitor General Thacher relative to H. R. 14359, to amend the bankruptcy act. It is an exhaustive study of the bill now pending before the Congress of the United States, and I might add that it has passed the other House and is being considered by the Senate.

Digressing for a moment I want to refer to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on this question. They are not numerous. Perhaps the first was Sturgis v. Crowninshield (decided in 1819 and reported in 4 Wheaton 122). It has no particular application to the question at hand, but is part of the history of bankruptcy legislation. It held in effect, in considering a bankruptcy statute of the State of New York, that the bankruptcy or insolvency law of a State can not discharge a debtor in that State from his previously incurred liability to pay, as the Constitution forbids the State to impair the obligations of a contract. The State law, under consideration in that case, was designed not only to liberate the debtor from his contractual liability but also from imprisonment. Four years later, however, the Supreme Court in United States v. Wilson (8 Wheaton 253) held that a State law releasing the debtor from the imprisonment penalty does not impair the obligations of future contracts. In 1827 in Ogden v. Saunders (12 Wheaton 213) they held that such a State law does not impair the obligations of future contracts nor could it have extraterritorial effect if the creditor lived outside the State unless the creditor had submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the State. I merely cite these cases to call the Senate's attention to the fact that that body should not be slow now to give the relief which bankruptcy laws were designed to give.

The first fundamental law of the land, the Articles of Confed-

The first fundamental law of the land, the Articles of Confederation, did not deal with this subject. In the Constitutional Convention held in Virginia in 1787, to which was submitted the new Constitution for rejection or adoption, this and every other question was ably debated by Marshall, Madison, Randolph, and other great men of American history favoring adoption of the Constitution, while the opposition was voiced and led by Patrick Constitution, while the opposition was voiced and led by Patrick Henry, America's first patriot perhaps, and certainly her greatest orator, ably assisted by Mason, who had declined to sign the Constitution, and others. When section 8 of Article I was reached, the debate was rather desultory, or at least, very little of it was reported by David Robertson, or the other shorthand reporters who assisted him. But they did get a ringing sentence of Henry's in reply to one of the other oratorical gladiators when Henry stated in effect that the courts of equity abrogated the obligations of contracts as a common practice and that they had been doing so for hundreds of years.

been doing so for hundreds of years.

Congress was loath to adopt a bankruptcy law and failed to do so until April 4, 1800. This act was but short lived being repealed in 1803, and because of the absence of a national bankpealed in 1803, and because of the absence of a national bank-ruptcy law the States were compelled to pass remedial legislation of that kind. In August, 1841, Congress again passed a bank-ruptcy act which was repealed in less than two years. On March 3, 1867, they once more enacted similar legislation which re-mained on the statute books until 1878. On July 1, 1898, a bankruptcy law was enacted which, with amendments, is still on the statute books and which the Senate is seeking to amend

This relief should be granted because the national bankruptcy not while on the statute books suspends, in effect, the bankruptcy laws of the States with reference to the same question. Therefore Congress should exercise its undoubted right to regulate the relationship between debtor and creditor. In Kunzler v. Kohaus (5 Hill 317), in the opinion announced by Justice Cowen, it is said: "Congress shall have the power to establish uniform laws on the subject of any person's general inability to pay his debts throughout the United States." This was his interpretation of the power granted to Congress with reference to bankruptcy legislation. And in re Reiman (7 Benjamin 455) there was considered an amendment to the bankruptcy act of 1867 which provided for compositions "whether an adjudication in bankruptcy shall have been had or not," and the constitutionality of this amendment was upheld. These decisions are fully discussed in the brief of Solicitor General Thacher, which is in possession of every Senator, proving beyond peradventure the right of Congress to administer the remedy as set forth in the bill under consideration.

minister the remedy as set forth in the bill under consideration.

Now, as to the justice of it. It seems to me that this need no argument. As to the necessity for such legislation, "He who runs may read," and we all read of a desperate situation of debtors of every kind and character, and with one voice they are crying to us for relief. Opponents of this measure talk about the abrogation of contracts as though it is sancrosant, but every student of the Bible—nay, every casual reader of the Bible—knows that the greatest lawgiver of which the Old Testament preserves a record made a provision for the release of debtors every seven years. In other words all obligations were canceled every seven years. Evidently Moses paid but little attention to this invention of the debtors and it makes its appearance now in the Senate under the guise of the holy of holies, that is to say, the impairment of the obligations of contracts.

There was argument in the legal tender cases that it was the

There was argument in the legal tender cases that it was the There was argument in the legal tender cases that it was the purpose of the people to put an end to misuses and abuses of paper issued by the banking institutions of the different States which composed the confederation. This was answered by the provision of the making of "anything but gold and silver coin a tender in the payment of debts" stand in the Constitution not against the Nation but against the States. While probably the decisions finally were based on other grounds, yet these cases were argued on these issues. In other words, there can be no question but that the Congress of the United States has full authority to pass legislation not only to regulate the relationship between creditor and debtor but it has the absolute right to pass laws abrogating contracts. laws abrogating contracts.

laws abrogating contracts.

The only inhibition in section 10, Article I, with reference to the abrogation of contracts is "No State shall * * * pass * * any law impairing the obligations of contracts." And, of course, not even the most reactionary person in this country would claim that that places any restriction on the Congress of the United States with reference to contracts.

It is my judgment, although of course I would not advocate such a course, that so far as the organic law or any decision interpretative thereof the Congress of the United States, so long as there is due process—that is to say, so long as the parties are given a tribunal and reasonable time to present their case, in other words, have their day in court, can unquestionably abrogate contracts not even under the guise of bankrupty laws so far as the people of the District of Columbia and the Territories are concerned. And I am not prepared to resist the statement made by some of my colleagues in private conversation that the Congress of the United States can, provided there is due process, pass legisof the United States can, provided there is due process, pass legis lation to abrogate contracts throughout the United States. But whether they can or not, we are confronted in the various States of the Union where the people have taken the law into their own hands and are in effect abrogating contracts, with a serious situation, so that the least that can be done is for the Senate to pass legislation of this character to give relief to the debtor and compel the creditor to be reasonable and readjust a contract made unconscionable by conditions over which neither debtor nor creditor had any control.

I have used the word "unconscionable." There is no lawyer of any general experience in practice who has not had contracts as any general experience in practice who has not had contracts as sacred as any that were ever written abrogated by the court by the simple word "unconscionable." I might also suggest that contracts have been set aside and abrogated because it is said they are usurious. Is there a lawyer in the Senate of the United States who has not heard of the statute of limitations? Does it or does it not abrogate contracts? And what about the statute of frauds and perjuries? The Constitution of the United States does not place the inhibition on the States only with reference to written contracts but says "contracts." But what about the statute of frauds? It abrogates oral contracts and contracts where one person obligates to pay the debts of another. Is there any statute of frauds? It abrogates oral contracts and contracts where one person obligates to pay the debts of another. Is there any lawyer who is not familiar with that doctrine? Is there anyone who will say that that is not abrogation? I might make a solemn obligation with my neighbor to purchase his lot or house or farm, and when I call in a few days to get him to transfer it to me he can laugh in my face and tell me the contract was not in writing, and the courts will sustain him. Is this or is this not abrogation of contracts? Or, if I make a contract with a merchant or a broker which looks to the requirement of purchasing personal property, and if it should happen that it is of the value of more than $50, he could laugh me to scorn and the courts would deny me a remedy because of the statute of frauds. But will any sane person say that this is not the abrogation of a contract? Other in stances of legal fictions and devices to meet a special situation stances of legal fictions and devices to meet a special situation which human experience has found necessary might be cited, and that is what the Congress of the United States is up against now. The human experience which all debtors are up against now demand it, and it is my firm conviction that that situation should be met by the passing of this measure by the Senate.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, some question arose yesterday as to what course should be taken respecting the bill that constitutes the unfinished business. Two sections of the bill, those sections relating to compositions for individuals and for farmers, were agreed to, and an amendment was presented by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] having relationship to railroad reorganizations. I should like to have some discussion now as to the practicability of concluding the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. This session is rapidly drawing toward a close, and it is my opinion, after a somewhat careful study of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, that we ought to take action on it and incorporate it in the bill. I believe that it would be helpful and quite advantageous to do so. I know that if there is serious opposition to that course it will tend to result in the prevention of other legislation which ought to be taken up and acted

I should like to have some expression on that point. It is my thought that if the Senate is not ready to proceed with the Hastings amendment to the bankruptcy bill we might lay that measure temporarily aside and take up the bill S. 5369, by Mr. Hull and Mr. Walcott, having relationship to the postponement of the foreclosure of mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Arkansas that following the suggestion made to me yesterday by that Senator, while I was making an effort to explain this bill, I have told several Senators that, in my judgment, we would not take up these sections to-day-at least, I would not insist upon it to-day-so as to give Senators an opportunity over the week-end to examine thoroughly the railroad section and the corporate reorganization section in order that we might be able to take them up and dispose of them during the early part of the coming week.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, can the Senator supply information as to whether those Senators who expressed themselves yesterday as particularly desirous of making a study of the sections referred to will be ready to go on with them on Monday? I think we ought to avail ourselves of every opportunity to consider legislation that is recognized as of great importance.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am quite sure that the Senators who really desire seriously to consider the sections referred to will have an opportunity before Monday to consider them and ought to be willing at that time to take them up and discuss them. My thought is that, whatever is done to-day, we ought on Monday to consider the questions involved and see whether or not the Senate is going to incorporate either of those additional sections in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire, would the Senate be willing to lay aside temporarily the bankruptcy bill and proceed with the consideration for a time of the bill to which I have referred? I realize that it is late in the day but, in view of the very limited time that remains between now and the end of the session, I should like to have some action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no objection to laying aside temporarily the bankruptcy bill, with the distinct understanding that its consideration will be resumed on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

POSTPONEMENT OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5639.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire is that the socalled Hull-Walcott bill?

Mr. BORAH. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5639?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is it the purpose to take this bill up for consideration to-night?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It has already been taken up; we are considering it now.

Mr. KING. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are amendments now in

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is being read. If there be no objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with and, without objection, amendments will be considered in order unless the full reading of the bill is demanded. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 5639) providing for loans or advances by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of certain mortgages for a period of two years, and for other purposes, is as

SEC. 7. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to make the relief contemplated by this act immediately available.

SEC. 8. The Federal Farm Loan Board shall cooperate with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the fullest practicable extent in administering the provisions of this act, and shall make available to the corporation its services and facilities in order to avoid preventable expense or duplication of effort.

SEC. 9. Any person who makes any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining any loan or advance under this act, or in assisting in obtaining any such loan or advance, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 1, line 9, I move to strike out "4 per centum" and insert "3 per centum."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, before the words per centum," it is proposed to strike out the numeral "4" and insert the numeral "3," so as to read:

At a rate of interest not to exceed 3 per centum per annum.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not know whether any member of the committee desires to resist that amendment or not. Of course, everyone would like to see the rate made as low as it is possible to make it without injustice to the credit of the Government of the United States; but this rate has been pretty carefully considered, I am informed, by the Committee on Banking and Currency. It represents a substantial reduction in the rates that are now being charged.

I do not intend to resist the amendment of the Senator from Idaho if the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency think it is all right.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when we take into consideration the interest which the mortgagors will be paying upon other obligations which this bill is designed to help them carry, it will be practically impossible for them to get any relief out of this situation. I think, in view of the condition that exists, the Government can afford to make the loan at 3 per cent. I have not talked with the members of the committee, but I have talked with people who are interested in the subject, and I believe that 3 per cent will protect the Government sufficiently. It will not enable it to make any money but it will protect it, and that is all that ought to be

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the Government does not wish to make money, or at least I do not wish that the Government shall make money out of these transactions, but-

Mr. FLETCHER. It is costing the Government 31/2 per cent now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The maximum rate carried is 4 per cent, and, as stated by the Senator from Florida, the rate which the Government is now paying is 31/2 per cent. I do not feel that we ought to put in the bill a rate of interest that will make it certain that the Government will lose money by the legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, I will state to the Senators from Idaho and Arkansas that when this bill originally was introduced it carried a rate of 31/2 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was represented to the committee that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through which this money is to be loaned, is now paying 31/2 per cent for money, and the margin of one-half of 1 per cent simply allows something for administration.

Personally I should like to see the Senator's amendment adopted; but to fix a 3 per cent rate for this money will mean that there will be a loss of at least one-half of 1 per cent in the transactions.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, we had the word of the members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which will have charge of the transactions, that that was the case, and we relied upon them. I think, as a matter of fact, that that is what is happening.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know nothing about this bill. I have had no opportunity to read it. Would it be amiss to ask some Senator who is familiar with the bill to make a brief statement, setting forth the principal things which the bill provides, and what it seeks to accomplish?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me at that point?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that it is highly unfair to the Senate to ask it to proceed here with both of the authors of the bill out of the Chamber, and with most of the Senators not having the faintest suspicion that we are working on a bill of this magnitude.

This bill appropriates $500,000,000 for a totally new experiment in government. Perhaps it is wise. I do not know. I have not had time even to read the bill. I think the least we can do is to give other Senators a chance to know what is going on. Therefore, if the Senator will yield for that purpose, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion for a moment?

Mr. REED. I withhold it.

Mr. McNARY. As far as I could oppose action this afternoon, I should exercise that privilege in regard to the adoption of any amendment. I thought the Senator from Arkansas probably would take advantage of the opportunity to explain the bill to the Senate, in order that the Members might be thinking of it between now and the time when it comes up some day next week, if it comes up at all. I do not think anyone desires any action to-night on the bill, or any amendment that may be offered or pending thereto.

If the Senator from Arkansas desires to make a statement, I think we would be glad to hear him. Otherwise I think, exactly as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, that we should recess until 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no disposition to make a statement for the mere purpose of consuming time. This bill has been before the Senate for several days. It is a matter of pressing importance. I can make a statement, but—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator one question before he starts on the statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. There is an exceedingly important provision on page 7 in which Senators who are not here are interested. If it is going to be contested, I shall have to urge that the bill go over. Otherwise, I shall not. I refer to clause (3) on page 7.

MR. FLETCHER. Beginning in line 19? Mr. BORAH. Yes; in line 19. It reads:

and (3) shall have agreed that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness due the bank under the terms of a first mortgage held by the bank.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, of course that provision will be contested. In my view of the matter the provision is plainly unconstitutional, and would have the effect of putting every joint-stock land bank into receivership in the immediate or early future.

I have no disposition to crowd this measure unduly if Senators wish to take a recess. It is late, as I said in the beginning. If some other Senator does not do so, I shall move to strike that language from the bill; and I shall want to be heard on the motion if the provision is to be seriously insisted upon. If the Senator wishes the matter to go over until Monday, or until it can be taken up, I shall not object to doing that.

I had this thought:

There is an admirable statement, fully explaining the general provisions of the bill, in the report submitted by the authors of the bill. Everyone knows that the original author of the bill, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull], is preparing to leave the Senate to take the office of Secretary of State, is now engaged in preparation for his labors there, and will not return to the Senate. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott], who joined with him in the authorship and report of the bill, happens to be temporarily absent from the Chamber.

It was my thought that with conditions as they are, with riots occurring at many of the county seats where foreclosures are attempted and where tax sales are being carried out, where force is being used to prevent foreclosures,

Mr. REED. It seems to me that it is highly unfair to if we are going to do anything about it, we ought to do it the Senate to ask it to proceed here with both of the authors before the end of this session.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We ought to take action on it, and we ought not to justify ourselves in failing to act merely because not every Senator here has studied the bill.

We all realize that there are thousands and thousands of bills introduced in both Houses of Congress, and no Senator ever familiarizes himself with all of them. What actually happens is that he makes a study of the subjects in which he is especially interested and the bills that he thinks are of primary and of especial importance.

If this bill is to be disposed of in time to receive consideration by the House of Representatives, some action ought to be taken on it, and there ought not to be any great controversy growing out of this proposition.

I realize fully that if the Senate does not wish to act on the bill, any one Senator here can prevent action. I realize that I am not in a position to insist upon the passage of the measure this afternoon. I do think, however, that it is rather a simple matter.

The purpose is, as explained in the committee report, which is merely one and one-half printed pages, to provide a fund from the credit resources of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation out of which loans may be made to mortgagees holding farm mortgages for the purpose of causing a suspension of foreclosures and for the purpose of causing a reduction in the interest rates that are being charged to the mortgagors.

There are other provisions in the bill which contemplate that this suspension of foreclosures shall be for a period of two years, the thought being that in the meantime and before the expiration of the two years the Congress will have the opportunity to formulate and enact permanent legislation looking to the refinancing of farm mortgages on a basis that will enable the farm owners to save their properties or at least will enable many of them to accomplish that result.

The provision that has been referred to by the Senator from Idaho is that joint-stock land banks shall be required to accept bonds of the bank at their face value in payment of farm mortgage indebtedness due the bank. The point is that these bonds on the market are worth from 20 to 50 cents on the dollar. The contracts are payable in legal tender. To require the banks to accept 20 or 30 cents on the dollar in payment of the indebtedness due them, as anyone can see, will result in the immediate insolvency of every joint-stock land bank in the United States and the consequent foreclosure of thousands of farm mortgages.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not quite catch the thought of the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. These bonds have not matured. They are not due for quite a long period. What is it that the Senator does not catch?

Mr. COUZENS. I do not quite catch the point as to how it would put the joint-stock land banks into bankruptcy, because obviously they would not have to take the bonds until they matured.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But that is just exactly where the Senator is wrong. The requirement of the provision is that they must be accepted at their face value in payment of indebtedness due the bank.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bonds have not matured. That is one of the reasons why I say that it would be an invalid provision of law.

Mr. COUZENS. But certainly there would be no objection to surrendering them for payment when they were due, would there? In other words, that provision might need an amendment so that the bonds could not be submitted for payment until they had matured.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment was put in by the unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no, no! The Senator either is misinformed or does not understand the true

Mr. BORAH. I am reading from the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendment was put in by a majority of 1, as stated by the chairman of the committee

Mr. BORAH. I was misinformed, then.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, I can not help that Mr. BORAH. I talked with one of the authors of the bill, and I am now reading from the report. It says:

At the meeting of the full committee it was suggested as an amendment that, in addition to these two requirements, a third requirement be added as follows:

"and (3) shall have agreed that the farm-loan bonds issued by the bank will be accepted at their face value in payment of any indebtedness due the bank under the terms of a first mortgage held by the bank."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no statement there that it was a unanimous report.

Mr. BORAH. No; and there is no statement that it was a majority report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; but every report is a majority report unless it is otherwise stated. That is the way committees report; and the chairman of the committee states to me now-he is present-that the vote was by a majority of 1.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I accept his statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I undertake to say that the Congress can not require anyone to accept payment of an obligation, which by law is payable in legal tender, in securities or paper or property worth 20 to 30 cents on the dollar. It constitutes a taking of property without due process of law.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

Mr. BORAH. As I said a moment ago, if the matter is to be resisted, I will not press it to-night.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The matter is to be resisted. The Senator need not doubt that.

Mr. BORAH. Then the Senator from Idaho would like some time to present it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, regarding the statement just made by the Senator from Arkansas, this bill provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make a $100,000,000 loan to these joint-stock land banks, but it provides as a condition that before they make such loan they shall agree to permit the farmer to pay his mortgage in the bonds of the bank. There is no question of constitutionality about it. They do not get the loan unless they agree to this.

Under the law as it stands now the banks have the right to accept these bonds if they want to at any time in the payment of their mortgages, but instead of following that policy they are foreclosing the mortgages, they are selling the farm lands at a low price, and have done more in the State of Iowa to beat down land values than any other foreclosures in the State. Then they have taken advantage of the low prices and have bought the bonds at 35 or 40 cents on the dollar and balanced their books.

If the Government of the United States is now to come in and relieve them by a $100,000,000 loan, it is only fair that they should require these banks to give the farmers the benefit of those depreciated bonds, and they will not go into receiverships, either.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas vield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I understand that these bonds are selling for from 30 to 35 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think they average 40 cents for the joint-stock land banks of the country. Some of them are down to 20 cents.

Mr. LONG. If these people do not get the payments back in money, are they going to be able to continue in business?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly they would not be able to operate.
